1116. Summary trial of information against child or young person for indictable offence.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> where a person under the age of 18<sup>2</sup> appears or is brought before a magistrates' court on an information<sup>3</sup> charging him with an indictable offence<sup>4</sup>, he must, subject to specified provisions<sup>5</sup>, be tried summarily<sup>6</sup>.

1 The Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 24(1) is substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 1, 9(1), (2) as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to preceding legislation concerning offences triable on indictment or summarily see PARA 1105 ante.

2 The appropriate date at which to determine whether a defendant has attained the age of 18 is the date of his appearance before the court on the occasion when the court makes its decision as to the mode of trial: see R v Islington North Juvenile Court, ex p Daley [1983] 1 AC 347, 75 Cr App Rep 280, HL.

As to the power of a magistrates' court to remit a person under 18 for trial to a youth court see the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 29 (as amended); and MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 747. As to the power of a youth court to remit a person who attains the age of 18 for trial in a magistrates' court see PARA 1098 note 8 ante.

3 As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

6 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 24(1) (prospectively substituted: see note 1 supra).

If, on trying a person summarily in pursuance of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 24(1) (prospectively substituted) (see the text and notes 1-5 supra; and PARA 1105 ante), the court finds him guilty, it may impose a fine of an amount not exceeding £1,000 or may exercise the same powers as it could have exercised if he had been found guilty of an offence for which, but for the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 89(1) (prospectively amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 11), it could have sentenced him to imprisonment for a term not exceeding the maximum term of imprisonment for the offence on conviction on indictment or six months, whichever is the less: see the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 24(3) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 77, Sch 14 para 47; the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 17(2); and the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 64(1), (3)). In relation to a person under the age of 14, the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 24(3) (as amended) has effect as if it referred to £250 instead of £1,000: s 24(4) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 ss 17(2), 101(2), Sch 13).

1117. Child or young person to indicate intention as to plea in certain cases.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> where:

the court must, before proceeding to make any such determination (the 'relevant determination'), follow the following procedure<sup>10</sup>.

The court must cause the charge to be written down, if this has not already been done, and to be read to the defendant<sup>11</sup>. The court must then explain to the defendant in ordinary language that he may indicate whether (if the offence were to proceed to trial) he would plead guilty or not guilty, and that if he indicates that he would plead guilty:

1763 (a) the court must proceed as if the proceedings constituted from the beginning the summary trial of the information and, having been asked, he had pleaded guilty<sup>12</sup>;

The court must then ask the defendant whether (if the offence were to proceed to trial) he would plead guilty or not guilty<sup>17</sup>. If the defendant indicates that he would plead guilty, the court must proceed as if the proceedings constituted from the beginning the summary trial of the information and as if, having been asked, the defendant had pleaded guilty, and, accordingly, the court must not (and may not be required to) proceed to make the relevant determination or to proceed further under the relevant provision relating to sending for trial in relation to the offence<sup>18</sup>.

If the defendant indicates that he would plead not guilty, the court must proceed to make the relevant determination and the above provisions<sup>19</sup> cease to apply<sup>20</sup>. If the defendant in fact fails to indicate a plea he is to be taken<sup>21</sup> to indicate that he would plead not guilty<sup>22</sup>.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup>, where a person who has attained the age of 18<sup>2</sup> appears or is brought before a magistrates' court on an information<sup>3</sup> charging him with an offence triable either way<sup>4</sup>, the following provisions apply<sup>5</sup>.

Where the court is required<sup>6</sup> to proceed to the summary trial of the information, the prosecution may apply to the court for the offence to be tried on indictment instead<sup>7</sup>. Such an application must be made before the summary trial begins; and must be dealt with by the court before any other application or issue in relation to the summary trial is dealt with<sup>8</sup>. The court may grant such an application but only if it is satisfied that the sentence which a magistrates' court would have power to impose for the offence would be inadequate<sup>9</sup>. Where the court grants such an application, it must proceed in relation to the offence in accordance with the specified<sup>10</sup> provision relating to sending for trial<sup>11</sup>.

1 The Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 25(1) is amended, s 25(2) is substituted, and s 25(2A)-(2D) is added, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 1, 11(1)-(3) as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). ### 1121. Penalties on summary conviction for offences triable either way.

On summary conviction of an offence triable either way listed in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980<sup>1</sup> a person is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to a fine not exceeding the prescribed sum<sup>2</sup> or to both<sup>3</sup>, except that:

- 1774 (1) a magistrates' court does not have power to impose imprisonment for such an offence if the Crown Court would not have that power in the case of an adult convicted of it on indictment<sup>4</sup>;
- 1775 (2) on summary conviction of an offence consisting in the incitement to commit an offence triable either way<sup>5</sup>, a person is not liable to any greater penalty than he would be liable to on summary conviction of the last-mentioned offence<sup>6</sup>.

The maximum fine<sup>7</sup> which may be imposed on summary conviction for such an offence under a relevant enactment<sup>8</sup> is the prescribed sum unless the offence is one for which by virtue of another enactment<sup>9</sup> a larger fine may be imposed on summary conviction<sup>10</sup>.

1 le listed in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 17(1), Sch 1 (as amended): see PARA 1103 ante.

2 As to the prescribed sum see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 141.

3 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32. As from a day to be appointed the maximum term of imprisonment is increased to 12 months: see s 32 (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 282(1)). This increase does not apply to an offence committed before the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 282(1) comes into force: s 282(4). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

4 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(1)(a).

5 As to incitement see PARA 65 ante.

6 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(1)(b).

As from a day to be appointed where any offence triable either way other than an offence listed in s 17(1), Sch 1 (as amended) (see PARA 1103 ante) is an offence under a relevant enactment and is punishable with imprisonment on summary conviction, the maximum term of imprisonment to which a person is liable on summary conviction of it is 12 months: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 282(2), (3) (not yet in force); and note 3 supra. This increased maximum term does not apply to an offence committed before s 282(2), (3) comes into force: see s 282(4) (not yet in force). 'Relevant enactment' means any enactment contained in an Act of Parliament passed before or in the same session as the Criminal Justice Act 2003 or any subordinate legislation made before the passing of that Act: s 281(7) (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

As from a day to be appointed the Secretary of State may by order amend any relevant enactment which confers a power (however framed or worded) by subordinate legislation to make a person, as regards an offence triable either way, liable on summary conviction to a term of imprisonment: s 283(1)(b) (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. Such an order may amend the relevant enactment in question so as to increase the maximum term of imprisonment to which a person may be made liable on summary conviction of an offence under the power to 12 months: s 283(3) (not yet in force). The power conferred by s 283(1)(b) does not apply to the enactments listed in s 283(4), Sch 27: s 283(5) (not yet in force). An order under s 283(1) may make such supplementary, incidental or consequential provision as the Secretary of State considers necessary or expedient, including provision amending any relevant enactment: s 283(6) (not yet in force). An order under s 283(1) does not affect the penalty for any offence committed before the commencement of that order: s 283(7) (not yet in force). 'Subordinate legislation' has the same meaning as in the Interpretation Act 1978 (ie Orders in Council, rules, regulations, schemes, warrants, byelaws and any other instrument made or to be made under any Act: Interpretation Act 1978 s 21(1)): Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 283(8) (not yet in force). 'Relevant enactment' means any enactment contained in an Act passed before or in the same session as the Criminal Justice Act 2003: s 283(9) (not yet in force). As to the making of orders under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 see PARA 90 note 6 ante.

7 For these purposes, 'fine' includes a pecuniary penalty but does not include a pecuniary forfeiture or pecuniary compensation: Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(9).

8 For these purposes, 'relevant enactment' means an enactment contained in the Criminal Law Act 1977 or in any Act passed before, or in the same session as, that Act: Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(9).

9 Ie an enactment other than ibid s 32(2): see the text and note 10 infra.

10 Ibid s 32(2). Where, by virtue of a relevant enactment, a person summarily convicted of an offence triable either way would, apart from s 32(2), be liable to a maximum fine of one amount in the case of a first conviction and of a different amount in the case of a second or subsequent conviction, s 32(2) applies irrespective of whether the conviction is a first, second or subsequent one: s 32(3). Section 32(2) does not affect so much of any enactment as (in whatever words) makes a person liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding a specified amount for each day on which a continuing offence is continued after conviction or the occurrence of any other specified event: s 32(4).

Section 32(2) does not apply on summary conviction of any of the following offences: (1) offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 s 5(2) (see PARA 770 ante), where the controlled drug in relation to which the offence was committed was a Class B or Class C drug; (2) offences under s 4(2), (3), s 5(3), s 8 (as amended), s 12(6), s 13(3), where the controlled drug in relation to which the offence was committed was a Class C drug: Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(5). For these purposes, 'controlled drug', 'Class B drug' and 'Class C drug' have the same meanings as in the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 (see MEDICINAL PRODUCTS AND DRUGS vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 238): Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 32(8). Where, as regards any offence triable either way, there is under any enactment (however framed or worded) a power by subordinate legislation to restrict the amount of the fine which on summary conviction can be imposed in respect of that offence: (a) s 32(2) does not affect that power or override any restriction imposed in the exercise of that power; and (b) the amount to which that fine may be restricted in the exercise of that power is any amount less than the maximum fine which could be imposed on summary conviction in respect of the offence apart from any restriction so imposed: s 32(6).

(v) Committal for Sentence

1123. Committal for sentence on indication of guilty plea to serious offence triable either way.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> the following provisions apply where:

- 1776 (1) a person aged 18<sup>2</sup> or over appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') on an information<sup>3</sup> charging him with an offence triable either way ('the offence')<sup>4</sup>;
- 1777 (2) he or his representative indicates<sup>5</sup> that he would plead guilty if the offence were to proceed to trial<sup>6</sup>; and
- 1778 (3) proceeding as if, having been asked, he pleaded guilty under it, the court convicts him of the offence<sup>7</sup>.

If the court is of the opinion that: (a) the offence<sup>8</sup>; or (b) the combination of the offence and one or more offences associated with it<sup>9</sup>, was so serious<sup>10</sup> that the Crown Court should, in the court's opinion, have the power to deal with the offender in any way it could deal with him if he had been convicted on indictment, the court may commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>11</sup>.

These provisions apply in relation to a corporation as if: (i) the corporation were an individual aged 18 or over; and (ii) the words<sup>12</sup> 'in custody or on bail' were omitted<sup>13</sup>.

1 The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3 is substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 22 as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to preceding legislation concerning committal for sentencing see PARA 1105 ante. Certain provisions relating to the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3 (prospectively substituted) were brought into force on 25 August 2000 under s 168(1): see s 9 (as amended), s 161(1), s 164(1); and notes 2, 9 infra.

2 For the purposes of any provision of the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 which requires the determination of the age of a person by the court or the Secretary of State, his age is deemed to be that which it appears to the court or (as the case may be) the Secretary of State to be after considering any available evidence: s 164(1). See note 1 supra.

Where a person who appears or is brought before a youth court charged with an offence subsequently attains the age of 18, the youth court may, at any time after conviction and before sentence, remit him for sentence to a magistrates' court other than a youth court: s 9(1) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 63). See note 1 supra. Where the offender is so remitted the youth court must adjourn proceedings and all enactments relating to remand or the granting of bail in criminal proceedings (including the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1145 post)) have effect in relation to the youth court's power or duty to remand the offender on that adjournment as if any reference to the court to or before which the person remanded is to be brought or appear after remand were a reference to the court to which he is being remitted: Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 9(2)(a). The court to which the offender is so remitted (the 'other court') may deal with the case in any way in which it would have power to deal with it if all proceedings relating to the offence which took place before the youth court had taken place before the other court: s 9(2)(b). An offender so remitted has no right of appeal against the remission order, but without prejudice to any right of appeal against an order made in respect of the offence by the court to which he is remitted: s 9(4). Where an offender is so remitted, s 8(6) (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1259) does not apply to the court to which he is remitted: s 9(3). 'Enactment' includes any enactment contained in any order, regulation or other instrument having effect by virtue of an Act: s 9(5). For the meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings' see the Bail Act 1976; and PARA 1166 post (definition applied by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 9(5)).

3 As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

4 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3(1)(a) (prospectively substituted: see note 1 supra). For the meaning of 'offence triable either way' see PARA 1102 note 4 ante.

5 le under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 17A (as added and amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1107 ante) or s 17B (as added) (see PARA 1108 ante), but not under s 20(7) (prospectively substituted) (see PARA 1112 ante).

6 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3(1)(b) (prospectively substituted: see note 1 supra).

7 Ibid s 3(1)(c) (prospectively substituted: see note 1 supra). See PARA 1105 note 16 ante.

8 In the context of this provision, 'offence' cannot be construed to include the plural, contrary to the normal rule in the Interpretation Act 1978 s 6.

9 For these purposes, an offence is associated with another if: (1) the offender is convicted of it in the proceedings in which he is convicted of the other offence, or (although convicted of it in earlier proceedings) is sentenced for it at the same time as he is sentenced for that offence (Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 161(1)(a)); or (2) the offender admits the commission of it in the proceedings in which he is sentenced for the other offence and requests the court to take it into consideration in sentencing him for that offence (s 161(1)(b)). See note 1 supra.

10 See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 143; and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 618.

11 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3(2) (prospectively substituted: see note 1 supra). For guidance see R v Warley Magistrates' Court, ex p DPP [1998] 2 Cr App Rep 307, 162 JP 559, DC. The decision in allocation of trial proceedings and the decision on committal for sentence are different decisions, and the former decision does not restrict the latter; the power of a magistrates' court to commit for sentence is not limited to cases where the magistrates' court only learnt that the offence is more serious than previously thought after the allocation of trial decision: R v North Sefton Magistrates' Court, ex p Marsh (1994) 16 Cr App Rep (S) 401, DC. A magistrates' court may commit for sentence where it considers a financial penalty appropriate and it considers that the limits on the level of such a penalty which it can impose are too low to deal with the offence: R v North Essex Justices, ex p Lloyd [2001] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 86, DC. A court dealing with an offender for breach of a community order may not commit him to the Crown Court for sentence for the offence in respect of which the order was made: R v Jordan [1998] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 83, DC. 'Commit . . . for sentence' refers to committal for sentence in accordance with the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 5(1) (prospectively substituted) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 17): s 3(2) (as so prospectively substituted). Where the court commits a person under s 3(2) (prospectively substituted), then s 6 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1129 post) (which enables a magistrates' court, where it commits a person under s 3 (prospectively substituted) in respect of an offence, also to commit him to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of certain other offences) applies accordingly: s 3(3) (as so prospectively substituted). Section 3 (prospectively substituted) does not apply in relation to an offence as regards which it is excluded by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 17D (prospectively added) (see PARA 1107 ante): Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3(4) (as so prospectively substituted).

A person committed for sentence must be committed to the most convenient location of the Crown Court: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at Ill.21, CA. As to warrants of commitment see PARA 1162 post.

Where a magistrates' court commits an offender under the Vagrancy Act 1824 (see PARA 833 ante), the Bail Act 1976 s 6 (as amended) (see PARA 1199 post), the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3 (prospectively substituted) or s 6 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1129 post), the magistrates' court officer must send to the Crown Court officer: (1) a copy signed by the magistrates' court officer of the minute or memorandum of the conviction entered in the register; (2) a copy of any note of the evidence given at the trial of the offender, any written statement tendered in evidence and any deposition; (3) such documents and articles produced in evidence before the court as have been retained by the court; (4) any report relating to the offender considered by the court; (5) if the offender is committed on bail, a copy of the record made in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976 s 5 (as amended, prospectively amended) (see PARA 1173 post) relating to such bail and also any recognisance entered into by any person as his surety; (6) if the court imposes under the Road

Traffic Offenders Act 1988 s 26 (as substituted and amended) (see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARA 1046) an interim disqualification for holding or obtaining a licence under the Road Traffic Act 1988 Pt III (ss 87-109C) (as amended) (see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(1) (2007 Reissue) PARA 444 et seq), a statement of the date of birth and sex of the offender; (7) if the court makes an order under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 148 (as amended) (restitution orders: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 388-389), a copy signed by the clerk of the convicting court of the minute or memorandum of the order entered in the register; and (8) any documents relating to an appeal by the prosecution against the granting of bail: CrimPR 43.1(1).

Where a magistrates' court commits an offender to the Crown Court under the Vagrancy Act 1824 or the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3 (prospectively substituted) or s 6 (as amended, prospectively amended), and the magistrates' court on that occasion imposes, under the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 s 26 (as substituted and amended), an interim disqualification for holding or obtaining a licence, the magistrates' court officer must give notice of the interim disqualification to the Crown Court officer: CrimPR 43.1(2).

Where a magistrates' court commits a person on bail to the Crown Court under any of the enactments mentioned in CrimPR 43.1(2) or under the Bail Act 1976 s 6 (as amended) (see PARA 1199 post), the magistrates' court officer must give notice thereof in writing to the governor of the prison to which persons of the sex of the person committed are committed by that court if committed in custody for trial and also, if the person committed is under the age of 21, to the governor of the remand centre to which he would have been committed if the court had refused him bail: CrimPR 43.1(3).

On a committal for sentence any reasons given by the magistrates for their decision should be included with the notes sent to the Crown Court: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at V.52.1, CA.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> the following provisions apply where on the summary trial of a specified offence<sup>2</sup> triable either way<sup>3</sup> a person aged 18 or over<sup>4</sup> is convicted of the offence<sup>5</sup>.

If, in relation to the offence, it appears to the court that the criteria for the imposition of a sentence<sup>6</sup> of imprisonment for public protection for a serious offence or an extended sentence for a specified violent offence or specified sexual offence would be met, the court must commit the offender in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>7</sup>. In reaching any decision under or taking any step contemplated by these provisions<sup>8</sup>:

1779 (1) the court is not bound by any indication<sup>9</sup> of sentence given in respect of the offence<sup>10</sup>; and

1780 (2) nothing the court does under them may be challenged or be the subject of any appeal in any court on the ground that it is not consistent with an indication of sentence<sup>11</sup>.

1 The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3A is added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 23 as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to preceding legislation concerning committal for sentencing see PARA 1105 ante.

2 For these purposes, references to a specified offence are references to a specified offence within the meaning of ibid s 224 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 68, 70-71): Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3A(6) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

1125. Committal for sentence on indication of guilty plea by child or young person.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> the following provisions apply where:

- 1781 (1) a person aged under 18<sup>2</sup> appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') on an information<sup>3</sup> charging him with an offence mentioned in specified provisions<sup>4</sup> relating to the detention for a specified period of offenders under 18 ('the offence')<sup>5</sup>;
- 1782 (2) he or his representative indicates<sup>7</sup> that he would plead guilty if the offence were to proceed to trial<sup>7</sup>; and
- 1783 (3) proceeding as if, having been asked, he pleaded guilty, the court convicts him of the offence<sup>8</sup>.

If the court is of the opinion that: (a) the offence<sup>9</sup>; or (b) the combination of the offence and one or more offences associated with it<sup>10</sup>, was such that the Crown Court should, in the court's opinion, have power to deal with the offender as if specified<sup>11</sup> provisions relating to the detention of offenders under 18 applied, the court may commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>12</sup>.

1126. Committal for sentence of dangerous young offenders.

The following provisions apply where on the summary trial of a specified offence<sup>1</sup> a person aged under 18<sup>2</sup> is convicted of the offence<sup>3</sup>. If, in relation to the offence, it appears to the court that the criteria for the imposition of a sentence<sup>4</sup> of detention for public protection for a serious offence or an extended sentence for a specified violent offence or specified sexual offence would be met, the court must commit the offender in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>5</sup>.

1 For these purposes, references to a specified offence are references to a specified offence within the meaning of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 224 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 68, 70-71); Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3C(5) (s 3C added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 23).

2 See PARA 1123 note 1 ante.

3 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3C(1) (as added: see note 1 supra). See PARA 1105 note 16 ante.

4 If under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 226(3) or s 228(2): see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 83-84.

5 See the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3C(2) (as added: see note 1 supra). 'Commit . . . for sentence' refers to committal for sentence in accordance with s 5A(1) (as added) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 17): see s 3C(2) (as so added). Where the court commits a person under s 3C(2) (as added), then s 6 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1129 post) (which enables a magistrates' court, where it commits a person under s 3C (as added) in respect of an offence, also to commit him to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of certain other offences) applies accordingly: s 3C(3) (as so added). Nothing in s 3C (as added) prevents the court from committing a specified offence to the Crown Court for sentence under s 3B (prospectively added) (see PARA 1125 ante) if its provisions are satisfied: s 3C(4) (as so added).

A person committed for sentence must be committed to the most convenient location of the Crown Court: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at Ill.21, CA. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(4) PROCEDURE FOR OFFENCES TRIABLE EITHER WAY/(v) Committal for Sentence/1127. Committal for sentence on indication of guilty plea to offence triable either way.

1127. Committal for sentence on indication of guilty plea to offence triable either way.

The following provisions apply where:

- 1784 (1) a person aged 18<sup>1</sup> or over appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') on an information<sup>2</sup> charging him with an offence triable either way ('the offence')<sup>3</sup>;
- 1785 (2) he or (where applicable) his representative indicates that he would plead guilty if the offence were to proceed to trial<sup>4</sup>; and
- 1786 (3) proceeding as if, having been asked, he pleaded guilty, the court convicts him of the offence<sup>5</sup>.

If the court has committed the offender to the Crown Court for trial for one or more related offences<sup>6</sup>, that is to say, one or more offences which, in its opinion, are related to the offence, it may commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of the offence<sup>7</sup>.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>8</sup> if such power is not exercisable but the court is still to determine to, or to determine whether to, send the offender to the Crown Court for trial<sup>9</sup> for one or more related offences: (a) it must adjourn the proceedings relating to the offence until after it has made those determinations; and (b) if it sends the offender to the Crown Court for trial for one or more related offences, it may then exercise that power<sup>10</sup>. In reaching any decision under, or taking any step contemplated by, these provisions: (i) the court is not bound by any indication of sentence given<sup>11</sup> in respect of the offence; and (ii) nothing the court does under them may be challenged or be the subject of any appeal in any court on the ground that it is not consistent with an indication of sentence<sup>12</sup>.

1 See PARA 1123 note 1 ante.

2 As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

3 See the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4(1)(a).

4 See ibid s 4(1)(b). As from a day to be appointed such indication is made under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 17A (as added and amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1107 ante), s 17B (as added) (see PARA 1108 ante) or s 20(7) (prospectively substituted) (see PARA 1112 ante): Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4(1)(b) (prospectively substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 24(1), (2)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1105 ante.

5 See the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4(1)(c). As from a day to be appointed s 4 (prospectively amended) does not apply to an offence as regards which s 4 (prospectively amended) is excluded by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1988 s 17D (prospectively added) (see PARA 1107 ante): Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4(1A) (prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 21, 24(1), (4)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1105 ante.

6 For the purposes of the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4 (prospectively amended), one offence is related to another if, were they both to be prosecuted on indictment, the charges for them could be joined in the same indictment: s 4(7).

7 See ibid s 4(2). 'Commit . . . to be dealt with in respect of the offence' refers to committal to be dealt with in respect of the offence in accordance with s 5(1) (prospectively substituted) (see PARA 1105 ante; SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 17): see s 4(2). Where the court: (1) under s 4(2) commits the offender to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of the offence; and (2) does not state that, in its opinion, it also has power so to commit him under s 3(2) (prospectively substituted) (see PARAS 1105, 1123 ante) (or, as from a day to be appointed, s 3A(2) (prospectively added) (see PARA 1124 ante)), then s 5(1) (prospectively substituted) does not apply unless he is convicted before the Crown Court of one or more of the related offences: s 4(4) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 21, 24(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. Where the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 5(1) (prospectively substituted) does not apply, the Crown Court may deal with the offender in respect of the offence in any way in which the magistrates' court could deal with him if it had just convicted him of the offence: s 4(5). Where the court commits a person under s 4(2), then s 6 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1129 post) (which enables a magistrates' court, where it commits a person under s 4 (prospectively amended) in respect of an offence, also to commit him to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of certain other offences) applies accordingly: s 4(6).

A person committed for sentence must be committed to the most convenient location of the Crown Court: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.21, CA. 8 The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4(3) is substituted, and s 4(8) is added, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 21, 24(1), (5), (7) as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). 1128. Committal for sentence on indication of guilty plea by child or young person with related offences.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> the following provisions apply where:

- 1787 (1) a person aged under 18<sup>2</sup> appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') on an information<sup>3</sup> charging him with an offence mentioned in specified provisions<sup>4</sup> relating to the detention for a specified period of offenders under 18 ('the offence')<sup>5</sup>;
- 1788 (2) he or his representative indicates<sup>6</sup> that he would plead guilty if the offence were to proceed to trial<sup>7</sup>; and
- 1789 (3) proceeding as if, having been asked, he pleaded guilty, the court convicts him of the offence<sup>8</sup>.

If the court has sent the offender to the Crown Court for trial for one or more related offences<sup>9</sup>, that is to say one or more offences which, in its opinion, are related to the offence, it may commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court to be dealt with<sup>10</sup> in respect of the offence<sup>11</sup>.

If such power is not exercisable but the court is still to determine to, or determine whether to, send the offender to the Crown Court for trial<sup>12</sup> for one or more related offences:

- 1790 (a) it must adjourn the proceedings relating to the offence until after it has made those determinations<sup>13</sup>; and
- 1791 (b) if it sends the offender to the Crown Court for trial for one or more related offences, it may then exercise that power<sup>14</sup>.

1 The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 4A is added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 25 as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(4) PROCEDURE FOR OFFENCES TRIABLE EITHER WAY/(v) Committal for Sentence/1129. Committal for sentence in certain cases where offender committed in respect of another offence.

1129. Committal for sentence in certain cases where offender committed in respect of another offence.

The following provisions apply where a magistrates' court ('the committing court') commits a person in custody or on bail to the Crown Court under any specified enactment<sup>1</sup> to be sentenced or otherwise dealt with in respect of an offence ('the relevant offence')<sup>2</sup>.

Where these provisions apply and the relevant offence is an indictable offence<sup>3</sup>, the committing court may also commit the offender, in custody or on bail as the case may require, to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of any other offence whatsoever in respect of which the committing court has power to deal with him (being an offence of which he has been convicted by that or any other court)<sup>4</sup>.

Where these provisions apply and the relevant offence is a summary offence<sup>5</sup>, the committing court may commit the offender, in custody or on bail as the case may require, to the Crown Court to be dealt with in respect of:

- 1792 (1) any other offence of which the committing court has convicted him, being either:
  - 75 117. (a) an offence punishable with imprisonment<sup>6</sup>; or
  - 118. (b) an offence in respect of which the committing court has a power or duty to order him to be disqualified under specified<sup>7</sup> road traffic legislation<sup>8</sup>; or
- 76 1793 (2) any suspended sentence in respect of which the committing court has power<sup>9</sup> to deal with him<sup>10</sup>.

1. I.e. any enactment mentioned in the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 6(4) (as amended), that is: (1) the Vagrancy Act 1824 (incorrigible rogues) (prospectively repealed); (2) the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 ss 3, 4 (committal for sentence for offences triable either way: see PARA 1105 ante); (3) s 13(5) (as amended) (conditionally discharged person convicted of further offence); (4) the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 12 para 11(2) (committal to Crown Court where offender convicted during operational period of suspended sentence: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS VOL 92 (2010) PARA 128); Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 6(4) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 32 paras 90, 91(1), (3), Sch 37 Pt 7). As from a day to be appointed head (1) supra is repealed: see the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 6(4) (as so amended; prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 37 Pt 9). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. Head (2) supra is amended in relation to cases committed under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 3C (as added) (see PARA 1126 ante) so that the relevant provisions are ss 3-4A (s 3 prospectively substituted; ss 3A, 3B prospectively added; s 3C as added; s 4 prospectively amended; s 4A prospectively added) (see PARAS 1123-1128 ante): see s 6(4)(b) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 21, 28; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 8 and Transitional and Savings Provisions) Order 2005, SI 02005/950, art 2, Sch 1 para 29(c)). This amendment to head (2) supra has effect for remaining purposes as from a day to be appointed: see the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 6(4)(b) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 Pt 1 paras 21, 28). ### 1130. Power of justices to remit to another court for sentence.

Where a person who has attained the age of 18<sup>1</sup> ('the offender') has been convicted<sup>2</sup> by a magistrates' court ('the convicting court') of a specified offence<sup>3</sup> ('the instant offence') and:

- 1794 (1) it appears to the convicting court that some other magistrates' court ('the other court') has convicted him of another such offence in respect of which the other court has neither passed sentence on him nor committed him to the Crown Court for sentence nor dealt with him in any other way<sup>4</sup>; and 1795 (2) the other court consents to his being so remitted to the other court<sup>5</sup>, the convicting court may remit him to the other court to be dealt with in respect of the instant offence by the other court instead of by the convicting court<sup>6</sup>.

The offender, if so remitted, has no right of appeal against the order of remission<sup>7</sup>.

Where the convicting court so remits the offender to the other court, it must adjourn the trial of the information<sup>8</sup> charging him with the instant offence<sup>9</sup>.

Where the convicting court has remitted the offender to the other court, the other court may remit him back to the convicting court<sup>10</sup>.

1 See PARA 1123 note 2 ante.

2 For these purposes, 'conviction' includes a finding under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11(1) (remand for medical examination: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 723) that the person in question did the act or made the omission charged; and 'convicted' is to be construed accordingly: s 10(8)(a).

3 Ibid s 10 applies to: (1) any offence punishable with imprisonment; and (2) any offence in respect of which the convicting court has a power or duty to order the offender to be disqualified under the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 ss 34, 35 (as amended) or s 36 (as substituted and amended) (see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARAS 1058, 1060, 1070-1071); Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 10(2).

5 Ibid s 10(1)(b).

6 Ibid s 10(1). Nothing in s 10 precludes the convicting court from making any order which it has power to make under s 148 (prospectively amended) (restitution orders: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 388-389) by virtue of the offender's conviction of the instant offence: s 10(7). As to the documents etc to be sent by the court officer for the convicting court to the court officer for the other court see CrimPR 42.1(1).

7 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 10(6).

8 As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

9 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 10(3). In such a case: (1) the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1144 post) and all other enactments, whenever passed, relating to remand or the granting of bail in criminal proceedings have effect, in relation to the convicting court's power or duty to remand the offender on that adjournment, as if any reference to the court to or before which the person remanded is to be brought or appear after remand were a reference to the court to which he is being remitted; and (2) subject to the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 10(7) (see note 6 supra), the other court may deal with the case in any way in which it would have power to deal with it, including, where applicable, the remission of the offender under s 10 to another magistrates' court in respect of the instant offence, if all proceedings relating to that offence which took place before the convicting court had taken place before the other court: s 10(3), (4). For the purposes of s 10, 'enactment' includes an enactment contained in any order, regulation or other instrument having effect by virtue of an Act; and 'bail in criminal proceedings' has the same meaning as in the Bail Act 1976 (see PARA 1166 post); Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 10(8)(b), (c).

(5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL

1131. Introduction.

Until a day to be appointed the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 provides that where an adult ('A') appears or is brought before a magistrates' court charged with an offence triable only on indictment no committal proceedings are to be held. Instead the court must send him forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for that offence and any either way or summary offence fulfilling specified conditions<sup>1</sup>. There are also provisions concerning: (1) the sending for trial of an either way offence related to the indictable only offence; and (2) the sending for trial of a person under 18 charged jointly with A with an indictable offence<sup>2</sup>.

1 See the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51. The Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 amends the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 and introduces new provisions relating to procedure and functions of the court including the procedure for sending cases to the Crown Court for trial. As to those provisions see PARAS 1106 ante, 1132 et seq post.

As to sending a person charged with such an offence to the Crown Court for trial see PARA 1132 et seq post.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1132. Sending cases to the Crown Court: adults.

1132. Sending cases to the Crown Court: adults.

There are seven provisions relating to sending cases involving adults to the Crown Court for trial<sup>1</sup>.

The first provision is that, where an adult<sup>2</sup> appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') charged with an offence and any of the following conditions<sup>3</sup> is satisfied, the court must send him forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the offence<sup>4</sup>. Those conditions are:

- 1796 (1) that the offence is an offence triable only on indictment other than one in respect of which notice has been given<sup>5</sup> in serious or complex fraud cases or in certain cases involving children<sup>6</sup>;
- 1797 (2) that the offence is an either-way offence<sup>7</sup> and the court is required<sup>8</sup> to proceed in relation to the offence by sending the defendant forthwith to the Crown Court for trial<sup>9</sup>;
- 1798 (3) that notice<sup>10</sup> is given to the court in serious or complex fraud cases or in certain cases involving children in respect of the offence<sup>11</sup>.

The second provision is that, where the court sends an adult for trial under the first provision<sup>12</sup>, it must at the same time send him to the Crown Court for trial for any either-way or summary offence<sup>13</sup> with which he is charged and which:

- 1799 (a) (if it is an either-way offence) appears to the court to be related to<sup>14</sup> the offence mentioned in the first provision<sup>15</sup>; or
- 1800 (b) (if it is a summary offence) appears to the court to be related to<sup>16</sup> the offence in the first provision or to the either-way offence, and fulfils the requisite condition<sup>17</sup>.

The third provision is that, where an adult who has been sent for trial under the first provision<sup>18</sup> subsequently appears or is brought before a magistrates' court charged with an either-way or summary offence<sup>19</sup> which appears to the court to be related to the offence mentioned in the first provision<sup>20</sup>, and (in the case of a summary offence) fulfils the requisite condition<sup>21</sup>, the court may send him forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the either-way or summary offence<sup>22</sup>.

The fourth provision is that, where:

- 1801 (i) the court sends an adult ('A') for trial under the first or second provision<sup>23</sup>;
- 1802 (ii) another adult appears or is brought before the court on the same or a subsequent occasion charged jointly with A with an either-way offence<sup>24</sup>; and
- 1803 (iii) that offence appears to the court to be related to an offence for which A was sent for trial under the first or second provision<sup>25</sup>, the court must where it is the same occasion, and may where it is a subsequent occasion, send the other adult forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the either-way offence<sup>26</sup>.

The fifth provision is that, where the court sends an adult for trial under the fourth provision<sup>27</sup>, it must at the same time send him to the Crown Court for trial for any either-way or summary offence<sup>28</sup> with which he is charged and which:

- 1804 (A) (if it is an either-way offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he is sent for trial<sup>29</sup>; and
- 1805 (B) (if it is a summary offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he is sent for trial or to the either-way offence, and fulfils the requisite condition<sup>30</sup>.

The sixth provision is that, where the court sends an adult ('A') for trial under the first, second or fourth provision<sup>31</sup>, and a child or young person<sup>32</sup> appears or is brought before the court on the same or a subsequent occasion charged jointly with A with an indictable offence<sup>33</sup> for which A is sent for trial under the first, second or fourth provision, or an indictable offence which appears to the court to be related to that offence<sup>34</sup>, the court must, if it considers it necessary in the interests of justice to do so, send the child or young person forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the indictable offence<sup>35</sup>.

The seventh provision is that, where the court sends a child or young person for trial under the sixth provision<sup>36</sup>, it may at the same time send him to the Crown Court for trial for any indictable or summary offence<sup>37</sup> with which he is charged and which:

- 1806 (aa) (if it is an indictable offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he is sent for trial; and
- 1807 (bb) (if it is a summary offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he is sent for trial or to the indictable offence, and fulfils the requisite condition<sup>38</sup>.

The functions of a magistrates' court under the above provisions<sup>39</sup> may be discharged by a single justice<sup>40</sup>.

A magistrates' court may adjourn any proceedings under the above provisions, and if it does so may remand<sup>41</sup> the defendant<sup>42</sup>.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1133. Sending cases to the Crown Court: children and young persons.

1133. Sending cases to the Crown Court: children and young persons.

There are five provisions relating to sending cases involving children or young persons<sup>1</sup> to the Crown Court for trial<sup>2</sup>. These provisions are subject to those<sup>3</sup> providing for certain offences involving children or young persons to be tried summarily<sup>4</sup>.

The first provision is that, where a child or young person appears or is brought before a magistrates' court ('the court') charged with an offence and any of the following conditions<sup>5</sup> is satisfied, the court must send him forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the offence<sup>6</sup>. Those conditions are:

- 1808 (1) that the offence is an offence of homicide or a specified type of firearms offence<sup>7</sup>;
- 1809 (2) that the offence is such as is mentioned in specified<sup>8</sup> provisions<sup>9</sup> relating to the detention for a specified period of an offender under 18 and the court considers that if he is found guilty of the offence it ought to be possible to sentence<sup>10</sup> him to a period of detention<sup>11</sup>;
- 1810 (3) that notice is given<sup>12</sup> under the provisions relating to serious or complex fraud or to certain cases involving children<sup>13</sup>;
- 1811 (4) that the offence is a specified offence<sup>14</sup> and it appears to the court that if he is found guilty of the offence the criteria for the imposition of a sentence of detention for public protection for a serious offence<sup>15</sup> or an extended sentence for certain violent or sexual offences<sup>16</sup> would be met<sup>17</sup>.

The second provision is that, where the court sends a child or young person for trial under the first provision<sup>18</sup>, it may at the same time send him to the Crown Court for trial for any indictable<sup>19</sup> or summary offence<sup>20</sup> with which he is charged and which:

- 1812 (a) (if it is an indictable offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence mentioned in the first provision<sup>21</sup>; or
- 1813 (b) (if it is a summary offence) appears to the court to be related to<sup>22</sup> the offence mentioned in the first provision or to the indictable offence, and fulfils the requisite condition<sup>23</sup>.

The third provision is that, where a child or young person who has been sent for trial under the first provision subsequently appears or is brought before a magistrates' court charged with an indictable or summary offence which appears to the court to be related to the offence mentioned in the first provision<sup>24</sup>; and (in the case of a summary offence) fulfils the requisite condition<sup>25</sup>, the court may send him forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the indictable or summary offence<sup>26</sup>.

The fourth provision is that, where:

- 1814 (i) the court sends a child or young person ('C') for trial under the first or second provision<sup>27</sup>; and

- 1815 (ii) an adult appears or is brought before the court on the same or a subsequent occasion charged jointly with C with an either-way offence<sup>28</sup> for which C is sent for trial under the first or second provision, or an either-way offence which appears to the court to be related to that offence<sup>29</sup>, the court must, where it is the same occasion, and may where it is a subsequent occasion, send the adult forthwith to the Crown Court for trial for the either-way offence<sup>30</sup>.

The fifth provision is that, where the court sends an adult for trial under the fourth provision<sup>31</sup>, it must at the same time send him to the Crown Court for trial for any either-way or summary offence with which he is charged and which:

- 1816 (A) (if it is an either-way offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he was sent for trial<sup>32</sup>; and 1817 (B) (if it is a summary offence) appears to the court to be related to the offence for which he was sent for trial or to the either-way offence, and fulfils the requisite condition<sup>33</sup>.

The functions of a magistrates' court under the above provisions<sup>34</sup> may be discharged by a single justice<sup>35</sup>.

A magistrates' court may adjourn any proceedings under the above provisions, and if it does so may remand<sup>36</sup> the defendant<sup>37</sup>.

A firearms offence is so specified where each of the requirements of the Firearms Act 1968 s 51A(1) (as added) (see notes 1-4 supra) would be satisfied with respect to the offence, and to the person charged with it, if he were convicted of the offence: see the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(12) (as so added). An offence under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 (see PARA 107 ante) is an offence of homicide for these purposes: s 6(1), (5).

11 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(3)(b) (as added: see note 2 supra). The court should start with a strong presumption against sending a young defendant to the Crown Court unless it is satisfied that it is clearly required. The general policy of the legislature is that those under 18 years of age and, in particular, children under 15 years of age, should, wherever possible, be tried in the youth court. A trial in the Crown Court should be reserved for the most serious cases; a magistrates' court should not decline jurisdiction unless the offence and the circumstances surrounding it and the defendant are such as to make it more than a vague or theoretical possibility that a sentence of detention for a long period might be passed under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 91 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 78): R v Bresa [2005] EWCA Crim 1414, [2006] Crim LR 179; R (on the application of the Crown Prosecution Service) v Redbridge Youth Court [2005] EWHC 1390 (Admin), 169 JP 393. 23 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(4)(b) (as added: see note 2 supra). For the purposes of s 51A (as added), the court must treat as an indictable offence an offence which is mentioned in the first column of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 (as amended) (offences for which the value involved is relevant to the mode of trial: see PARA 1114 ante) unless it is clear to the court, having regard to any representations made by the prosecutor or the defendant, that the value involved does not exceed the relevant sum: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(3) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 68, 69(b)). In the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(3) (as amended), 'the value involved' and 'the relevant sum' have the same meanings as in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 22 (as amended) (see PARA 1114 ante): Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(4).

A summary offence fulfils the requisite condition if it is punishable with imprisonment or involves obligatory or discretionary disqualification from driving: s 51A(9) (as so added).

The trial of the information charging any summary offence for which a person is sent for trial under s 51A (as added) must be treated as if the court had adjourned it under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 10 (as amended) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue para 707) and had not fixed the time and place for its resumption: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(8) (as so added). HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1134. Notices in serious or complex fraud cases.

1134. Notices in serious or complex fraud cases.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> a notice may be given<sup>2</sup> by a designated authority<sup>3</sup> in respect of an indictable offence if the authority is of the opinion<sup>4</sup> that the evidence of the offence charged: (1) is sufficient for the person charged to be put on trial for the offence; and (2) reveals a case of fraud of such seriousness or complexity that it is appropriate that the management of the case should without delay be taken over by the Crown Court<sup>5</sup>.

Such a notice must be given to the magistrates' court at which the person charged appears or before which is brought<sup>6</sup>; and such a notice must be given to the magistrates' court before any summary trial begins<sup>7</sup>.

The effect of such a notice is that the functions of the magistrates' court cease in relation to the case, with specified exceptions<sup>8</sup>. A decision to give such a notice is not subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court (whether a magistrates' court or not)<sup>9</sup>.

1 The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51B is added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 18 as from an appointed day under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1131 ante.

2 Ie under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51B (prospectively added and amended): see the text and notes 3-9 infra.

3 For these purposes, a 'designated authority' means: (1) the Director of Public Prosecutions (see PARA 1066 ante); (2) the Director of the Serious Fraud Office (see PARA 1067 ante); (3) the Director of Revenue and Customs Prosecutions (see PARA 1068 ante); or (4) the Secretary of State: ibid s 51B(9) (s 51B prospectively added (see note 1 supra); s 51B(9) amended by the Commissioners for Revenue and Customs Act 2005 s 50(6), Sch 4 para 69). The functions of a designated authority under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51B (prospectively added and amended) may be exercised by an officer of the authority acting on behalf of the authority: s 51B(7) (as so prospectively added).

4 That opinion must be certified by the designated authority in the notice: ibid s 51B(2) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). The notice must also specify the proposed place of trial, and in selecting that place the designated authority must have regard to the same matters as are specified in s 51D(4)(a)-(c) (as added; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1136 post): s 51B(3) (as so prospectively added).

5 Ibid s 51B(1) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

6 Ibid s 51B(4) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

7 Ibid s 51B(5) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

8 Ibid s 51B(6) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). The exceptions are that the functions of the magistrates' court do not cease: (1) for the purposes of s 51D (as added; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1136 post); (2) as provided by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 14, Sch 3 para 2 (as amended) (grant of right to representation: see LEGAL AID vol 65 (2008) PARAS 146, 172); (3) as provided by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52 (as amended) (see PARAS 1132 ante, 1137-1138 post): s 51B(6) (as so prospectively added).

9 Ibid s 51B(8) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1135. Notices in certain cases involving children.

1135. Notices in certain cases involving children.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> a notice may be given<sup>2</sup> by the Director of Public Prosecutions<sup>3</sup> in respect of a specified offence<sup>4</sup> if he is of the opinion:

- 1818 (1) that the evidence of the offence would be sufficient for the person charged to be put on trial for the offence<sup>5</sup>;
- 1819 (2) that a child<sup>6</sup> would be called as a witness at the trial<sup>7</sup>; and
- 1820 (3) that, for the purpose of avoiding any prejudice to the welfare of the child, the case should be taken over and proceeded with, without delay, by the Crown Court<sup>8</sup>.

A decision to give such a notice is not subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court (whether a magistrates' court or not)<sup>9</sup>.

1 The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51C is added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 18 as from an appointed day under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1131 ante.

2 le under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51C (prospectively added).

3 The functions of the Director of Public Prosecutions under ibid s 51C (prospectively added) may be exercised by an officer acting on behalf of the Director: s 51C(5) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

4 le an offence: (1) which involves an assault on, or injury or a threat of injury to, a person (see PARA 147 et seq ante); (2) under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 1 (as amended) (cruelty to persons under 16: see PARA 143 ante); (3) under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 (repealed), the Protection of Children Act 1978 (see PARA 757 et seq ante) or the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (see PARA 165 et seq ante); (4) of kidnapping or false imprisonment (see PARA 135 et seq ante) or an offence under the Child Abduction Act 1984 s 1 or s 2 (as amended) (see PARAS 137-141 ante); (5) which consists of attempting or conspiring to commit, or of aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or inciting the commission of, an offence falling within heads (1)-(4) above (see PARAS 65-83 ante): Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51C(3) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

5 Ibid s 51C(1)(a) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

6 For these purposes, 'child' means: (1) a person who is under the age of 17; or (2) any person of whom a video recording was made when he was under the age of 17 with a view to its admission as his evidence in chief in the trial referred to in ibid s 51C(1) (prospectively added): s 51C(7) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). As to age see PARA 1106 note 2 ante. For the meaning of 'video recording' see PARA 1420 note 9 post.

7 Ibid s 51C(1)(b) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

8 Ibid s 51C(1)(c) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). The opinion must be certified by the Director of Public Prosecutions in the notice: s 51C(2) (as so prospectively added). The provisions of s 51B(4)-(6) (prospectively added) (see PARA 1134 ante) apply for the purposes of s 51C (prospectively added) as they apply for the purposes of s 51B (prospectively added and amended) (see PARA 1134 ante): s 51C(4) (as so prospectively added).

9 Ibid s 51C(6) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

1135 Notices in certain cases involving children

NOTE 4--See Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006 s 55 (continuity of sexual offences law). See further Serious Crime Act 2007 Sch 6 para 36 (references to common law offence of incitement).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1136. Notice of offence and place of trial.

1136. Notice of offence and place of trial.

The court must specify in a notice: (1) the offence or offences for which a person is sent for trial<sup>1</sup>; and (2) the place<sup>2</sup> at which he is to be tried<sup>3</sup>. A copy of the notice must be served on the defendant and given to the Crown Court sitting at that place<sup>4</sup>. In a case where a person is sent for trial<sup>5</sup> for more than one offence, the court must specify in that notice, for each offence, the specific provision<sup>6</sup> under which the person is so sent, and, if applicable, the offence to which that offence appears to the court to be related<sup>7</sup>. Where the court selects the place of trial<sup>8</sup> it must have regard to: (a) the convenience of the defence, the prosecution and the witnesses; (b) the desirability of expediting the trial; and (c) any direction<sup>9</sup> given by or on behalf of the Lord Chief Justice with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor<sup>10</sup>.

The functions of a magistrates' court under the above provisions may be discharged by a single justice<sup>11</sup>.

1    Ie under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) or s 51A (as added): see PARAS 1132-1133 ante.

2    If a notice has been given under ibid s 51B (prospectively added and amended) (see PARA 1134 ante) the place at which a defendant is so to be tried must be the place specified in that notice: see s 51D(1)(b) (s 51D added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 18). At the date at which this volume states the law the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51D (as added) has effect only in relation to cases sent to the Crown Court for trial under s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante): Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 8 and Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/950, art 2, Sch 1 para 29. As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.21.1, CA, and Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) [2005] 1 WLR 2215 at III.21.1, Sup Ct, provide that, for the purposes of trial in the Crown Court, offences are to be classified as follows:

508   (1)   Class 1:

29. (a) misprision of treason and treason felony (see PARAS 365, 367 ante);
30. (b) murder (see PARAS 89-91 ante);
31. (c) genocide (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 454);
32. (d) torture, hostage-taking and offences under the War Crimes Act 1991 (see WAR
AND ARMED CONFLICT vol 49(1) 2005 Reissue) PARA 465);
33. (e) an offence under the Official Secrets Acts (see PARA 478 ante);
34. (f) manslaughter (see PARA 92 et seq ante);
35. (g) infanticide (see PARA 103 ante);
36. (h) child destruction (see PARA 108 ante);
37. (i) abortion contrary to the Offences against the Person Act 1861 s 58 (see PARA 109 ante);
38. (j) sedition (see PARA 371 et seq ante);
39. (k) an offence under the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 s 1 (as amended) (see PARA 1061 ante);
40. (l) mutiny (see ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 399);
41. (m) piracy (see INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS LAW vol 61 (2010) PARA 156);
42. (n) soliciting, incitement, attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the offences in heads (1)(a)-(m) supra (see PARAS 65-83 ante);
43. (2) Class 2:
44. (i) rape (see PARA 165 ante);
45. (ii) sexual intercourse with a girl under 13 (repealed);
46. (iii) incest with a girl under 13 (repealed);
47. (iv) assault by penetration (see PARA 167 ante);
48. (v) causing a person to engage in sexual activity, where penetration is involved
(see PARA 171 ante);
49. (vi) rape of a child under 13 (see PARA 166 ante);

- 50 49. (vii) assault of a child under 13 by penetration (see PARA 168 ante);
- 51 50. (viii) causing or inciting a child under 13 to engage in sexual activity, where penetration is involved (see PARA 172 ante);
- 52 51. (ix) sexual activity with a person with a mental disorder, where penetration is involved (see PARA 197 ante);
- 53 52. (x) inducement to procure sexual activity with a mentally disordered person where penetration is involved (see PARA 202 ante);
- 54 53. (xi) paying for sexual services of a child where child is under 13 and penetration is involved (see PARA 215 ante);
- 55 54. (xii) committing an offence with intent to commit a sexual offence, where the offence is kidnapping or false imprisonment (see PARA 231 ante);
- 56 55. (xiii) soliciting, incitement, attempt or conspiracy to commit any of the offences listed in heads (2)(i)-(xii) supra (see PARAS 65-83 ante);
- 510 (3) Class (3): all other offences not listed in Class 1 or Class 2 supra.

The magistrates' court, upon sending a person for trial must: (A) if the offence or any of the offences is included in Class 1 (see head (1) supra), specify the most convenient location of the Crown Court where a High Court judge, or where a circuit judge duly authorised by the Lord Chief Justice to try Class 1 cases, regularly sits; (B) if the offence or any of the offences is included in Class 2 (see head (2) supra), specify the most convenient location of the Crown Court where a judge duly authorised to try Class 2 cases regularly sits (these courts on each circuit will be identified by the presiding judges, with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice); (C) where an offence is in Class 3 (see head (3) supra), the magistrates' court must specify the most convenient location of the Crown Court: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at III.21.2; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) supra at III.21.2.

In selecting the most convenient location of the Crown Court, the justices must have regard to the considerations referred to in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51(1) (as substituted) (see PARA 1132 ante) and to the location or locations of the Crown Court designated by a presiding judge as the location to which cases should normally be committed from their court area: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at III.21.3; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) supra at III.21.3.

For the purposes of the trial:

Cases in Class 1 (see head 1 supra) may only be tried by a High Court judge; or by a circuit judge or deputy High Court judge or deputy circuit judge provided that, in all cases save attempted murder, such judge is authorised by the Lord Chief Justice to try murder cases, or in the case of attempted murder, to try murder or attempted murder, and that the presiding judge has released the case for trial by such a judge: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at IV.33.1; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) supra at IV.33.1.

Cases in Class 2 (see head 2 supra) may be tried by a High Court judge; or by a circuit judge or deputy High Court judge or deputy circuit judge or a recorder, provided that in all cases such judge is authorised to try Class 2 cases by the Lord Chief Justice and the case has been assigned to the judge by or under the direction of the presiding judge or resident judge in accordance with guidance given by the presiding judges: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at IV.33.2; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) supra at IV.33.2.

Cases in Class 3 (see head 3 supra) may be tried by a High Court judge, or in accordance with guidance given by the presiding judges, a circuit judge, a deputy circuit judge or a recorder. A case in Class 3 must not be listed for trial by a High Court judge except with the consent of a presiding judge: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at IV.33.3; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Classification and Allocation of Business) supra at IV.33.3.

10 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51D(4) (as added: see note 2 supra). As to the Crown Court's power to give directions altering the place of any trial on indictment see PARA 1228 post.

1136 Notice of offence and place of trial

NOTE 4--CrimPR 12.2 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, r 12.2.

NOTE 9--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1137. Supplementary provisions.

1137. Supplementary provisions.

A magistrates' court may adjourn any proceedings under specified provisions relating to sending for trial<sup>1</sup>, and if it does so must remand the defendant<sup>2</sup>.

The court may send a person for trial under these provisions: (1) in custody, that is to say, by committing him to custody there to be safely kept until delivered in due course of law; or (2) on bail<sup>3</sup>, that is to say, by directing him to appear before the Crown Court for trial<sup>4</sup>. Where the person's release on bail is conditional on his providing one or more sureties, and the court fixes the amount in which a surety is to be bound<sup>5</sup> with a view to his entering into his recognisance subsequently<sup>6</sup>, the court must in the meantime make an order such as is mentioned in head (1) above<sup>7</sup>.

As soon as practicable after any person is sent for trial<sup>8</sup>, and in any event within four days from the date on which he is sent<sup>9</sup>, the magistrates' court officer must<sup>10</sup> send to the Crown Court officer: (a) the information<sup>11</sup>, if it is in writing; (b) the notice<sup>12</sup> specifying the offence or offences for which he is sent for trial and the place at which he is to be tried; (c) a copy of the record<sup>13</sup> relating to the grant or withholding of bail in respect of the defendant on the occasion of the sending; (d) any recognisance entered into by any person as surety for the defendant together with any enlargement of it<sup>14</sup>; (e) the names and addresses of any interpreters engaged for the defendant for the purposes of the appearance in the magistrates' court, together with any telephone numbers at which they can be readily contacted, and details of the languages or dialects in connection with which they have been so engaged; (f) if any person under the age of 18 is concerned in the proceedings, a statement whether the magistrates' court has given a direction<sup>15</sup> restricting reporting; (g) a copy of any representation order previously made in the case; (h) a copy of any application for a representation order previously made in the case which has been refused; and (i) any documents relating to an appeal by the prosecution against the granting of bail<sup>16</sup>.

A Crown Court officer to whom notice has been given must list the first Crown Court appearance of the person to whom the notice relates in accordance with any directions given by the magistrates' court<sup>17</sup>.

Where a person is sent for trial<sup>18</sup> on any charge or charges, copies of the documents containing the evidence on which the charge or charges are based must before expiry of the prescribed period<sup>19</sup> be served on that person, and given to the Crown Court sitting at the place specified in the relevant notice<sup>20</sup>; but the Crown Court at that place may extend or further extend the period on an oral or written application by the prosecutor<sup>21</sup>. Where a person has been sent for trial for any offence to which the proceedings concerned relate, an application for a witness summons<sup>22</sup> must be made as soon as reasonably practicable after such service on that person of documents relevant to that offence<sup>23</sup>.

1137 Supplementary provisions

TEXT AND NOTES 8-17--CrimPR 12.1, 12.2 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, rr 12.1, 12.2.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1138. Application for dismissal.

1138. Application for dismissal.

A person who is sent for trial<sup>1</sup> on any charge or charges may, at any time after he is served with copies of the documents containing the evidence on which the charge or charges are based, and before he is arraigned (and whether or not an indictment has been preferred against him), apply orally or in writing to the Crown Court sitting at the place specified<sup>2</sup> for the charge, or any of the charges, in the case to be dismissed<sup>3</sup>. The judge must dismiss a charge (and accordingly quash any count relating to it in any indictment preferred against the applicant) which is the subject of any such application if it appears to him that the evidence against the applicant would not be sufficient for a jury properly to convict him<sup>4</sup>. No oral application may be made unless the applicant has given to the Crown Court sitting at the place in question written notice of his intention to make the application<sup>5</sup>.

If the charge, or any of the charges, against the applicant is dismissed, no further proceedings may be brought on the dismissed charge or charges except by means of the preferment of a voluntary bill of indictment<sup>6</sup>, and, unless the applicant is in custody otherwise than on the dismissed charge or charges, he must be discharged<sup>7</sup>.

1     le under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (prospectively amended) (see PARA 1131 ante) or s 51 (as substituted) (see PARA 1132 ante) (or, as from a day to be appointed, under s 51A (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante)): see s 56(2), Sch 3 para 2(1) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 20(1), (3)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1131 ante.

2     le in the notice under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51D(1) (as added; prospectively amended): see PARA 1136 ante.

3     See ibid Sch 3 para 2(1). As to procedure see CrimPR 13.1-13.6. The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41 (restriction on evidence or questions about complainant's sexual history in proceedings for sexual offences: see PARA 1446 post) applies to the hearing of an application under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 2(1) (prospectively amended): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 42(3)(c) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 73(1), (3)).

4     Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 2(2). As from a day to be appointed this provision is amended to provide that a charge must be dismissed where such evidence against an applicant would not be sufficient for him to be properly convicted: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 para 73 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. The judge must take into account the whole of the evidence against a defendant; it is not appropriate for the judge to view any evidence in isolation from its context and other evidence; the judge is not bound to assume that a jury might make every possible inference capable of being drawn from a document against the defendant; whether there is sufficient evidence for a jury properly to convict depends on the judge to assess the weight of the evidence but the judge must not substitute himself for the jury; where the evidence is largely documentary, and the case depends on inferences to be drawn from it, the judge must assess the inferences that the prosecution proposes to ask the jury to draw, and decide whether the jury could properly draw those inferences; a judge's decision that there was or was not sufficient evidence can only be impugned if no reasonable judge could have reached it: R (on the application of IRC) v Crown Court at Kingston [2001] EWHC Admin 581, [2001] 4 All ER 721 (case concerned with identical provision in the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 6(1) (repealed)).

An application to dismiss a charge based merely on the defective draft of a notice under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51D (as added; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1136 ante) is not entitled to succeed: R (on the application of Bentham) v Governor of HM Prison Wandsworth [2006] EWHC 121 (Admin), [2006] All ER (D) 80 (Feb).

Where a person is charged in the same proceedings with murder or manslaughter and with an offence under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 (see PARA 107 ante) in respect of the same death, the charge of murder or manslaughter is not to be dismissed under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 2 (as amended, prospectively amended) unless the offence under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 is dismissed: s 6(1), (3).

A decision on an application to dismiss a charge is not susceptible to judicial review: R (on the application of Snelgrove) v Woolwich Crown Court [2004] EWHC 2172 (Admin), [2005] 1 WLR 3223, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep 253.

NOTE 3--CrimPR Pt 13 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 13.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1139. Restrictions on reporting applications for dismissal.

1139. Restrictions on reporting applications for dismissal.

It is not lawful to publish<sup>1</sup> in the United Kingdom<sup>2</sup> a written report of an application for dismissal<sup>3</sup>, or to include in a relevant programme<sup>4</sup> for reception in the United Kingdom a report of such an application, if (in either case) the report contains any matter other than permitted matter<sup>5</sup>. An order that this is not to apply to reports of such an application may be made by the judge dealing with the application<sup>6</sup>. Where in the case of two or more defendants one of them objects to the making of such an order, the judge may make the order if, and only if, he is satisfied, after hearing the representations of the defendants, that it is in the interests of justice to do so<sup>7</sup>. It is not unlawful to publish or include in a relevant programme a report of an application for dismissal containing any matter other than that permitted where the application is successful<sup>8</sup> nor is it unlawful to publish or include in a relevant programme a report of an unsuccessful application at the conclusion of the trial of the person charged, or of the last of the persons charged to be tried<sup>9</sup>.

The following matters may be contained in a report published or included in a relevant programme without an order<sup>10</sup> before the time authorised<sup>11</sup>: (1) the identity of the court and the name of the judge; (2) the names, ages, home addresses<sup>12</sup> and occupations of the defendant or defendants and witnesses; (3) where the application for dismissal relates to a charge for an offence of serious or complex fraud in respect of which notice has been given<sup>13</sup> to the court, any relevant business information<sup>14</sup>; (4) the offence or offences, or a summary of them, with which the defendant is or are charged; (5) the names of counsel and solicitors engaged in the proceedings; (6) where the proceedings are adjourned, the date and place to which they are adjourned; (7) the arrangements as to bail, (8) whether a right to representation funded by the Legal Services Commission as part of the Criminal Defence Service was granted to the defendant or any of the defendants<sup>15</sup>.

If a report is published or included in a relevant programme in contravention of these provisions, the following persons are liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale<sup>16</sup>: (a) in the case of a publication of a written report as part of a newspaper or periodical, any proprietor, editor or publisher of the newspaper or periodical; (b) in the case of a publication of a written report otherwise than as part of a newspaper or periodical, the person who publishes it; (c) in the case of the inclusion of a report in a relevant programme, any body corporate which is engaged in providing the service in which the programme is included and any person having functions in relation to the programme corresponding to those of the editor of a newspaper<sup>17</sup>.

1 'Publish', in relation to a report, means publish the report, either by itself or as part of a newspaper or periodical, for distribution to the public: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 3(13).

2 For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

3 Ie under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 2(1) (as amended): see PARA 1138 ante.

4 Ie a programme included in a programme service (within the meaning of the Broadcasting Act 1990: see TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING vol 45(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 328): Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 3(13).

5 Ibid Sch 3 para 3(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 68, 71(a)). See PARA 1131 note 1 ante. This is in addition to, and not in derogation from, other statutory provisions: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 3(12). 'Permitted matter' means matter permitted by Sch 3 para 3(8): see the text and note 15 infra.

6 Ibid s 52(6), Sch 3 para 3(2). Cf the Contempt of Court Act 1981 s 4 (as amended); and CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 428. Other restrictions are imposed by eg the Criminal Justice Act 1925 s 41 (as amended) (prohibition on taking photographs etc in court: see CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 407); the Judicial Proceedings (Regulation of Reports) Act 1926 (as amended) (see CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 430-431); the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 39 (as amended) (see CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARAS 430-431). An order under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 3(2) does not apply to reports of proceedings under Sch 3 para 3(3) (see the text and note 7 infra), but any decision of the court to make or not to make such an order may be contained in reports published or included in a relevant programme before the time authorised by Sch 3 para 3(5) (see the text and note 8 infra): Sch 3 para 3(4).

7 Ibid Sch 3 para 3(3).

8 Ibid Sch 3 para 3(5). Where two or more persons were jointly charged, and applications for dismissal are made by more than one of them, Sch 3 para 3(5) (see the text and note 8 supra) is modified to refer to all being successful: Sch 3 para 3(6).

9 Ibid Sch 3 para 3(7).

10 Ie under ibid Sch 3 para 3(2): see the text and note 6 supra.

11 Ie under ibid Sch 3 para 3(5), (6): see the text and note 8 supra.

12 Ie addresses at any relevant time, and at the time of their publication or inclusion in a relevant programme: ibid Sch 3 para 3(9). 'Relevant time' means a time when events giving rise to the charges to which the proceedings relate occurred: Sch 3 para 3(13).

13 Ie under ibid s 51B (prospectively added and amended): see PARA 1134 post.

14 For these purposes, the following is relevant business information for the purposes of ibid Sch 3 para 3(8) (as amended) (see the text and note 15 infra):

511 (1) any address used by the defendant for carrying on a business on his own account;

512 (2) the name of any business which he was carrying on on his own account at any relevant time;

513 (3) the name of any firm in which he was a partner at any relevant time or by which he was engaged at any such time;

514 (4) the address of any such firm;

515 (5) the name of any company of which he was a director at any relevant time or by which he was otherwise engaged at any such time;

516 (6) the address of the registered or principal office of any such company;

517 (7) any working address of the defendant in his capacity as a person engaged by any such company, and for these purposes 'engaged' means engaged under a contract of service or a contract for services: Sch 3 para 9A (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 68, 71(c)).

15 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 3(8) (amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 Sch 4 paras 53, 55; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 68, 71(b)). HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1140. Depositions.

1140. Depositions.

Where a justice of the peace is satisfied that any person ('the witness') is likely to be able to make on behalf of the prosecutor a written statement containing material evidence, or produce on behalf of the prosecutor a document or other exhibit likely to be material evidence, for the purposes of proceedings for an offence for which a person has been sent for trial<sup>1</sup> by a magistrates' court, and it is in the interests of justice to issue a summons to secure the attendance of the witness to have his evidence taken as a deposition or to produce the document or other exhibit, the justice must issue a summons directed to the witness requiring him to attend before a justice at the time and place appointed in the summons, and to have his evidence taken as a deposition or to produce the document or other exhibit<sup>2</sup>. If a justice of the peace is satisfied by evidence on oath of the matters mentioned above, and also that it is probable that such a summons would not procure the result required by it, the justice may instead of issuing a summons issue a warrant to arrest the witness and to bring him before a justice at the time and place specified in the warrant<sup>3</sup>.

If: (1) the witness fails to attend before a justice in answer to such a summons; (2) the justice is satisfied by evidence on oath that the witness is likely to be able to make a statement or produce a document or other exhibit; (3) it is proved on oath, or in such other manner as may be prescribed<sup>4</sup>, that he has been duly served with the summons and that a reasonable sum has been paid or tendered to him for costs and expenses; and (4) it appears to the justice that there is no just excuse for the failure, the justice may issue a warrant to arrest the witness and to bring him before a justice at the time and place specified in the warrant<sup>5</sup>.

If any person so attending or so brought before a justice refuses without just excuse to have his evidence taken as a deposition, or to produce the document or other exhibit, the justice may do one or both of the following: (a) commit him to custody until the expiration of such period not exceeding one month as may be specified in the summons or warrant or until he sooner has his evidence taken as a deposition or produces the document or other exhibit; (b) impose on him a fine not exceeding £2,500<sup>6</sup>. If a person has his evidence taken as a deposition, or produces an exhibit which is a document<sup>7</sup>, the designated officer for the justice concerned must as soon as is reasonably practicable send a copy of the deposition to the prosecutor and the Crown Court<sup>8</sup>.

Where a person has his evidence taken as a deposition, the deposition may without further proof be read as evidence on the trial of the defendant, whether for an offence for which he was sent for trial<sup>9</sup> or for any other offence arising out of the same transaction or set of circumstances<sup>10</sup>. This does not apply if it is proved that the deposition was not signed by the justice by whom it purports to have been signed, the court of trial at its discretion orders that it is not apply, or a party to the proceedings objects to it applying<sup>11</sup>.

2 See the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 4(1), (2) (amended by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005 s 169(4); and the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 61). As to summonses see PARA 350 ante. Where a summons is issued with a view to securing that the witness has his evidence taken as a deposition, the time appointed in the summons must be such as to enable the evidence to be taken as a deposition before the relevant date: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4(6).

A summons may also be issued under Sch 3 para 4(1), (2) (as amended; prospectively amended) if the justice is satisfied that the witness is outside the British Islands: Sch 3 para 4(4). 'The British Islands' means the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man: see the Interpretation Act 1978 s 5, Sch 1.

The witness summons procedure may not be used in order to obtain disclosure of documents: R v Skegness Magistrates' Court, ex p Cardy [1985] RTR 49, DC; R v Sheffield Justices, ex p Wigley [1985] RTR 78, DC (both cases under the corresponding provision in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97 (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARAS 734, 736)). No witness summons may be issued where the document would have no probative value in relation to the charge: R v Coventry Magistrates' Court, ex p Perks [1985] RTR 74, DC; R v Barking Justices, ex p Goodspeed [1985] RTR 70n, DC (both cases under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97).

The Queen's Bench Division of the High Court has power to set aside a witness summons where there has been an abuse of the process of the court or if it is clear that the witness cannot give relevant evidence. On an application for a witness summons, justices should inquire as to the nature of the evidence and whether and why it is likely to be material: R v Peterborough Magistrates' Court, ex p Willis and Amos (1987) 151 JP 785, DC; R v Reading Justices, ex p Berkshire County Council [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 239, 160 JP 392, DC (both cases under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97). It must be shown that the evidence would be material to the party seeking the summons; this would not be the case where the witness would give hostile evidence: R v Marylebone Magistrates' Court, ex p Gatting and Emburey (1990) 154 JP 549, DC. An application may also be made to the magistrates' court for this purpose: R v Hove Justices, ex p Donne [1967] 2 All ER 1235n, DC; R v Lewes Justices, ex p Gaming Board for Great Britain [1972] 1 QB 232 at 240, [1971] 2 All ER 1126 at 1132, DC, per Lord Parker CJ (affd sub nom Gaming Board for Great Britain v Rogers [1973] AC 388, [1972] 2 All ER 1057, HL) (all cases under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97). A summons requiring the production of a document may be set aside if the document would be inadmissible in evidence: R v Cheltenham Justices, ex p Secretary of State for Trade [1977] 1 All ER 460, [1977] 1 WLR 95, DC (case under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97).

A witness summons should not be issued to compel production by a prosecution witness of proof of evidence and attendance notes giving factual instructions to his solicitor which may contain or record inconsistent statements by the witness and/or which are the subject of legal professional privilege which has not been waived; the inadmissibility of such evidence by virtue of the privilege means that it is not 'likely to be material evidence': R v Derby Magistrates' Court, ex p B [1995] 4 All ER 526, [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 385, HL; R (on the application of Howe) v South Durham Magistrates' Court [2004] EWHC 362 (Admin), 168 JP 424 (both cases under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97).

Subject to the provisions of any enactment or rule of law authorising the reception of unsworn evidence, evidence given before a magistrates' court must be given on oath: Magistrates' Courts Act s 98. As to the unsworn evidence of children under 14 see PARA 1442 post. As to affirmations see the Oaths Act 1978; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 1021 et seq.

The procedure of taking a deposition from a witness who will not voluntarily make a statement, pursuant to the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4 (as amended) is a proceeding in open court. In the circumstances of a particular case, however, the justices may exceptionally exclude persons from the taking of the deposition or otherwise modify the procedure where that will assist in the reception of the evidence or it is in the interests of justice to do so: R (on the application of the Crown Prosecution Service) v Bolton Justices [2003] EWHC 2697 (Admin), [2005] 2 All ER 848, [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 438. Where a witness who has been summonsed to give a deposition pursuant to the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4 (as amended) refuses to answer questions on the ground of privilege against self-incrimination, that claim should be the subject of a proper investigation by the justices in respect of each and every question for which it is claimed: R (on the application of the Crown Prosecution Service) v Bolton Justices supra.

See also R (on the application of the Crown Prosecution Service) v Bolton Justices supra (deposition proceedings are proceedings in open court; every question for which privilege is sought must be investigated by the justices).

Where a person attends before a justice of the peace pursuant to the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4 (as amended) the justice must: (1) where that person attends for the purpose of giving evidence, cause his evidence to be put in writing; (2) where that person attends for the purposes of producing a document or other exhibit, cause the document or exhibit to be handed over for examination and any evidence given by that person in respect of it to be put in writing; (3) where that person refuses to have his evidence taken or to produce the document or other exhibit, as the case may be, explain to him the consequences of so refusing without just excuse, and ask him to explain why he has so refused; and (4) cause a record of any such refusal to be put in writing: CrimPR 28.2(1).

The attendance as a witness of a person who is in custody is generally secured by an order of the Secretary of State (see the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 s 41, Sch 1 para 3; and PRISONS vol 36(2) (Reissue) PARA 550) but may also be secured by a warrant issued by, or on the order of, a judge of the Queen's Bench Division (see the Criminal Procedure Act 1853 s 9 (as amended); and ADMINISTRATIVE LAW vol 1(1) (2001 Reissue) PARA 250). In the latter instance application is made on witness statement or affidavit: Civil Procedure Rules 1998, SI 1998/3132 Sch RSC Ord 54 r 9(2) (amended by SI 1999/1008).

As soon as practicable after the examination by the prosecutor of a witness whose evidence is put in writing the justice must cause his deposition to be read to him, and must require the witness to sign the deposition: CrimPR 28.2(2). Any such deposition must be authenticated by a certificate signed by the justice: CrimPR 28.2(3).

3 See the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4(3). No warrant may be issued under Sch 3 para 4(3) unless the justice is satisfied by evidence on oath that the witness is in England and Wales: see Sch 3 para 4(3). Where a warrant is issued with a view to securing that the witness has his evidence taken as a deposition, the time appointed in the warrant must be such as to enable the evidence to be taken as a deposition before the relevant date: Sch 3 para 4(6). The 'relevant date' means the expiry of the period referred to in Sch 3 para 1 (as amended): see Sch 3 para 4(12) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 68, 72).

4 It is prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Rules: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4(12) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2004, SI 2004/2035 art 3, Schedule paras 35, 37).

7 If in pursuance of ibid Sch 3 para 4 (as amended) a person produces an exhibit which is not a document, the designated officer concerned must as soon as is reasonably practicable inform the prosecutor and the Crown Court of that fact and of the nature of the exhibit: Sch 3 para 4(11) (Sch 3 para 4(9)-(11) amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 61).

8 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 4(9), (10) (as amended: see note 7 supra).

1140 Depositions

NOTE 2--CrimPR Pt 28 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 28. CrimPR 28.2 not reproduced.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (5) SENDING TO THE CROWN COURT FOR TRIAL/1141. Procedure where no main offence is included in indictment against defendant sent for trial.

1141. Procedure where no main offence is included in indictment against defendant sent for trial.

Except in the case of a child or young person<sup>1</sup>, where:

- 1821 (1) a person has been sent for trial<sup>2</sup> but has not been arraigned<sup>3</sup>; and
- 1822 (2) the person is charged on an indictment which (following amendment of the indictment, or as a result of an application for dismissal<sup>4</sup>, or for any other reason) includes no main offence<sup>5</sup>, the Crown Court must cause to be read to the defendant each remaining count of the indictment that charges an offence triable either way<sup>6</sup>. The court must then explain to the defendant in ordinary language that, in relation to each of those offences, he may indicate whether (if it were to proceed to trial) he would plead guilty or not guilty, and that if he indicates that he would plead guilty the court must proceed as if he had been arraigned on the count in question and had pleaded guilty<sup>7</sup>. The court must then ask the defendant whether (if the offence in question were to proceed to trial) he would plead guilty or not guilty<sup>8</sup>. If the defendant indicates that he would plead guilty the court must proceed as if he had been arraigned on the count in question and had pleaded guilty<sup>9</sup>. If the defendant indicates that he would plead not guilty, or fails to indicate how he would plead, the court must decide whether the offence is more suitable for summary trial or for trial on indictment<sup>10</sup>.

Except in the case of a child or young person, where:

- 1823 (a) a person has been sent for trial<sup>11</sup> but has not been arraigned<sup>12</sup>;
- 1824 (b) he is charged on an indictment which (following amendment of the indictment, or as a result of an application for dismissal, or for any other reason) includes no main offence<sup>13</sup>;
- 1825 (c) he is represented by a legal representative<sup>14</sup>;
- 1826 (d) the Crown Court considers that by reason of his disorderly conduct before the court it is not practicable for proceedings of the above type<sup>15</sup> to be conducted in his presence<sup>16</sup>; and
- 1827 (e) the court considers that it should proceed in his absence<sup>17</sup>, the court must: (i) cause to be read to the representative each remaining count of the indictment that charges an offence triable either way<sup>18</sup>; (ii) must ask the representative whether (if the offence in question were to proceed to trial) the defendant would plead guilty or not guilty<sup>19</sup>; (iii) if the representative indicates that the defendant would plead guilty, proceed as if the defendant had been arraigned on the count in question and had pleaded guilty<sup>20</sup>; (iv) if the representative indicates that the defendant would plead not guilty or fails to indicate how the accused would plead, decide whether the offence is more suitable for summary trial or for trial on indictment<sup>21</sup>.

Where the Crown Court is required by the above provisions<sup>22</sup> to decide the question whether an offence is more suitable for summary trial or for trial on indictment<sup>23</sup>, the court, before considering the question, must give the prosecution an opportunity to inform the court of the defendant's previous convictions (if any)<sup>24</sup>; and must give the prosecution and the defendant an opportunity to make representations as to whether summary trial or trial on indictment would be more suitable<sup>25</sup>. In deciding the question, the court must consider whether the sentence which a magistrates' court would have power to impose for the offence would be adequate<sup>26</sup>; and any such representations made by the prosecution or the defendant<sup>27</sup>, and must have regard to any allocation guidelines<sup>28</sup>.

Unless otherwise excluded<sup>29</sup>, where the Crown Court considers that an offence is more suitable for summary trial<sup>30</sup>, the court must explain to the defendant in ordinary language:

- 1828 (A) that it appears to the court more suitable for him to be tried summarily for the offence<sup>31</sup>;
- 1829 (B) that he can either consent to be so tried or, if he wishes, be tried on indictment<sup>32</sup>; and
- 1830 (C) in the case of a specified offence<sup>33</sup>, that if he is tried summarily and is convicted by the court, he may be committed<sup>34</sup> for sentence to the Crown Court if the committing court is of the requisite opinion<sup>35</sup>.

After so explaining to the defendant the court must ask him whether he wishes to be tried summarily or on indictment<sup>36</sup>. If the defendant indicates that he wishes to be tried summarily, the court must remit him for trial to a magistrates' court acting for the place where he was sent to the Crown Court for trial<sup>37</sup>. On the other hand, if the defendant does not give such an indication, the court must retain its functions in relation to the offence and must proceed accordingly<sup>38</sup>.

If the Crown Court considers that an offence is more suitable for trial on indictment, the court must tell the defendant that it has decided that it is more suitable for him to be tried for the offence on indictment<sup>39</sup>, and must retain its functions in relation to the offence and proceed accordingly<sup>40</sup>.

The following provisions apply in place of those described above. In the case of a child or young person who has been sent for trial<sup>41</sup> but has not been arraigned<sup>42</sup>, and is charged on an indictment which (following amendment of the indictment, or as a result of an application for dismissal, or for any other reason) includes no main offence<sup>43</sup>, the Crown Court must remit the child or young person for trial to a magistrates' court acting for the place where he was sent to the Crown Court for trial<sup>44</sup>.

Subject to specified exceptions<sup>45</sup>, the Crown Court may proceed in the absence of the defendant in accordance with such of the above provisions<sup>46</sup> as are applicable in the circumstances if:

- 1831 (aa) the defendant is represented by a legal representative who signifies to the court the defendant's consent to the proceedings in question being conducted in his absence<sup>47</sup>; and
- 1832 (bb) the court is satisfied that there is good reason for proceeding in the absence of the defendant<sup>48</sup>.

1141 Procedure where no main offence is included in indictment against defendant sent for trial

NOTE 24--Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 9(5) amended: Armed Forces Act 2006 Sch 16 para 155.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(6) RESTRICTIONS ON REPORTING ALLOCATION OR SENDING PROCEEDINGS/1142. Restrictions on reporting.

(6) RESTRICTIONS ON REPORTING ALLOCATION OR SENDING PROCEEDINGS

1142. Restrictions on reporting.

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> it is not lawful:

- 1833 (1) to publish<sup>2</sup> in the United Kingdom<sup>3</sup> a written report of any allocation or sending proceedings<sup>4</sup> in England and Wales<sup>5</sup>; or
- 1834 (2) to include in a relevant programme<sup>6</sup> for reception in the United Kingdom a report of any such proceedings<sup>7</sup>, if (in either case) the report contains any matter other than permitted matter<sup>8</sup>.

A magistrates' court may, with reference to any allocation or sending proceedings, order that this prohibition is not to apply to reports of those proceedings<sup>9</sup>. However, where there is only one defendant and he objects to the making of such an order, the court may make the order if, and only if, it is satisfied, after hearing the representations of the defendant, that it is in the interests of justice to do so<sup>10</sup>. In addition, where in the case of two or more defendants one of them objects to the making of such an order, the court may make the order if, and only if, it is satisfied, after hearing the representations of the defendant, that it is in the interests of justice to do so<sup>11</sup>.

It is not unlawful to publish or include in a relevant programme a report of allocation or sending proceedings containing any matter other than any permitted matter:

- 1835 (a) where, in relation to the defendant (or all of the defendants if there are more than one), the magistrates' court is required<sup>12</sup> to proceed as if the proceedings constituted a summary trial, after the court is required so to proceed<sup>13</sup>;
- 1836 (b) where, in relation to the defendant (or any of the defendants, if there are more than one), the court proceeds other than as mentioned above, after the conclusion of his trial (or, as the case may be, the trial of the last to be tried)<sup>14</sup>.

The following matters may be contained in a report of allocation or sending proceedings published or included in a relevant programme without an order<sup>15</sup> before the time authorised<sup>16</sup>:

- 1837 (i) the identity of the court and the name of the justice or justices<sup>17</sup>;
- 1838 (ii) the name, age, home address<sup>18</sup> and occupation of the defendant or defendants<sup>19</sup>;
- 1839 (iii) in the case of a defendant charged with an offence in respect of which notice<sup>20</sup> has been given to the court in a case of serious or complex fraud, any relevant business information<sup>21</sup>;
- 1840 (iv) the offence or offences, or a summary of them, with which the defendant is, or the defendants are, charged<sup>22</sup>;
- 1841 (v) the names of counsel and solicitors engaged in the proceedings<sup>23</sup>;

- 1842 (vi) where the proceedings are adjourned, the date and place to which they are adjourned<sup>24</sup>;
- 1843 (vii) the arrangements as to bail<sup>25</sup>;
- 1844 (viii) whether a right to representation funded by the Legal Services Commission as part of the Criminal Defence Service was granted to the defendant or any of the defendants<sup>26</sup>.

1 The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52A is added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 19 as from a day to be appointed under s 336(3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See PARA 1131 ante.

2 For these purposes, 'publish', in relation to a report, means publish the report, either by itself or as part of a newspaper or periodical, for distribution to the public: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52A(11) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

3 As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

4 For these purposes, 'allocation or sending proceedings' means, in relation to an information charging an indictable offence:

518 (1) any proceedings in the magistrates' court at which matters are considered under any of the following provisions: (a) the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 ss 19-23 (ss 19, 20 prospectively substituted; s 20A prospectively added; s 21 prospectively substituted; s 22 as amended; s 23 as amended, prospectively amended) (see PARAS 1109-1115 ante); (b) the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted), s 51A (as added) or s 52 (as amended) (see PARAS 1132-1133, 1137-1138 ante) (s 52A(11)(a) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra));

519 (2) any proceedings in the magistrates' court before the court proceeds to consider any matter mentioned in head (1) supra (s 52A(11)(b) (as so prospectively added)); and

520 (3) any proceedings in the magistrates' court at which an application under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 25(2) (prospectively substituted) (see PARA 1119 ante) is considered (Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52A(11)(c) (as so prospectively added)).

5 Ibid s 52A(1)(a) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

6 For these purposes, 'relevant programme' means a programme included in a programme service (within the meaning of the Broadcasting Act 1990: see TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING vol 45(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 328): see the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52A(11) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

7 Ibid s 52A(1)(b) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

8 See ibid s 52A(1) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). As to the meaning of 'permitted matter' see s 52A(7) (prospectively added); and the text and notes 16-26 infra. Section 52A(1) (prospectively added) is in addition to, and not in derogation from, the provisions of any other enactment with respect to the publication of court proceedings: s 52A(10) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

9 Ibid s 52A(2) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

10 Ibid s 52A(3) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). An order under s 52A(2) (prospectively added) (see the text to note 9 supra) does not apply to reports of proceedings under s 52A(3) or (4) (prospectively added) (see the text and note 11 infra), but any decision of the court to make or not to make such an order may be contained in reports published or included in a relevant programme before the time authorised by s 52A (prospectively added) (see the text and notes 16-26 infra): s 52A(5) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

12 Ie under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 20(7) (prospectively substituted): see PARA 1112 ante.

13 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52A(6)(a) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

14 Ibid s 52A(6)(b) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

15    le an order under ibid s 52A(2) (prospectively added): see the text to note 9 supra.

16    le authorised by ibid s 52A(6) (prospectively added): see notes 11-13 supra.

17    Ibid s 52A(7)(a) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

18    The addresses that may be published or included in a relevant programme under this provision are addresses: (1) at any relevant time; and (2) at the time of their publication or inclusion in a relevant programme: ibid s 52A(8) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). 'Relevant time' means a time when events giving rise to the charges to which the proceedings relate occurred: see s 52A(11) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

19    Ibid s 52A(7)(b) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra).

20    le a notice under ibid s 51B (prospectively added and amended): see PARA 1134 ante.

21    Ibid s 52A(7)(c) (prospectively added: see note 1 supra). The following is relevant business information for the purposes of this provision:

521   (1)   any address used by the defendant for carrying on a business on his own account;

522   (2)   the name of any business which he was carrying on on his own account at any relevant time;

As from a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup> if a report is published<sup>2</sup> or included in a relevant programme<sup>3</sup> in contravention of the restrictions on reporting<sup>4</sup>, each of the following persons is guilty of an offence:

- 1845 (1) in the case of a publication of a written report as part of a newspaper or periodical, any proprietor, editor or publisher of the newspaper or periodical<sup>5</sup>;
- 1846 (2) in the case of a publication of a written report otherwise than as part of a newspaper or periodical, the person who publishes it<sup>6</sup>;
- 1847 (3) in the case of the inclusion of a report in a relevant programme, any body corporate which is engaged in providing the service in which the programme is included and any person having functions in relation to the programme corresponding to those of the editor of a newspaper<sup>7</sup>.

A person guilty of such an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale<sup>8</sup>.

(7) REMAND IN CUSTODY OR ON BAIL

1144. Remand in custody.

Where:

- 1848 (1) on adjourning a case<sup>1</sup> a magistrates' court proposes to remand or further remand a person in custody<sup>2</sup>; and
- 1849 (2) he is before the court<sup>3</sup>; and
- 1850 (3) he is legally represented<sup>4</sup> in that court<sup>5</sup>, it is the duty of the court to explain the effect of the statutory provisions<sup>6</sup> to him in ordinary language and to inform him in ordinary language that, notwithstanding the procedure for a remand without his being brought before a court, he would be brought before a court for the hearing and determination of at least every fourth application for his remand, and of every application for his remand heard at a time when it appeared to the court that he had no legal representative acting for him in the case<sup>7</sup>. After so explaining to a defendant, the court must ask him whether he consents to the hearing and determination of such applications in his absence<sup>8</sup>. Where a person is brought before the court after remand, the court may further remand him<sup>9</sup>.

Where a person has been remanded in custody and the remand was not a remand for a period exceeding eight clear days<sup>10</sup>, the court may further remand him<sup>11</sup> on an adjournment<sup>12</sup> without his being brought before it if it is satisfied:

- 1851 (a) that he gave his consent<sup>13</sup> to the hearing and determination in his absence of any application for his remand on an adjournment of the case<sup>14</sup>; and
- 1852 (b) that he has not been remanded without being brought before the court on more than two applications immediately preceding the application which the court is hearing<sup>15</sup>; and
- 1853 (c) that he has not withdrawn his consent to such applications being heard and determined in his absence<sup>16</sup>.

However, the court may not exercise such power if it appears to the court, on an application for a further remand being made to it, that the person to whom the application relates has no legal representative acting for him in the case, whether present in court or not<sup>17</sup>.

Where:

- 1854 (i) a person has been remanded in custody on an adjournment of a case<sup>18</sup>; and
- 1855 (ii) an application is subsequently made for his further remand on such an adjournment<sup>19</sup>; and
- 1856 (iii) he is not brought before the court which hears and determines the application<sup>20</sup>; and
- 1857 (iv) that court is not satisfied as to the statutory requirements<sup>21</sup>, the court must adjourn the case and remand him in custody for the period for which it stands adjourned<sup>22</sup>. Any such adjournment must be for the shortest period that appears to the court to make it possible for the defendant to be brought before it<sup>23</sup>.

Where on an adjournment of a case<sup>24</sup> a person has been remanded in custody without being brought before the court, and it subsequently appears to the court which so remanded him or to an alternate magistrates' court to which he is remanded<sup>25</sup> that he ought not to have been remanded in custody in his absence, the court must require him to be brought before it at the earliest time that appears to the court to be possible<sup>26</sup>.

1145. Remand on bail.

Where a person is remanded on bail by a magistrates' court<sup>1</sup>, the court may, where it remands him on bail in accordance with the Bail Act 1976, direct him to appear or, in any other case, direct that his recognisance be conditioned for his reappearance:

- 1858 (1) before that court at the end of the period of remand<sup>2</sup>; or
- 1859 (2) at every time and place to which during the course of the proceedings the hearing may be from time to time adjourned<sup>3</sup>, and, where it remands him on bail conditionally on his providing a surety during an inquiry into an offence alleged to have been committed by him, may direct that the recognisance of the surety be conditioned to secure that the person so bailed appears at every time and place to which during the course of the proceedings the hearing may be from time to time adjourned and also before the Crown Court in the event of the person so bailed being committed for trial there<sup>4</sup>.

Where a person is directed to appear or a recognisance is conditioned for a person's appearance<sup>5</sup>, the fixing at any time of the time for him next to appear is to be deemed to be a remand<sup>6</sup>; but nothing in the above provisions<sup>7</sup> deprives the court of power at any subsequent hearing to remand him afresh<sup>8</sup>.

1146. General limitation on remands.

A magistrates' court may not<sup>1</sup> remand a person for a period exceeding eight clear days<sup>2</sup>, except that:

- 1860 (1) if the court remands him on bail<sup>3</sup>, it may remand him for a longer period if he and the other party consent<sup>4</sup>;
- 1861 (2) where the court adjourns a trial<sup>5</sup>, the court may remand him for the period of the adjournment<sup>6</sup>;
- 1862 (3) where a person is charged with an offence triable either way<sup>7</sup>, then, if it falls to the court to try the case summarily but the court is not at the time so constituted, and sitting in such a place, as will enable it to proceed with the trial, the court may remand him until the next occasion on which it will be practicable for the court to be so constituted, and to sit in such a place, notwithstanding that the remand is for a period exceeding eight clear days<sup>8</sup>.

A magistrates' court having power to remand a person in custody may, if the remand is for a period not exceeding three clear days<sup>9</sup>, commit him to detention at a police station<sup>10</sup>. Where a person is so committed to detention at a police station:

- 1863 (a) he may not be kept in such detention unless there is a need for him to be so detained for the purpose of inquiries into other offences<sup>11</sup>;
- 1864 (b) if kept in such detention, he must be brought back before the magistrates' court which committed him as soon as that need ceases<sup>12</sup>;
- 1865 (c) he is to be treated as a person in police detention to whom the duties under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984<sup>13</sup> relate<sup>14</sup>; and
- 1866 (d) his detention is subject to review at the times set out<sup>15</sup> in that Act<sup>16</sup>.

1 He is subject to the provisions of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128A (as added and amended) and s 129 (prospectively amended): see PARAS 1147-1148 post.

'Other offences' is not to be given a restricted meaning but includes offences relating to those with which the defendant has already been charged; and on an application for the defendant to be remanded in police detention, head (1) in the text requires merely that the magistrates are told whatever is directly pertinent to the question whether a need exists for the defendant to be detained at a police station for the purpose of inquiries into other offences: R v Bailey, R v Smith (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 365, CA.

Remand in custody for more than eight days.

1147. Remand in custody for more than eight days.

A magistrates' court may remand the defendant in custody for a period exceeding eight clear days if it has previously remanded him in custody for the same offence and he is before the court, but only if, after affording the parties an opportunity to make representations, it has set a date on which it expects that it will be possible for the next stage in the proceedings, other than a hearing relating to a further remand in custody or on bail, to take place, and only for a period ending not later than that date or for a period of 28 clear days, whichever is the less<sup>1</sup>. Nothing in the above provisions affects the right of the defendant to apply for bail during the period of remand<sup>2</sup>.

1 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128A(2) (s 128A added by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 155(1)). The Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128A (as added and amended) (see the text and notes 2, 3 infra) applies throughout England and Wales: s 128A(1) (as so added; and amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 ss 52(2), 80, Sch 5); Magistrates' Courts (Remand in Custody) Order 1991, SI 1991/2667 (amended by SI 1997/35; SI 2005/617). Where the court is considering exercising this power, it must have regard to the total length of time which the defendant would then spend in custody: see the Bail Act 1976 s 4(5), Sch 1 para 9B (as added); and PARA 1170 post.

1148. Further remand.

If a magistrates' court is satisfied<sup>1</sup> that any person who has been remanded<sup>2</sup> is unable by reason of illness or accident<sup>3</sup> to appear or be brought before the court at the expiration of the period for which he was remanded, the court may, in his absence, remand him for a further time<sup>4</sup>.

The power of the court so to remand a person on bail for a further time includes power to enlarge the recognisance of any surety for him to a later time<sup>5</sup>.

Where a person remanded on bail is bound to appear before a magistrates' court at any time and the court has no power so to remand him, the court may in his absence appoint a later time as the time at which he is to appear and enlarge the recognisances of any sureties for him to appear at that time; and the appointment of the time or the enlargement is deemed to be a further remand<sup>6</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court sends a person for trial on bail and the recognisance of any surety for him has been conditioned<sup>7</sup>, the court may, in the absence of the surety, enlarge his recognisance so that he is bound to secure that the person so sent for trial appears also before the Crown Court<sup>8</sup>.

1 The court must have been given solid grounds on which it can found a reliable opinion: R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p Grogan (1990) 155 JP 450, DC.

2 As to remand see PARA 1144 et seq ante.

3 'Accident' includes the situation where the prison authorities cannot produce the defendant because he has been remanded in custody on the same day in relation to other charges by another court: R v Jenkins [1997] COD 38, DC.

4 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 129(1). Section 128(6) (as amended) (see PARA 1146 ante) does not apply: s 129(1). Where a magistrates' court further remands a person on bail in his absence under s 129 (as amended; prospectively amended), it must give him, and his sureties if any, notice thereof: CrimPR 19.3(b). A high test is imposed by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 129 (as amended; prospectively amended) before a defendant can be remanded in his absence by reason of 'accident', and the material before the court must show a good deal more than inconvenience or minor impediment: R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p Grogan (1990) 155 JP 450, DC.

At the date at which this volume states the law this substitution has effect only in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) or s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARAS 1132-1133 ante): Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 9) Order 2005, SI 2005/1267, Schedule para 1. A magistrates' court adjourning a case<sup>1</sup>, and remanding the defendant in custody, may, if he has attained the age of 17, order that he be brought up for any subsequent remands before an alternate magistrates' court nearer to the prison where he is to be confined while on remand<sup>2</sup>. A court which, on adjourning a case, so makes an order, is not required at that time to fix the time and place at which the case is to be resumed but must do so as soon as practicable after the order ceases to be in force<sup>3</sup>.

The order must require the defendant to be brought before the alternate court at the end of the period of remand or such earlier time as the alternate court may require<sup>4</sup>.

While the order is in force, the alternate court, to the exclusion of the court which made the order, has all the powers in relation to further remand (whether in custody or on bail) and the grant of a right to representation funded by the Legal Services Commission as part of the Criminal Defence Service<sup>5</sup> which that court would have had but for the order<sup>6</sup>.

The alternate court may, on remanding the defendant in custody, require him to be brought before the court which made the order at the end of the period of remand or at such earlier time as that court may require; and, if the alternate court does so, or the defendant is released on bail<sup>7</sup>, the order ceases to have effect<sup>8</sup>.

1 The case adjourned under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 5 (as amended; prospectively repealed) (adjournment of inquiry: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 710), s 10(1) (adjournment of summary trial: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 707), s 17C (as added) (intention as to plea: adjournment: see PARA 1107 ante), or s 18(4) (as amended) (see PARA 1109 ante): see s 130(1) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 49(5)(b), (6)). As from a day to be appointed head (1) supra is repealed, and a court may additionally adjourn a case under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 24C (prospectively added) (intention as to plea by children or young person adjournment: see PARA 1117 ante): see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 51(1), (9), Sch 37 Pt 4 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 130(1) (as amended; prospectively amended: see note 1 supra).

A court making such an order or remanding the defendant under s 130(4) (see the text and notes 7-8 infra) must at once notify the terms of the order or remand to the court before which the defendant is to be brought for the hearing on any application for a subsequent remand or, as the case may be, before which any such application is to be made without his being brought before it: s 130(5), Sch 5 para 3 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 59, Sch 9 para 7).

Where a magistrates' court is satisfied as mentioned in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128(3A) (as added and amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1144 ante), s 130(1) (as amended; prospectively amended) has effect as if for the words 'he be brought up for any subsequent remands before' there were substituted the words 'applications for any subsequent remands be made to': s 130(4A)(a) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 Sch 9 para 5).

3 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 5 para 1.

4 Ibid s 130(2). Where a magistrates' court is satisfied as mentioned in s 128(3A) (as added and amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1144 ante), s 130(2) has effect as if for the words 'the defendant to be brought before' there were substituted the words 'an application for a further remand to be made to': s 130(4A) (b) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 Sch 9 para 5).

5 See LEGAL AID vol 65 (2008) PARA 120 et seq.

6 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 130(3) (amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 24, Sch 4 para 18).

7 A person to whom an order under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 130(1) (as amended; prospectively amended) (see notes 1, 2 supra) applies must, if released on bail, be bailed to appear before the court which made the order: Sch 5 para 4.

8 Ibid s 130(4). Where a magistrates' court is satisfied as mentioned in s 128(3A) (as added and amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1144 ante), s 130(4) has effect as if for the words 'him to be brought before' there were substituted the words 'an application for a further remand to be made to': s 130(4A)(c) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 Sch 9 para 5).

1150. Transfer of remand hearings; procedure.

Where a magistrates' court orders<sup>1</sup> that a defendant who has been remanded in custody<sup>2</sup> be brought up for any subsequent remands before an alternate magistrates' court, the court officer for the first-mentioned court must, as soon as practicable after the making of the order and in any case within two days<sup>3</sup> thereafter, send to the court officer of the alternate court:

- 1867 (1) a statement indicating the offence or offences charged<sup>4</sup>;
- 1868 (2) a copy of the record relating to the withholding of bail in respect of the defendant when he was last remanded in custody made by the first-mentioned court in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976<sup>5</sup>;
- 1869 (3) a copy of any representation order<sup>6</sup> previously made in the same case<sup>7</sup>;
- 1870 (4) a copy of any application for a representation order<sup>8</sup>;
- 1871 (5) if the first-mentioned court has made an order<sup>9</sup> for the removal of restrictions on reports of committal proceedings<sup>10</sup>, a statement to that effect<sup>11</sup>;
- 1872 (6) a statement indicating whether or not the defendant has a solicitor acting for him in the case and has consented to the hearing and determination in his absence of any application for his remand on an adjournment<sup>12</sup> of the case, together with a statement indicating whether or not that consent has been withdrawn<sup>13</sup>;
- 1873 (7) a statement indicating the occasions, if any, on which the defendant has been remanded<sup>14</sup> for more than eight days without being brought before the first-mentioned court<sup>15</sup>;
- 1874 (8) if the first-mentioned court remands the defendant for more than eight days on the occasion upon which it makes the order<sup>16</sup> transferring remand hearings, a statement indicating the date set<sup>17</sup> for the next stage in the proceedings, other than a hearing relating to a further remand in custody or on bail<sup>18</sup>.

The court officer for an alternate magistrates' court before which a defendant who has been remanded in custody is brought up for any subsequent remands in pursuance of such an order<sup>19</sup> must, as soon as practicable after the order ceases to be in force and in any case within two days<sup>20</sup> thereafter, send to the court officer for the magistrates' court which made the order:

- 1875 (a) a copy of the record relating to the grant or withholding of bail in respect of the defendant when he was last remanded in custody or on bail made by the alternate court in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976<sup>21</sup>;
- 1876 (b) a copy of any representation order made by the alternate court<sup>22</sup>;
- 1877 (c) a copy of any application for a representation order made to the alternate court<sup>23</sup>;
- 1878 (d) if the alternate court has made an order<sup>24</sup> for the removal of restrictions on reports of committal proceedings, a statement to that effect<sup>25</sup>;
- 1879 (e) a statement such as is mentioned in head (6) above<sup>26</sup>;
- 1880 (f) a statement indicating the occasions, if any, on which the defendant has been remanded<sup>27</sup> by the alternate court without being brought before that court<sup>28</sup>.

Remand of defendant already in custody.

1151. Remand of defendant already in custody.

When a magistrates' court remands a defendant in custody<sup>1</sup> and he is already detained under a custodial sentence, the period for which he is remanded may be up to 28 clear days<sup>2</sup>. However, the court must inquire as to the expected date of his release from that detention; and, if it appears that it will be before 28 clear days have expired, he may not be remanded in custody for more than eight clear days or (if longer) a period ending with that date<sup>3</sup>.

2 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 131(1).

3 Ibid s 131(2). Where the defendant is serving a sentence of imprisonment to which an intermittent custody order under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 183 (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 100) relates, the reference in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 131(2) to the expected date of his release is to be read as a reference to the expected date of his next release on licence: s 131(2A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 304, Sch 32 para 29). This provision is in force for the purposes of the passing of a sentence of imprisonment to which an intermittent custody order relates and the release on licence of a person serving such a sentence: Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 1) Order 2003, SI 2003/3282, art 2, Sch.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1152. Power of Secretary of State to set time limits in relation to preliminary stages of criminal proceedings.

(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

1152. Power of Secretary of State to set time limits in relation to preliminary stages of criminal proceedings.

The Secretary of State may by regulations make provision, with respect to any specified<sup>1</sup> preliminary stage<sup>2</sup> of proceedings for an offence, as to the maximum period:

- 1881 (1) to be allowed to the prosecution to complete that stage<sup>3</sup>;
- 1882 (2) during which the defendant may, while awaiting completion of that stage, be in the custody of a magistrates' court<sup>4</sup> or in the custody of the Crown Court<sup>5</sup>, in relation to that offence<sup>6</sup>.

The regulations may in particular:

- 1883 (a) be made so as to apply only in relation to proceedings instituted in specified areas, or proceedings of, or against persons of, specified classes or descriptions<sup>7</sup>;
- 1884 (b) make different provision with respect to the proceedings instituted in different areas, or different provision with respect to proceedings of, or against persons of, different classes or descriptions<sup>8</sup>;
- 1885 (c) make such provision with respect to the procedure to be followed in criminal proceedings as the Secretary of State considers appropriate in consequence of any other provision of the regulations<sup>9</sup>;
- 1886 (d) provide for the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 and the Bail Act 1976 to apply in relation to cases to which custody<sup>10</sup> or overall time limits<sup>11</sup> apply subject to such modifications as may be specified (being modifications which the Secretary of State considers necessary in consequence of any provision made by the regulations)<sup>12</sup>; and
- 1887 (e) make such transitional provision in relation to proceedings instituted before the commencement of any provision of the regulations as the Secretary of State considers appropriate<sup>13</sup>.

The appropriate court<sup>14</sup> may, at any time before the expiry<sup>15</sup> of a time limit so imposed, extend, or further extend, that limit; but the court may not do so unless it is satisfied<sup>16</sup>:

- 1888 (i) that the need for the extension is due to:
- 77
- 119. (A) the illness or absence of the defendant, a necessary witness, a judge or a magistrate<sup>17</sup>;
  - 120. (B) a postponement which is occasioned by the ordering by the court of separate trials in the case of two or more defendants or two or more offences<sup>18</sup>; or
  - 121. (C) some other good and sufficient cause<sup>19</sup>; and

1889 (ii) that the prosecution<sup>20</sup> has acted with all<sup>21</sup> due diligence and expedition<sup>22</sup>.

Where, in relation to any proceedings for an offence, an overall time limit has expired before the completion of the stage of the proceedings to which the limit applies, the appropriate court must stay the proceedings<sup>23</sup>.

Where a person escapes from the custody of a magistrates' court or the Crown Court before the expiry of a custody time limit which applies in his case<sup>24</sup>, or a person who has been released on bail in consequence of the expiry of a custody time limit fails to surrender himself into the custody of the court at the appointed time or is arrested by a constable<sup>25</sup> for breach, or likely breach, of conditions of bail<sup>26</sup>, the regulations must, so far as they provide for any custody time limit in relation to the preliminary stage in question, be disregarded<sup>27</sup>.

Where a person escapes from the custody of a magistrates' court or the Crown Court, or a person who has been released on bail fails to surrender himself into the custody of the court at the appointed time, and is accordingly at large for any period<sup>28</sup>: (aa) the period for which the person is unlawfully at large; and (bb) such additional period (if any) as the appropriate court may direct, having regard to the disruption of the prosecution occasioned by the person's escape or failure to surrender, and to the length of the period mentioned in head (aa) above<sup>29</sup>, must be disregarded, so far as the offence in question is concerned, for the purposes of the overall time limit which applies in his case in relation to the stage which the proceedings have reached at the time of the escape or, as the case may be, at the appointed time<sup>30</sup>.

Any period during which proceedings for an offence are adjourned pending the determination of a prosecution appeal<sup>31</sup> must be disregarded, so far as the offence is concerned, for the purposes of the overall time limit and the custody time limit which applies to the stage which the proceedings have reached when they are adjourned<sup>32</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court decides to extend, or further extend, a custody or overall time limit, or to give a direction under head (bb) above, the defendant may appeal against the decision to the Crown Court<sup>33</sup>; and, where a magistrates' court refuses to extend, or further extend, a custody or overall time limit, or to give such a direction, the prosecution may appeal against the refusal to the Crown Court<sup>34</sup>.

1 For these purposes, 'specified' means specified in the regulations: see the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11). As to the regulations see notes 3, 6 infra.

2 For these purposes, 'preliminary stage', in relation to any proceedings, does not include any stage of the proceedings after the start of the trial: see ibid s 22(11) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(1), (2)).

For the purposes of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22 (as amended), the start of a trial on indictment is taken to occur at the time when a jury is sworn to consider the issue of guilt or fitness to plead ('the relevant time') or, if the court accepts a plea of guilty before the time when a jury is sworn, when that plea is accepted; but this is subject to the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 8 and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 30 (preparatory hearings: see PARA 1256 post): Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11A) (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(1), (3); and the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11A) amended, and s 22(11AA) added, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 49, 51). For these purposes, 'the time when a jury is sworn' includes the time when a jury would be sworn but for the making of an order under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 7 (ss 43-50) (not yet fully in force; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1284 post): Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11AA) (as so added). Because the preliminary stage of a trial on indictment ends 'at the time when a jury is sworn' to consider the issue of guilt, the custody limit does not continue contingently through the trial against the event of it aborting (ie the limit does not recommence if the defendant's trial is aborted): R v Leeds Crown Court, ex p Whitehead (1999) 164 JP 102, DC.

For the purposes of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22 (as amended), the start of a summary trial is taken to occur: (1) when the court begins to hear evidence for the prosecution at the trial or to consider whether to exercise its power under the Mental Health Act 1983 s 37(3) (power to make hospital order without convicting the defendant: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 332) (Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11B)(a) (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(1), (5))); or

(2) if the court accepts a plea of guilty without proceeding as mentioned in head (1) supra, when that plea is accepted: (Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11B)(b) (as so added)).

3 Ibid s 22(1)(a). At the date at which this volume states the law, there were no regulations in force under head (1) in the text. Regulations providing for overall time limits in youth courts, made pursuant to head (1) in the text and to the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22A(1) (as added) (see PARA 1157 post), were revoked as from 22 April 2003: Prosecution of Offences (Youth Courts Time Limits) (Revocation and Transitional Provisions) Regulations 2003, SI 2003/917.

4 For these purposes, 'custody' includes local authority accommodation to which a person is remanded or committed by virtue of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 s 23 (as substituted and amended) (remand to the care of local authorities: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 1247-1253); and references to a person being committed to custody are to be construed accordingly: see the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 100, Sch 11 para 36). A defendant who remains in custody because of inability to find a surety is in custody for the purposes of custody time limits: Re Ofili [1995] Crim LR 880, DC. 'Custody of a magistrates' court' means custody to which a person is committed in pursuance of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1144 et seq ante): see the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11).

5 For these purposes, 'custody of the Crown Court' includes custody to which a person is committed in pursuance of: (1) the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 6 (as amended; prospectively repealed) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 676); (2) s 43A (as added; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1261 post); (3) the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 5(3)(a) (prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1105 ante); or (4) the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 53(5), Sch 6 para 2(1)(a) (prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1105 ante). As from a day to be appointed heads (1), (3), (4) supra are repealed; and custody of the Crown Court only includes custody to which a person is committed in pursuance of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 43A (as added) (magistrates' court dealing with a person brought before it following his arrest in pursuance of a warrant issued by the Crown Court: see PARA 1261 post), or the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52 (as amended): see PARA 1132 ante: Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 170(1), Sch 15 para 104; and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(1), Sch 9 para 7; and prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 57(1), (5)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed except in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 or s 51A(3) (d) (as added) (see PARAS 1132-1133 ante): Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 9) Order 2005, SI 2005/1267, art 2, Schedule, Pt 1. See note 4 supra.

6 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(1). In exercise of such power the Secretary of State made the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299 (as amended): see PARAS 1153-1156 post.

For the purposes of the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 29(3) (as amended) (High Court to have power to make prerogative orders in relation to jurisdiction of the Crown Court in matters which do not relate to trial on indictment: see PARA 2013 post; and JUDICIAL REVIEW vol 61 (2010) PARA 709), the jurisdiction conferred on the Crown Court by the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22 (as amended) is to be taken to be part of its jurisdiction in matters other than those relating to trial on indictment: s 22(13). The purpose of s 22(13) is to permit the Divisional Court to deal with ancillary matters preceding trial: R v Bristol Crown Court, ex p Customs and Excise Comrs [1990] COD 11, DC. As to the minimum period which may elapse between a person's committal or being sent for trial and the commencement of the trial see PARA 1282 post. As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

7 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(2)(a) (substituted by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 43(1)).

8 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(2)(b) (substituted by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 43(1)).

9 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(2)(c).

10 For these purposes, 'custody time limit' means a time limit imposed by regulations made under ibid s 22(1)(b) (see head (2) in the text) or, where any such limit has been extended by a court under s 22(3) (as substituted) (see the text and notes 17-22 infra), the limit as so extended: s 22(11).

For the purposes of the application of any custody time limit in relation to a person who is in the custody of a magistrates' court or the Crown Court, all periods during which he is in the custody of the magistrates' court in respect of the same offence are to be aggregated and treated as a single continuous period; and all periods during which he is in the custody of the Crown Court in respect of the same offence are to be aggregated and treated similarly: s 22(12). All custody periods begin at the close of the day during which the defendant is first remanded and expire at the relevant midnight thereafter: R v Governor of Canterbury Prison, ex p Craig [1991] 2 QB 195, [1990] 2 All ER 654, DC.

11 For these purposes, 'overall time limit' means a time limit imposed by regulations made under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(1)(a) (see head (1) in the text) or, where any such time limit has been extended by a court under s 22(3) (as substituted) (see the text and notes 17-22 infra), the limit as so extended: s 22(11). At the date at which this volume states the law, no regulations were in force as to an overall time limit. Proceedings for an offence begin when the defendant is charged with the offence or, as the case may be, an information is laid, charging him with the offence: s 22(11ZA) (added by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 43(8)). As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

14 For these purposes, 'appropriate court' means: (1) where the defendant has been committed for trial (prospectively abolished by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 37 Pt 4), sent for trial or indicted for the offence, the Crown Court; and (2) in any other case, the magistrates' court specified in the summons or warrant in question or, where the defendant has already appeared or been brought before a magistrates' court, a magistrates' court for the same area: ibid s 22(11) (amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 67(3); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 57(1), (5)). Where the Crown Court is the appropriate court, an application for an extension may be heard by a Crown Court judge sitting in chambers: CrimPR 16.11(2)(f).

Where an application for an extension has been refused by a Crown Court judge, a further application may be made within the existing time limit, provided that it does not constitute an abuse of process; ordinarily it is such an abuse for the prosecution to re-apply (to the same or another judge) on essentially the same basis, but not where a judge has refused an extension on a fundamental mistake of fact: R v Bradford Crown Court, ex p Crossling [2000] 1 Cr App Rep 463, 163 JP 821, DC. Provided that it is made during the currency of an initial custody time limit or an extension thereof, more than one application for an extension may be made: R (on the application of Haque) v Central Criminal Court [2003] EWHC 2457 (Admin), [2004] Crim LR 298, [2003] 10 Archbold News 1.

15 If a custody time limit has expired without an application for an extension having been made, a court cannot grant an extension and must grant bail, but the expiry of one custody time limit does not bar detention under a different custody time limit at a later stage in the proceedings: R v Sheffield Justices, ex p Turner [1991] 2 QB 472, 93 Cr App Rep 180, DC.

18 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3)(a)(ii) (as substituted: see note 17 supra). See note 22 infra.

19 Ibid s 22(3)(a)(iii) (as substituted: see note 17 supra). What amounts to some other 'good and sufficient cause' is a matter for the court on the facts of the case; the unavailability of a courtroom may be such a cause but should be approached with caution: R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald [1999] 1 All ER 805, [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 409, DC. Before a court grants an extension because of the unavailability of a courtroom, or of a particular judge required to try the case, it should go to considerable lengths to avoid doing so; but, although generally in routine cases lack of resources is irrelevant, lack of resources cannot be ignored and on occasions of intense pressure on the court must be taken into account: R (on the application of Gibson) v Winchester Crown Court [2004] EWHC 361 (Admin), [2004] 3 All ER 475, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 234 (explaining R (on the application of Bannister) v Guildford Crown Court [2004] EWHC 221 (Admin), [2004] All ER (D) 229 (Feb), DC, at [11], [21]-[22] per May LJ. See also R (on the application of Eliot) v Reading Crown Court [2001] EWHC Admin 464, [2001] 4 All ER 625, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 32; R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Abu-Wardeh [1997] 1 All ER 159, [1997] 1 Cr App Rep 43, DC; R v Crown Court at Norwich, ex p Cox (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 145, 157 JP 593, DC.

The seriousness of the offence cannot of itself be good and sufficient cause, nor can the fact that the extension is only for a short period, nor can the need to protect the public: R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald supra. See also R v Governor of Winchester Prison, ex p Roddie [1991] 2 All ER 931, sub nom R v Crown Court at Southampton, ex p Roddie 93 Cr App Rep 190, DC; R v Sheffield Crown Court, ex p Headley [2000] 2 Cr App Rep 1, DC; R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Abu-Wardeh supra.

Considerations relating to bail are irrelevant: R v Sheffield Crown Court, ex p Headley supra; and see also R (on the application of Eliot) v Reading Crown Court supra. A reasonable requirement of the defence for time to consider the case may be a good and sufficient cause for an extension (McKay White v DPP [1989] Crim LR 375, DC); so may the desirability of trying co-defendants together (R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Abu-Wardeh supra); and so may the unexpected absence of a prosecution witness (R v Leeds Crown Court, ex p Redfearn [1998] COD 437, DC).

Even where a 'good cause' for an extension exists, the court must rigorously examine the circumstances to determine whether that cause is a 'sufficient cause' for any extension: R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald supra. See note 22 infra.

20     le those collectively responsible for the distinct stages in the conduct of the prosecution: R v Birmingham Crown Court, ex p Ricketts [1991] RTR 105n, DC. A forensic science laboratory is not part of the prosecution for these purposes, but this does not entitle the prosecution to refrain from taking reasonable steps to ensure that such a laboratory produces evidence within the relevant custody time limit: R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Johnson [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 51, DC.

21     The test of 'all due diligence and expedition' is an objective one, judged by the standards of a competent prosecutor, alert to his duty: R v Governor of Winchester Prison, ex p Roddie [1991] 2 All ER 931, sub nom R v Crown Court at Southampton, ex p Roddie 93 Cr App Rep 190, DC; R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald [1999] 1 All ER 805, [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 409, DC. It is not sufficient in itself that the prosecution has done its best in trying circumstances: R v Governor of Winchester Prison, ex p Roddie supra. The issue of 'due diligence and expedition' must be decided by reference to the expedition used in the stage of proceedings to which the particular time limit relates; lack of expedition at some earlier stage need not be taken into account, although there may be factual situations where it will be necessary to look at past history: R v Birmingham Crown Court, ex p Bell, R v Birmingham Crown Court, ex p Brown [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 363, 161 JP 345, DC.

'All due expedition' means all the expedition appropriate in the circumstances, one of which is the custody time limit: R v Crown Court at Norwich, ex p Parker (1992) 96 Cr App Rep 68, DC. The prosecution will not have acted with all due diligence and expedition if it unwarrantedly delays serving important evidence on the defence with consequent delay in the proceedings to enable the defence to consider it: R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Behbehani [1994] Crim LR 352, DC; and see also R (on the application of Holland) v Leeds Crown Court [2002] EWHC 1862 (Admin), [2003] Crim LR 272.

22     See the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3)(b) (as substituted: see note 17 supra).

In determining whether to extend a custody time limit, the court must give full weight to the overriding purpose of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted): (1) to ensure that the periods for which unconvicted defendants are held in custody are as short as reasonably and practicably possible; (2) to ensure that the prosecution prepare cases for trial with all due diligence and expedition; (3) to invest the court with a power and duty to control any extension of the prescribed maximum period: R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald [1999] 1 All ER 805, [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 409, DC. The court cannot grant an extension on the nod, even if the parties agree; it must address its mind to the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted); whether it is necessary to call evidence depends on the circumstances of the case; the court must remember that the time limits are a maximum and not a target: R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald supra.

Heads (i) and (ii) in the text are linked, in that the prosecution must show that the need for an extension does not arise from lack of due expedition or diligence on its part; the court is not obliged to refuse the extension of a custody time limit because the prosecution has been guilty of avoidable delay where that delay had had no effect whatever on the ability of the prosecution and the defence to be ready for trial on a predetermined date: R v Leeds Crown Court, ex p Baqoutie (1999) Times, 31 May, DC; R (on the application of Gibson) v Winchester Crown Court [2004] EWHC 361 (Admin), [2004] 3 All ER 475, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 234 (not following R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Bennett (1999) Times, 25 January, DC); R (on the application of Thomas) v Central Criminal Court, R (on the application of Stubbs) v Central Criminal Court [2006] All ER (D) 88 (Jul).

The prosecutor must make the application for an extension clearly and unmistakably; the defence must have an opportunity to raise objections and make representations; the terms of an order extending the limit must be clear and unambiguous, and the clerk of the court must ensure that a proper record is made of the order: Re Ward, Ward and Bond (1990) 155 JP 181, DC. The court must not only state its decision but also give its reasons for reaching it and (if an extension is granted) its reasons for holding that the conditions in the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted) (see the text and notes 17-21 supra) are satisfied: R v Crown Court at Chelmsford, ex p Mills (1999) 164 JP 1, DC; R v Manchester Crown Court, ex p McDonald supra.

Where a person is convicted of an offence in any proceedings, the exercise, in relation to any preliminary stage of those proceedings, of the power conferred by the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted) may not be called into question in any appeal against that conviction: s 22(10).

Applications under s 22(3) (as substituted) may be heard by a judge of the Crown Court sitting in chambers: CrimPR 16.11(2)(f). The notice requirements under the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 7 (as amended) (see PARA 1155 post) do not in any way limit the powers of the empowering statute; and the prosecution's failure to comply with reg 7 (as amended) does not deprive the court of its supervening discretion under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted): R v Governor of Canterbury Prison, ex p Craig [1991] 2 QB 195, [1990] 2 All ER 654, DC. Formal rules of evidence do not apply, but if it is necessary for the defendant to test any aspect of the application for an extension, the means must be provided to enable him to do that: Wildman v DPP [2001] Crim LR 565, DC.

An appeal under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(8) (as amended) may not be commenced after the expiry of the limit in question; but, where such an appeal is commenced before the expiry of the limit, the limit is deemed not to have expired before the determination or abandonment of the appeal: s 22(9). NOTE 6--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

NOTES 16, 22--CrimPR 16.11 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, r 16.11.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/16. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1153. Custody time limits in magistrates' courts.

1153. Custody time limits in magistrates' courts.

The maximum period<sup>1</sup> during which a person accused of an indictable offence other than treason may be in the custody of a magistrates' court in relation to that offence while awaiting completion of any preliminary stage of the proceedings is as follows<sup>2</sup>.

In the case of an offence triable either way<sup>3</sup>, the maximum period of custody between the defendant's first appearance<sup>4</sup> and the start of summary trial<sup>5</sup> or, as the case may be, the time when the court decides whether or not to commit<sup>6</sup> the defendant to the Crown Court for trial<sup>7</sup> is 70 days<sup>8</sup>. However, if, before the expiry of 56 days following the day of the defendant's first appearance, the court decides to proceed to summary trial<sup>9</sup>, the maximum period of custody between the defendant's first appearance and the start of the summary trial is 56 days<sup>10</sup>.

In the case of an offence triable on indictment exclusively, the maximum period of custody between the defendant's first appearance and the time when the court decides whether or not to commit the defendant to the Crown Court for trial is 70 days<sup>11</sup>. Where a new charge is preferred against a person held in custody subject to this time limit, that offence attracts a fresh custody time limit provided that the new offence is a different offence in law to the original offence charged and not simply a restatement of the original offence with different particulars and that bringing the new charge does not amount to an abuse of process<sup>12</sup>.

In the case of a summary offence, the maximum period of custody beginning with the defendant's first appearance and ending with the date of the start of the summary trial is 56 days<sup>13</sup>.

1 For these purposes, any maximum period set during which a person may be in the custody of a court does not include the day on which the custody commenced: Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 2(4).

2 Ibid reg 4(1) (amended by SI 1991/1515).

3 For the meaning of 'offences triable either way' see PARA 1102 note 4 ante. 'Offence triable either way' includes in this context in the case of a defendant who is under 18 an offence which is triable only on indictment in the case of an adult but which, in the case of a child or young person, may be tried summarily: R v Stratford Youth Court, ex p S (A Minor) [1998] 1 WLR 1758, 162 JP 552, DC.

4 For these purposes, a reference to a person's first appearance in relation to proceedings in a magistrates' court for an offence is: (1) in a case where that person has made an application under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 43B (as added) (see PARA 1177 post), a reference to the time when he appears before the court on the hearing of that application; (2) in a case where that person appears or is brought before the court in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976 s 5B (as added) (see PARA 1175 post) and the decision which is to be, or has been, reconsidered under that provision is the decision of a constable, a reference to the time when he so appears or is brought; and (3) in any other case, a reference to the time when first he appears or is brought before the court on an information charging him with that offence: Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 2(2) (substituted by SI 1995/555). As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

5 For these purposes, a reference to the start of a summary trial is to be construed in accordance with the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11B) (as added) (see PARA 1152 note 2 ante): Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 2(3) (substituted by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(4)(a)).

6 As from a day to be appointed committal for trial (see PARA 1105 ante) is abolished: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

7 These provisions have effect as if any reference therein to the time when the court decides whether or not to commit the defendant to the Crown Court for trial were a reference: (1) where a court proceeds to inquire into an information as examining justices in pursuance of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 6(1) (as amended; prospectively repealed) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 676), to the time when it begins to hear evidence for the prosecution at the inquiry; (2) where a notice has been given under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 4(1)(c) (as amended) (see PARA 1105 ante), to the date on which notice of transfer was given: Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 4(5) (substituted by SI 1989/767).

8 Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 4(2) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(4)(b); SI 1989/767; SI 1991/1515). The period spent by a person serving a sentence for another offence must be taken into account (ie the custody time limit continues to run) when custody time limits are calculated: R v Peterborough Crown Court, ex p L [2000] Crim LR 470, DC. Trial dates ought to be fixed within the relevant custody time limit: R v Worcester Crown Court, ex p Norman [2000] 3 All ER 267, [2000] 2 Cr App Rep 33, DC.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1154. Custody time limits in the Crown Court.

1154. Custody time limits in the Crown Court.

Where a person accused of an indictable offence other than treason is committed<sup>1</sup> to the Crown Court for trial or a bill of indictment is preferred against such a person by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>2</sup>, the maximum period<sup>3</sup> during which he may be in the custody of the Crown Court in relation to that offence, or any other offence included in the indictment preferred against him, while awaiting the preliminary stage of the proceedings, is as follows<sup>4</sup>.

The maximum period of custody between the time when the defendant is committed for trial and the start of the trial<sup>5</sup> or, where a bill of indictment is preferred against him by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court, between the preferment of the bill and the start of the trial, is 112 days<sup>6</sup>.

Where, following a committal for trial, the bill of indictment preferred against the defendant, not being a bill of indictment preferred by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>7</sup>, contains a count charging an offence for which he was committed for trial at that committal together with a count charging an offence for which he was committed for trial on a different occasion, the maximum period of custody applies in relation to each offence separately<sup>8</sup>.

Where, following a committal for trial, a bill of indictment is preferred by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>9</sup> and the bill does not contain a count charging an offence for which he was not committed for trial, the maximum period of custody between the preferment of the bill and the start of the trial is 112 days less any period, or the aggregate of any periods, during which the defendant has, since the committal, been in the custody of the Crown Court in relation to an offence for which he was committed for trial<sup>10</sup>.

Where, following a committal for trial, the bill of indictment preferred against the defendant, not being a bill preferred by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>11</sup>, contains a count charging an offence for which he was not committed for trial, the maximum period of custody between the preferment of the bill and the start of the trial or, if the count was inserted to the bill after its preferment, between that addition and the start of the trial, is 112 days less any period, or the aggregate of any periods, during which he has, since the committal, been in the custody of the Crown Court in relation to an offence for which he was committed for trial<sup>12</sup>.

Where a defendant is sent for trial<sup>13</sup>, the maximum period of custody between the defendant being sent to the Crown Court by a magistrates' court for an offence and the start of the trial in relation to it, is 182 days less any period, or the aggregate of any periods, during which the defendant has, since that first appearance<sup>14</sup> for the offence, been in the custody of the magistrates' court<sup>15</sup>.

Where, following a sending for trial, a bill of indictment is preferred by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>16</sup> and the bill does not contain a count charging an offence for which he was not sent for trial, the maximum period of custody between the preferment of the bill and the start of the trial is the maximum period of custody as provided above<sup>17</sup> (after making any deductions so required<sup>18</sup>) less any period, or the aggregate of any periods, during which the accused has, since he was sent for trial, been in the custody of the Crown Court in relation to an offence for which he was sent for trial<sup>19</sup>.

Where, following a sending for trial, the bill of indictment preferred against the defendant (not being a bill preferred by the direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court) contains a count charging an offence for which he was not sent for trial, the maximum period of custody: (1) between the preferment of the bill and the start of the trial; or (2) if the count was added to the bill after its preferment, between that addition and the start of the trial, is to be the maximum period of custody as provided for above<sup>20</sup> (after making any deductions so required<sup>21</sup>) less any period, or the aggregate of any periods, during which he has, since being sent for trial, been in the custody of the Crown Court in relation to the offence for which he was previously sent for trial<sup>22</sup>.

1 As from a day to be appointed committal for trial (see PARA 1105 ante) is abolished: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 Ie under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (as amended): see PARA 1206 head (3) post.

3 As to the calculation of the maximum period see PARA 1153 note 1 ante.

4 Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 5(2) (amended by SI 1991/1515). See the cases cited in PARA 1153 note 8 ante. These provisions have effect, where a notice of transfer (see PARA 1105 ante) is given in respect of a case, as if references to committal for trial and to offences for which a person was or was not committed for trial included references to the giving of notice of transfer and to charges contained or not contained in the notice of transfer: Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 5(6A) (added by SI 1989/767). As from a day to be appointed notices of transfer are abolished: Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

5 For these purposes, a reference to the start of the trial is to be construed in accordance with the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(11A) (as added and amended) (see PARA 1152 note 2 ante): Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 2(3) (substituted by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 71(4)(a)).

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1155. Application for extension of custody time limit.

1155. Application for extension of custody time limit.

An application to a court for the extension or further extension of a custody time limit<sup>1</sup> may be made orally or in writing<sup>2</sup>. The prosecution must: (1) not less than five days before making such an application in the Crown Court; and (2) not less than two days before making such an application in a magistrates' court, give notice in writing to the defendant or his representative and to the proper officer of the court<sup>3</sup> stating that it intends to make such an application<sup>4</sup>. However, it is not necessary for the prosecution to comply with this requirement if the defendant or his representative has informed the prosecution that he does not require such notice<sup>5</sup>. If the court is satisfied that it is not practicable in all the circumstances for the prosecution so to give notice, the court may direct that the prosecution need not comply with that requirement or that the minimum period of notice required to be so given is to be such lesser period as the court may specify<sup>6</sup>.

2    Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 7(1).

3    For these purposes, 'the proper officer of the court' means, in relation to an application to the Crown Court, the appropriate officer of the court and, in relation to an application to a magistrates' court, the clerk of the court: ibid reg 7(2A) (added by SI 1989/767). If the prosecution is uncertain whether or not it will need to make such an application, it is not necessary to give a contingent notice: R v Governor of Canterbury Prison, ex p Craig [1991] 2 QB 195, [1990] 2 All ER 654, DC.

6    Ibid reg 7(4). Regulation 7 (as amended) (see the text and notes 1-5 supra) is directory and not mandatory, and does not limit the plain statutory power conferred by the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted) (see PARA 1152 ante) to extend the time limit at any time before its expiry: R v Governor of Canterbury Prison, ex p Craig [1991] 2 QB 195, [1990] 2 All ER 654, DC.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1156. Bail on expiry of Crown Court custody time limit.

1156. Bail on expiry of Crown Court custody time limit.

Where a defendant who is in custody pending trial in the Crown Court has the benefit of a custody time limit<sup>1</sup>, the prosecution must:

- 1890 (1) not less than five days before the expiry<sup>2</sup> of the time limit give notice in writing to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court and to the defendant or his representative stating whether or not it intends to ask the Crown Court to impose conditions on the grant of bail in respect of the defendant and, if it intends to do so, the nature of the conditions to be sought; and
- 1891 (2) make arrangements for the defendant to be brought before the Crown Court within the period of two days preceding the expiry of the time limit<sup>3</sup>.

If the Crown Court is satisfied that it is not practicable in all the circumstances for the prosecution to comply with head (1) above, the Crown Court may direct that the prosecution need not so comply or that the minimum period of notice so required is to be such lesser minimum period as the Crown Court may specify<sup>4</sup>.

On receiving notice under head (1) above stating that the prosecution intends to ask the Crown Court to impose conditions on the grant of bail, the defendant or his representative must:

- 1892 (a) give notice in writing to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court and to the prosecution that the defendant wishes to be represented at the hearing of the application; or
- 1893 (b) give notice in writing to the appropriate officer and to the prosecution stating that the defendant does not oppose the application; or
- 1894 (c) give to the appropriate officer, for the consideration of the Crown Court, a written statement of the defendant's reasons for opposing the application, at the same time sending a copy of the statement to the prosecution<sup>5</sup>.

The Crown Court may direct that the prosecution need not comply with head (2) above<sup>6</sup>.

On being notified that a defendant who is in custody pending trial has the benefit of a custody time limit and that the time limit is about to expire, the Crown Court must<sup>7</sup> grant him bail<sup>8</sup>, as from the expiry of the time limit, subject to a duty to appear before the Crown Court for trial<sup>9</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> A custody time limit which would otherwise expire on a Saturday, a Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday or any day which under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 is a bank holiday in England and Wales is to be treated as expiring on the next preceding day which is not one of those days: Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 2(5).

<sup>3</sup> Ibid reg 6(1). The prosecution need not comply with head (1) in the text if it has given notice under reg 7(2) (as amended) (see PARA 1155 ante) of its intention to make an application under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(3) (as substituted) (see PARA 1152 ante): Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 6(3).

7 Is subject to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25: see PARA 1170 post.

8 Is under the Bail Act 1976. The Bail Act 1976 applies in relation to cases to which a custody time limit applies subject to modifications: see the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 8 (amended by SI 1995/555).

9 Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 6(6) (amended by SI 1995/555). Once the time limit has expired it is the duty of the court, and not a prison governor, to direct release of the defendant on bail; if the prosecution fails to perform its duty under the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 6 (as amended) of ensuring that the defendant does not remain in custody beyond the relevant custody time limit, the defendant has no right of action for damages: Olotu v Home Office [1997] 1 All ER 385, [1997] 1 WLR 328, CA.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1157. Additional time limits for persons under the age of 18.

1157. Additional time limits for persons under the age of 18.

The Secretary of State may by regulations make provision: (1) with respect to a person under the age of 18 at the time of his arrest in connection with an offence, as to the maximum period to be allowed for the completion of the stage beginning with his arrest and ending with the date fixed for his first appearance in court in connection with the offence ('the initial stage'); (2) with respect to a person convicted of an offence who was under that age at the time of his arrest for the offence or (where he was not arrested for it) the laying of the information charging him with it, as to the period within which the stage between his conviction and his being sentenced for the offence should be completed<sup>1</sup>.

A magistrates' court may, at any time before the expiry of the time limit imposed by the regulations under head (1) above ('the initial stage time limit'), extend, or further extend, that limit<sup>2</sup>; but it may not do so unless it is satisfied that the need for the extension is due to some good and sufficient cause, and that the investigation has been conducted, and (where applicable) the prosecution has acted, with all due diligence and expedition<sup>3</sup>.

Where the initial stage time limit (whether as originally imposed or as extended or further extended<sup>4</sup>) expires before the person arrested is charged with the offence<sup>5</sup>, he may not be charged with it unless further evidence relating to it is obtained, and: (a) if he is then under arrest, he must be released; and (b) if he is then on bail<sup>6</sup>, his bail (and any duty or conditions to which it is subject) must be discharged<sup>7</sup>.

Where the initial stage time limit (whether as originally imposed or as extended or further extended) expires after the person arrested is charged with the offence but before the date fixed for his first appearance in court in connection with it, the court must stay the proceedings<sup>8</sup>.

Where a person escapes from arrest, or a person who has been released on bail<sup>9</sup> fails to surrender himself at the appointed time, and is accordingly unlawfully at large for any period, that period is to be disregarded, so far as the offence in question is concerned, for the purposes of the initial stage time limit<sup>10</sup>.

1 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22A(1) (s 22A added by Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 44). As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

The Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(2) (as amended) (see PARA 1152 ante) applies for the purposes of regulations under s 22A(1) (as added) as if the reference in s 22(2)(d) (see PARA 1152 ante) to custody or overall time limits were a reference to time limits imposed by the regulations, and the reference in s 22(2)(e) (see PARA 1152 ante) to proceedings instituted before the commencement of any provisions of the regulations were a reference to a stage begun before that commencement: s 22A(2) (as so added). At the date at which this volume states the law no regulations were in force under these provisions. The Prosecution of Offences (Youth Courts Time Limits) Regulations 1999, SI 1999/2743, which were made under s 22(1) (see PARA 1152 ante) and s 22A (as added), were revoked as from 22 April 2003, by the Prosecution of Offences (Youth Courts Time Limits) (Revocation and Transitional Provisions) Regulations 2003, SI 2003/917.

2 The provisions of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22(7)-(9) (s 22(7), (8) as amended) (see PARA 1152 ante) apply for the purposes of s 22A (as added), at any time after the person arrested has been charged with the offence in question, as if any reference (however expressed) to a custody or overall time limit were a reference to the initial stage time limit: s 22A(7) (as added: see note 1 supra).

3 Ibid s 22A(3) (as added: see note 1 supra). Where a person is convicted of an offence in any proceedings, the exercise of this power may not be called into question in any appeal against that conviction: s 22A(8) (as so added). Not every failure by the prosecution to comply with the time limits obliges the court to refuse an extension of time, but where there is a clear link between the prosecution's defaults and the need to extend time, the position will be different: R v Crown Court at Kingston, ex p Bell (2000) 164 JP 633.

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/(8) TIME LIMITS IN RELATION TO PRELIMINARY STAGES OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS/1158. Re-institution of stayed proceedings.

1158. Re-institution of stayed proceedings.

Where proceedings for an offence ('the original proceedings') are stayed by a court<sup>1</sup>, if: (1) in the case of proceedings conducted by the Director of Public Prosecutions, he or a Chief Crown Prosecutor so directs; (2) in the case of proceedings conducted by the Director of the Serious Fraud Office or the Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs, the Director of the Serious Fraud Office or the Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs so direct; or (3) in the case of proceedings not conducted as mentioned in head (1) or head (2) above, a person designated for the purpose by the Secretary of State so directs, fresh proceedings for the offence may be instituted within a period of three months (or such longer period as the court may allow) after the date on which the original proceedings were stayed by the court<sup>2</sup>.

Fresh proceedings must be instituted: (a) where the original proceedings were stayed by the Crown Court, by preferring a bill of indictment<sup>3</sup>; (b) where the original proceedings were stayed by a magistrates' court, by laying an information<sup>4</sup>. Where a person is convicted of an offence in fresh proceedings, the institution of those proceedings may not be called into question in any appeal against that conviction<sup>5</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid s 22B(1), (2) (s 22B added by Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 45); Commissioners for Revenue and Customs Act 2005 s 50(1), (7). Where fresh proceedings are instituted, anything done in relation to the original proceedings is to be treated as done in relation to the fresh proceedings if the court so directs or it was done by the prosecutor in compliance or purported compliance with the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 3 (as amended) (see PARA 1387 post), s 4 (as amended) (see PARA 1387 post), s 7A (as added) (see PARA 1391 post), or by the defendant in compliance or purported compliance with s 5 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1388 post) or s 6 (prospectively amended) (see PARA 1388 post): Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 22B(5) (as so added; and amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 para 17). As to the Commissioners for Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs see PARA 354 note 2 ante.

Fresh proceedings may be instituted in accordance with heads (1)-(3) and head (b) in the text notwithstanding anything in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 127(1) (limitation of time for taking proceedings: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 589): Prosecution of Offenders Act 1985 s 22B(4) (as so added).

(9) DISCONTINUANCE OF PROCEEDINGS

1159. Discontinuance of proceedings in magistrates' courts.

Where the Director of Public Prosecutions<sup>1</sup> has the conduct of proceedings for an offence, the following provisions apply in relation to the preliminary stages<sup>2</sup> of those proceedings<sup>3</sup>.

Where, at any time during the preliminary stages of the proceedings, the Director gives notice<sup>4</sup> to the designated officer for the court that he does not want the proceedings to continue, they are discontinued with effect from the giving of that notice but may be revived by notice given<sup>5</sup> by the defendant<sup>6</sup>. In any notice so given the Director must give reasons for not wanting the proceedings to continue<sup>7</sup>; and, on so giving notice, the Director must inform the defendant of the notice and of the defendant's right to require the proceedings to be continued, but the Director is not obliged to give the defendant any indication of his reasons for not wanting the proceedings to continue<sup>8</sup>. Where the Director has so given notice, the defendant must, if he wants the proceedings to continue, give notice to that effect to the designated officer for the court within the prescribed period<sup>9</sup>; and, where notice is so given, the proceedings continue as if no notice had been given by the Director<sup>10</sup>. Where the designated officer for the court has been so notified by the defendant, he must inform the Director<sup>11</sup>.

Where, in the case of a person charged with an offence after being taken into custody without a warrant<sup>12</sup>, the Director gives him notice, at a time when no magistrates' court has been informed of the charge, that the proceedings against him are discontinued, they are discontinued with effect from the giving of that notice<sup>13</sup>.

1 As to the Director of Public Prosecutions see PARAS 1066, 1080 ante.

2 For these purposes, 'preliminary stage' in relation to proceedings for an offence does not include: (1) in the case of a summary offence, any stage of the proceedings after the court has begun to hear evidence for the prosecution at the trial; (2) in the case of an indictable offence, any stage of the proceedings after the defendant has been committed for trial or the court has begun to hear evidence for the prosecution at a summary trial; (3) in the case of any offence, any stage of the proceedings after the defendant has been sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (prospectively amended) (see PARA 1131 ante) (no committal proceedings for indictable-only and related offences): Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(2) (amended by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 119, Sch 8 para 63). As from a day to be appointed this provision is substituted so as to provide that 'preliminary stage' means: (a) any stage of the proceedings after the court has begun to hear evidence for the prosecution at a summary trial of the offence; or (b) any stage of the proceedings after the accused has been sent for trial for the offence: Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(2) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 57(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law this substitution had been brought into force in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) (see PARA 1132 ante) or s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante) (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 9) Order 2005, SI 2005/1267, art 2, Schedule Pt 1), but no day had been appointed for other purposes.

3 Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(1). The discontinuance of any proceedings by virtue of s 23 (as amended) does not prevent the institution of fresh proceedings in respect of the same offence: s 23(9).

4 Notice under ibid s 23(3), (4), (7) (s 23(3), (7) as amended) (see the text and notes 5-6, 9-10, 13 infra) must be given in writing and must contain sufficient particulars to identify the particular offence to which it relates; and, without prejudice to any other lawful method of giving notice, may be given by post in a registered letter or by the recorded delivery service, in which case it is to be treated as having been given on the date on which it was received for dispatch by the postal operator concerned: CrimPR 8.2. For the meaning of 'postal operator' see the Postal Services Act 2000 s 125(1); and POST OFFICE vol 36(2) (Reissue) PARA 10. On giving notice under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(3) (as amended) or s 23(4), the Director of Public Prosecutions must inform any person who is detaining the defendant for the offence in relation to which the notice is given that he has given such notice and of the effect of the notice: CrimPR 8.3.

5     le under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(7) (as amended): see the text and note 10 infra.

6     Ibid s 23(3) (amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 90(1), Sch 13 paras 129, 131; and the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 290(1), (2)). On being given notice under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(3) (as amended) in relation to an offence for which the defendant has been granted bail by a court, the magistrates' court officer must inform any sureties of the defendant and any persons responsible for securing the defendant's compliance with any conditions of bail that he has been given such notice and of the effect of the notice: CrimPR 8.4. The power to discontinue proceedings under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(3) (as amended) is additional to the prosecution's pre-existing powers of discontinuance: R v DPP, ex p Cooke (1992) 95 Cr App Rep 233, DC.

9     For these purposes, 'prescribed' means prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Rules: Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(10) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 Sch 8 para 290(1), (3)). The period within which a defendant may give notice under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23(7) (as amended) (see the text and note 10 infra) that he wants proceedings against him to continue is 35 days from the date when the proceedings were discontinued under s 23 (as amended): CrimPR 8.1.

Where the Director of Public Prosecutions, or a public authority<sup>1</sup> has the conduct of proceedings for an offence, and the defendant has been sent for trial for the offence, and, at any time before the indictment is preferred, the Director or authority gives notice to the Crown Court sitting at the place specified in the notice of offence as the place of trial<sup>2</sup> that he or it does not want the proceedings to continue, they must be discontinued with effect from the giving of that notice<sup>3</sup>. The Director or authority must, in any notice so given, give reasons for not wanting the proceedings to continue<sup>4</sup>. HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (10) PROCEEDINGS AGAINST CORPORATIONS/1161. Proceedings against corporations.

(10) PROCEEDINGS AGAINST CORPORATIONS

1161. Proceedings against corporations.

A magistrates' court may commit a corporation for trial by an order in writing empowering the prosecutor to prefer a bill of indictment<sup>1</sup> in respect of the offence named in the order<sup>2</sup>. Such an order may not prohibit the inclusion in the bill of indictment of counts<sup>3</sup> that may be included in the bill in substitution for, or in addition to, counts charging the offence named in the order<sup>4</sup>. A representative<sup>5</sup> may on behalf of a corporation: (1) consent to the corporation being tried summarily; (2) enter a plea of guilty or not guilty on the trial by a magistrates' court of an information<sup>6</sup>.

Where a corporation and an individual who has attained the age of 17 are jointly charged before a magistrates' court with an offence triable either way<sup>7</sup>, the court may not try either of the defendants summarily unless each of them consents to be so tried<sup>8</sup>.

1 As to bills of indictment see PARA 1205 post.

2 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 46, Sch 3 para 1(1). The order must be properly authenticated: R v H Sherman Ltd [1949] 2 KB 674, 33 Cr App Rep 151, CCA; R v Deputy Recorder of Wolverhampton, ex p DPP [1951] 1 All ER 627n, 35 Cr App Rep 29.

The Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 (as amended) merely provides machinery enabling a corporation to be brought to trial; the provisions do not alter the law so as to render a corporation liable to be indicted where it was not previously liable: see R v Cory Bros & Co Ltd [1927] 1 KB 810; cf R v ICR Haulage Ltd [1944] KB 551, 30 Cr App Rep 31, CCA. As to the criminal liability of a corporation see PARA 38 ante.

Subject to the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 paras 1-4 (as amended), the provisions of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 relating to the trial of indictable offences apply to a corporation as they apply to an adult: see Sch 5 para 6 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 51(1), (13)(b)).

3 Ie under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2 (as amended): see PARA 1206 post.

4 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 para 1(2).

5 'Representative', in relation to a corporation, means a person duly appointed by the corporation to represent it for the purpose of doing any act or thing which the representative of a corporation is authorised to do, but a person so appointed is not, by virtue only of being so appointed, qualified to act for the corporation before any court for any other purpose: Criminal Justice Act 1925 s 33(6) (applied by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 para 8). The representative need not be appointed under the seal of the corporation, and a statement in writing purporting to be signed by a managing director of the corporation, or by any person (by whatever name called) having, or being one of the persons having, the management of the affairs of the corporation, to the effect that the person named in the statement has been appointed as the representative of the corporation for these purposes is admissible without further proof as prima facie evidence that that person has been so appointed: Criminal Justice Act 1925 s 33(6) (as so applied). Where a corporation appears by a solicitor it is advisable for the solicitor to be appointed as its representative: R v Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Co, R v LCC and London Tramways Co, *R v Manchester Corp*n, R v Ascanio Puck & Co and Paice (1912) 76 JP 487. As to service of summonses and other documents on a corporation see PARA 914 ante.

6 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 para 2 (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 47, Sch 1 para 13; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 51(1), (13)(a), Sch 37 Pt 4). Where a representative appears, any requirement of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 that anything is to be done in the presence of the defendant, or is to be read or said to him, is to be construed as a requirement that that thing is to be done in the presence of the representative or read or said to the representative: see Sch 3 para 3(1). However, where a representative does not appear, any such requirement, and any requirement that the consent of the defendant is to be obtained for summary trial, does not apply: see Sch 3 para 3(2). As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

7 For the meaning of 'offence triable either way' see PARA 1102 note 4 ante; and as to offences triable either way see PARA 1103 ante.

8 See the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 3 para 7.

(11) COMMITMENT TO CUSTODY AND SENDING FOR TRIAL ON BAIL

1162. Commitment to custody must be made by warrant.

A justice of the peace must issue a warrant of commitment<sup>1</sup> when committing a person to:

- 1895 (1) a prison<sup>1</sup>;
- 1896 (2) a young offender institution<sup>2</sup>;
- 1897 (3) a remand centre<sup>3</sup>;
- 1898 (4) detention at a police station<sup>4</sup>; or
- 1899 (5) customs detention<sup>5</sup>.

A warrant of commitment must contain the following information: (a) the name or a description of the relevant person<sup>6</sup>; and (b) a statement of the offence with which the relevant person is charged<sup>7</sup>, or a statement of the offence of which the person to be committed or detained was convicted<sup>8</sup>, or any other ground on which the warrant is issued<sup>9</sup>.

The person executing the warrant is required to take the relevant person to the prison or place of detention specified in the warrant<sup>10</sup>. But where it is not immediately practicable to do so, or where there is some other good reason, the relevant person may be taken to any prison or place where he may be lawfully detained until such time when he can be taken to the prison or place specified in the warrant<sup>11</sup>.

1 A warrant of commitment must require:

- 528 (1) the persons to whom it is directed: (a) to arrest the relevant person, if he is at large; (b) to take him to the prison or place specified in the warrant; and (c) to deliver him with the warrant to the governor or keeper of that prison or place (CrimPR 18.6(1)(a)); and
- 529 (2) the governor or keeper to keep the relevant person in custody at that prison or place for as long as the warrant requires, or until he is delivered, in accordance with the law, to the court or other proper place or person (CrimPR 18.6(1)(b)).

For the meaning of the 'relevant person' see PARA 920 note 9 ante.

Where the justice issuing a warrant of commitment or detention is aware that the relevant person is already detained in a prison or other place of detention, the warrant must be delivered to the governor or keeper of that prison or place: CrimPR 18.6(2).

4 CrimPR 18.4(d). Detention at a police station as referred to in the text is detention under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128(7) (see PARA 1146 ante).

5 CrimPR 18.4(e). Customs detention as referred to in the text is detention under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 152 (see PARA 770 ante).

6 CrimPR 18.9(a).

7 CrimPR 18.9(b)(i).

8 CrimPR 18.9(b)(ii).

9 CrimPR 18.9(c).

10 CrimPR 18.12(1), (2). The governor or keeper of the prison or place to which the relevant person is delivered must give a receipt on delivery: CrimPR 18.12(6).

11 CrimPR 18.12(3). If (and for as long as) the relevant person is detained in a place other than the one specified in the warrant, the warrant has effect as if it specified the place where he is in fact being detained: CrimPR 18.12(4). The court must be kept informed of the prison or place where the relevant person is in fact being detained: CrimPR 18.12(5).

HEARING, PLEA AND ALLOCATION OF PROCEEDINGS/ (12) OFFENCES AGAINST CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS/1164. Procedural provisions.

(12) OFFENCES AGAINST CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS

1164. Procedural provisions.

Special statutory provisions<sup>1</sup>, mainly of a procedural nature, apply to the prosecution of certain offences<sup>2</sup> involving the death of or bodily injury to a child<sup>3</sup> or young person<sup>4</sup>.

1 The Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 14(1), (2) (as amended) (charging offences in respect of two or more children or young persons in one information or written charge or in one summons or requisition: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1277); s 14(4) (charging continuous offence: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1277); s 41 (proceedings determined in absence of child or young person in respect of whom an offence was committed: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1277); s 42 (as amended) and s 43 (taking of depositions of children and young persons in respect of whom offences have been committed and admission of depositions in evidence: see PARA 1534 post); s 99(2) (as amended) (where a charge or indictment alleges that a person in respect of whom an offence has been committed is under a specified age, there is a rebuttable presumption that the person is under that age: see PARA 1376 post; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1243); s 99(3) (where a charge or indictment alleges that a person in respect of whom an offence was committed was a child, or young person, and the offence could equally have been committed against a young person, or a child, it is no defence to prove that the person concerned was a young person, or a child: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1243).

2 The offences are listed in ibid Sch 1 (amended by the Sexual Offences Act 1956 ss 48, 51, Schs 3, 4; the Suicide Act 1961 s 2(3), Sch 1 Pt I; the Protection of Children Act 1978 s 1(5); the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 170, Sch 15 paras 8, 9, Sch 16; the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 139, Sch 6 para 7; the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 58(1), Sch 10 para 2). They are:

- 530 (1) the murder (see PARA 89 et seq ante) or manslaughter (see PARA 92 et seq ante) of a child or young person, including aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring the suicide (see PARA 106 ante) of a child or young person;
- 531 (2) infanticide (see PARA 103 ante);
- 532 (3) an offence under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 (causing or allowing the death of a child or vulnerable adult: see PARA 107 ante), in respect of a child or young person;
- 533 (4) an offence under the Offences against the Person Act 1861 s 27 (exposing or abandoning child under two: see PARA 143 note 6 ante) or s 56 (repealed), and an offence against a child or young person under s 5 (manslaughter: see PARA 93 ante);
- 534 (5) common assault, or battery (see PARA 147 ante);
- 535 (6) any offence under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 1 (as amended) (cruelty to persons under 16: see PARA 143 ante); s 3 (as amended) (allowing persons under 16 to be in brothels: see PARA 222 ante); s 4 (as amended) (allowing persons under 16 to be used for begging: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARA 619); s 11 (as amended) (exposing children under seven to risk of burning: see PARA 144 ante); or s 23 (as amended) (persons under 16 taking part in dangerous performances: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 773);
- 536 (7) any offence against a child or young person under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 ss 1-41, 47-53, 57-61, 66, 67 (see PARA 165 et seq ante), or any attempt to commit such an offence;

- 537 (8) any offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 62 or s 63 (see PARAS 231-232 ante) where the intended offence was an offence against a child or young person, or any attempt to commit such an offence;
- 538 (9) any offence under the Protection of Children Act 1978 s 1(1)(a) (as amended) (taking or permitting to be taken any indecent photograph of a child under the age of 16: see PARA 757 ante);
- 539 (10) any offence under the Child Abduction Act 1984 Pt 1 (ss 1-5) (as amended) (see PARAS 137, 141 ante);
- 540 (11) any other offence involving bodily injury to a child or young person.

As to whether impending danger constitutes 'bodily injury' to a child for these purposes see R v Moore [1954] 2 All ER 189, 38 Cr App Rep 95.

1165-1176 In General

For bail decisions relating to persons aged under 18 who are accused of offences mentioned in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 see Bail Act 1976 s 9A (added by Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 12 para 3).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1166. Meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings'.

1166. Meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings'.

'Bail in criminal proceedings' means:

1900 (1) bail<sup>1</sup> grantable in or in connection with proceedings for an offence<sup>2</sup> to a person who is accused or convicted<sup>3</sup> of the offence<sup>4</sup>; or

1901 (2) bail grantable in connection with an offence to a person who is under arrest for the offence or for whose arrest for the offence a warrant, indorsed for bail<sup>5</sup>, is being issued<sup>6</sup>; or

1902 (3) bail grantable in connection with extradition proceedings<sup>7</sup> for an offence<sup>8</sup>.

1 In the Bail Act 1976, 'bail' means bail grantable under the law, including common law, for the time being in force: s 1(2).

2 For these purposes, 'offence' includes an alleged offence: ibid s 2(2).

3 For these purposes, unless the context otherwise requires, 'conviction' includes:

541 (1) a finding of guilt (ibid s 2(1)(a));

542 (2) a finding that a person is not guilty by reason of insanity (s 2(1)(b));

543 (3) a finding under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11(1) (remand for medical examination: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 723) that the person in question did the act or made the omission charged (Bail Act 1976 s 2(1)(c) (amended by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 50(1), (2)));

544 (4) a conviction for an offence committed for which an order is made discharging the offender absolutely or conditionally (Bail Act 1976 s 2(1)(d) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 304, 332, Sch 32 paras 20, 21(1), (2), Sch 37 Pt 7); Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 8 and Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/950, art 2(1), Sch 2 para 5(1), (2)), and 'convicted' is to be construed accordingly: Bail Act 1976 s 2(1).

4 Ibid s 1(1)(a).

5 As to warrants indorsed for bail see PARA 919 ante.

6 Bail Act 1976 s 1(1)(b).

7 'Extradition proceedings' means proceedings under the Extradition Act 2003 (see EXTRADITION): Bail Act 1976 s 2(2) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (3)).

8 Bail Act 1976 s 1(1)(c) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (2)). Except as provided by the Bail Act 1976 s 13(3) (bail grantable by the Courts-Martial Appeal Court), s 1 does not apply to bail in or in connection with proceedings outside England and Wales: s 1(3). Section 1 (as amended) applies: (1) whether the offence was committed in England or Wales or elsewhere; and (2) whether it is an offence under the law of England and Wales, or of any other country or territory: s 1(5).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1167. Incidents of bail in criminal proceedings.

1167. Incidents of bail in criminal proceedings.

A person granted bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> is under a duty to surrender to custody<sup>2</sup>, and that duty is enforceable<sup>3</sup> in accordance with the Bail Act 1976<sup>4</sup>. No recognisance for his surrender to custody may be taken from him<sup>5</sup>.

Except as otherwise provided<sup>6</sup>:

- 1903 (1) no security for his surrender to custody may be taken from him<sup>7</sup>;
- 1904 (2) he may not be required to provide a surety or sureties for his surrender to custody<sup>8</sup>; and
- 1905 (3) no other requirement may be imposed on him as a condition of bail<sup>9</sup>.

However, he may be required, before release on bail, to provide a surety or sureties to secure his surrender to custody<sup>10</sup>. In addition, he may be required, before release on bail, to give security for his surrender to custody; and the security may be given by him or on his behalf<sup>11</sup>.

He may be required to comply, before release on bail or later, with such requirements as appear to the court necessary<sup>12</sup>:

- 1906 (a) to secure that he surrenders to custody<sup>13</sup>;
- 1907 (b) to secure that he does not commit an offence while on bail<sup>14</sup>;
- 1908 (c) to secure that he does not interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice whether in relation to himself or any other person<sup>15</sup>;
- 1909 (d) for his own protection or, if he is a child or young person, for his own welfare or in his own interests<sup>16</sup>;
- 1910 (e) to secure that he makes himself available for the purpose of enabling inquiries or a report to be made to assist the court in dealing with him for the offence<sup>17</sup>;
- 1911 (f) to secure that before the time appointed for him to surrender to custody, he attends an interview with an authorised<sup>18</sup> advocate or authorised litigator<sup>19</sup>.

If a child or young person is granted bail, he may<sup>20</sup> be required to comply with requirements imposed for the purpose of securing the electronic monitoring of his compliance with any other requirement imposed on him as a condition of bail<sup>21</sup>.

In the case of a person accused of murder, the court granting bail must, unless it considers that satisfactory reports on his mental condition have already been obtained, impose as conditions of bail a requirement that the defendant must undergo examination by two medical practitioners for the purpose of enabling such reports to be prepared; and a requirement that he must for that purpose attend such an institution or place as the court directs and comply with any other directions which may be given to him for that purpose by either of those practitioners<sup>22</sup>.

Where the court has been notified by the Secretary of State that arrangements for conducting a relevant assessment or, as the case may be, providing relevant follow-up have been made for the local justice area in which it appears to the court that the person referred to as 'P' below would reside if granted bail, and the notice has not been withdrawn<sup>23</sup>, then in the case of the person ('P'):

- 1912 (i) in relation to whom specified conditions apply<sup>24</sup>;
- 1913 (ii) who, after analysis of a sample<sup>25</sup>, has been offered a relevant assessment<sup>26</sup> or, if a relevant assessment has been carried out, has a relevant follow-up<sup>27</sup> proposed to him<sup>28</sup>; and
- 1914 (iii) who has agreed to undergo the relevant assessment or, as the case may be, to participate in the relevant follow-up<sup>29</sup>, the court, if it grants bail, must impose as a condition of bail that P both undergo the relevant assessment and participate in any relevant follow-up proposed to him or, if a relevant assessment has been carried out, that P participate in the relevant follow-up<sup>30</sup>.

If a parent or guardian of a child<sup>31</sup> or young person<sup>32</sup> consents to be surety for the child or young person, the parent or guardian may be required to secure that the child or young person complies with any requirement imposed on him<sup>33</sup>; but no requirement may be so imposed on the parent or the guardian of a young person where it appears that the young person will attain the age of 17 before the time to be appointed for him to surrender to custody; and the parent or guardian may not be required to secure compliance with any requirement to which his consent does not extend and may not, in respect of those requirements to which his consent does extend, be bound in a sum greater than £50<sup>34</sup>.

Where a court has granted bail in criminal proceedings, that court or, where the court has committed or sent a person on bail to the Crown Court for trial or for sentence or to be otherwise dealt with, that court or the Crown Court, may on application by or on behalf of the person to whom bail was granted, or by the prosecutor or a constable, vary<sup>35</sup> the conditions of bail or impose conditions in respect of bail which it has granted unconditionally<sup>36</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings' see PARA 1166 ante.

2 For these purposes, 'surrender to custody' means, in relation to a person released on bail, surrendering himself into the custody of the court or of the constable (according to the requirements of the grant of bail) at the time and place for the time being appointed for him to do so: Bail Act 1976 s 2(2). When a defendant who has not previously surrendered to custody is arraigned he thereby surrenders to the custody of the court: R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Guney [1996] AC 616, [1996] 2 All ER 705, HL. Bail granted by a magistrates' court ceases when the defendant surrenders to the custody of the Crown Court, whether for the purposes of arraignment or not: R v Kent Crown Court, ex p Jodka (1997) 161 JP 638, DC. Once a person on bail has complied with the procedures of the court where he was due to appear by reporting to the appropriate official at the appropriate time, he has surrendered to bail and is then in the custody of the court. He is thereafter under an implied obligation not to leave the court building without consent and, if he does so, he is liable to be arrested under the Bail Act 1976 s 7(2) (see PARA 1200 post). However, he is not guilty of any offence under s 6(1) (see PARA 1199 post): DPP v Richards [1988] QB 701, 88 Cr App Rep 97, DC.

3 In accordance with the Bail Act 1976 s 6: see PARA 1199 post.

4 Ibid s 3(1). Section 3 (as amended) is subject to the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11 (conditions of bail on remand for medical examination: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 723) (Bail Act 1976 s 3(9) (amended by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 51)) and applies with modifications in relation to cases to which a custody time limit applies (see PARA 1156 note 8 ante). The Bail Act 1976 s 3 (as amended) is subject, in its application to bail granted by a constable, to s 3A (as added) (see PARA 1168 post): s 3(10) (added by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 27(2)(c)). Note that there are two provisions in the Bail Act 1976 numbered s 3(10): see note 36 infra. Where a custody time limit has expired, the Bail Act 1976 s 3 (as amended) has effect as if s 3(4), (5) (sureties and security for surrender) were omitted, and as if in s 3(6) (conditions of bail) for the words 'before release on bail or later' there were substituted the words 'after release on bail': s 3(10A) (added, in relation to where a custody time limit applies, by the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 8(1), (2) (a) (amended by SI 1995/555)).

7 Ibid s 3(3)(a).

8 Ibid s 3(3)(b).

9 Ibid s 3(3)(c).

10 Ibid s 3(4). Where the defendant is granted bail, no conditions may be imposed under s 3(4)-(6B) or (7) (except s 3(6)(d), (e)) unless it appears to the court that it is necessary to do so: (1) for the purpose of preventing the occurrence of any of the events mentioned in s 4(5), Sch 1 Pt I para 2(1) (see PARA 1170 head (1) post); or (2) for the defendant's own protection or, if he is a child, for his own welfare or in his own interests: Sch 1 Pt I para 8(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 ss 100, 101(2), Sch 11 para 22(1), (2), Sch 13; the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 119, Sch 8 para 38; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 13(3), 19(4)(b)). In the case of a condition under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(d) (see head (e) in the text), no condition may be imposed unless it appears to the court that it is necessary to do so to enable inquiries or a report to be made: Sch 1 Pt I para 8(1A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 100, Sch 11 para 22(1), (3)). The provisions of the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 8(1), (1A) (as added) also apply on any application to the court to vary the conditions of bail or to impose conditions in respect of bail which has been granted unconditionally: Sch 1 Pt I para 8(2) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 100, Sch 11 para 22(1), (4)). The restriction imposed by the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 8(1A) (as added) does not apply to the conditions required to be imposed under s 3(6A) (as added) or operate to override the direction in the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11(3) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 723) to a magistrates' court to impose conditions of bail under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(d) of the description specified in the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11(3) in the circumstances so specified: Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 8(3) (amended by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 34(4); the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 100, Sch 11 para 22(1), (5); and the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 54(1), (2)).

11 Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) (amended by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 ss 54(1), 120(2), Sch 10). Where a person has so given security and a court is satisfied that he failed to surrender to custody, then, unless it appears that he had reasonable cause for his failure, the court may order the forfeiture of the security: Bail Act 1976 s 5(7). If a court so orders the forfeiture of a security, the court may declare that the forfeiture extends to such amount less than the full value of the security as it thinks fit to order: s 5(8). Any such order takes effect, unless previously revoked, at the end of 21 days beginning with the day on which it was made: s 5(8A) (added by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 65(4), Sch 12).

A court which has so ordered the forfeiture of a security may, if satisfied on an application made by or on behalf of the person who gave it that he did after all have reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody, by order remit the forfeiture or declare that it extends to such amount less than the full value of the security as it thinks fit to order: Bail Act 1976 s 5(8B) (added by the Criminal Law Act 1977 Sch 12). Such an application may be made before or after the order for forfeiture has taken effect, but may not be entertained unless the court is satisfied that the prosecution was given reasonable notice of the applicant's intention to make it: Bail Act 1976 s 5(8C) (added by the Criminal Law Act 1977 Sch 12).

A security which has been ordered to be forfeited by a court under the Bail Act 1976 s 5(7) must, to the extent of the forfeiture: (1) if it consists of money, be accounted for and paid in the same manner as a fine imposed by that court would be; (2) if it does not consist of money, be enforced by such magistrates' court as may be specified in the order: s 5(9). Where an order under s 5(8B) (as added) is made after the order for forfeiture of the security has taken effect, any money which would have fallen to be repaid or paid over to the person who gave the security if the order under s 5(8B) (as added) had been made before the order for forfeiture took effect must be repaid or paid over to him: s 5(9A) (added by the Criminal Law Act 1977 Sch 12).

Where a magistrates' court under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) or (6) (as amended) imposes any requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail, the court may give directions as to the manner in which and the person or persons before whom the requirement may be complied with: CrimPR 19.4.

Although Parliament doubtless envisaged the lodging of some asset in cash or kind as security under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) (as amended), the court can accept a less simple form of surety, such as an interest in land, if it is satisfied that the surety can be forfeited without giving rise either to disputes as to third party rights or the risk of a charge of conversion: R (on the application of Stevens) v Truro Magistrates' Court [2001] EWHC 558 (Admin), [2002] 1 WLR 144 (third party's mortgage on property given as surety not affected by forfeiture proceedings). Where a security given by the defendant has been provided by a third party, the third party has no standing to claim its return if the defendant fails to surrender to bail: R (on the application of Stevens) v Truro Magistrates' Court supra.

12 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 ss 27(2)(a), 168(3), Sch 11; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 13(1)(a), 332, Sch 37 Pt 2).

13 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(a) (s 3(6)(a)-(d) amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 13(1)(d)).

14 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(b) (as amended: see note 13 supra). There is no requirement of 'substantial grounds' for believing that a person may commit an offence while on bail when imposing conditions under s 3(6) (as amended) or Sch 1 Pt I para 8(1) (as amended); all that is required of magistrates is that they perceive a real and not a fanciful risk of such an occurrence: R v Mansfield Justices, ex p Sharkey [1985] QB 613, [1985] 1 All ER 193, DC. Cf the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2(b): see PARA 1170 head (1) post.

15 Ibid s 3(6)(c) (as amended: see note 13 supra).

16 Ibid s 3(6)(ca) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 13(1)(c)).

17 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(d) (as amended: see note 13 supra).

18 Ie as defined by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 119(1): see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 65 (2008) PARAS 497-498.

19 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(e) (added by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 54(2); and amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 13(1)(d)). In any Act, the 'normal powers to impose conditions of bail' means the powers to impose conditions under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6)(a), (b), (c) or (ca) (see heads (a)-(d) in the text): s 3(6) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 27(2)(b); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 13(1)(d)). The power to impose conditions applies to non-imprisonable offences as well as imprisonable ones; and refusal to consent to a condition of bail is not an exception to the right (see PARA 1171 post) to bail, so a defendant cannot be remanded in custody for that reason: R v Bournemouth Justices, ex p Cross, Griffen and Pamment (1988) 89 Cr App Rep 90, DC. Where a person is required under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6) (as amended) to reside in a bail hostel or probation hostel, he may also be required to comply with the rules of the hostel: s 3(6ZA) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 131(1)). For these purposes, 'bail hostel' means premises for the accommodation of persons remanded on bail: Bail Act 1976 s 2(2) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 170(1), Sch 15 para 52; and substituted by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 50(1), (2)(a)).

20 Ie subject to the Bail Act 1976 s 3AA (as added). Under s 3AA (as added), a court may not impose on a child or young person an electronic monitoring requirement under s 3(6ZAA) (as added) unless each of the following conditions is satisfied: s 3AA(1) (s 3AA added by the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 s 131(2)). The conditions are:

- 545 (1) that the child or young person has attained the age of 12 years (Bail Act 1976 s 3AA(2) (as so added));
- 546 (2) that: (a) the child or young person is charged with or has been convicted of a violent or sexual offence, or an offence punishable in the case of an adult with imprisonment for a term of 14 years or more; or (b) he is charged with or has been convicted of one or more imprisonable offences which, together with any other imprisonable offences of which he has been convicted in any proceedings amount, or would, if he were convicted of the offences with which he is charged, amount to a recent history of repeatedly committing imprisonable offences while remanded on bail or to local authority accommodation (s 3AA(3) (as so added));
- 547 (3) that the court: (a) has been notified by the Secretary of State that electronic monitoring arrangements are available in each local justice area which is a relevant area; and (b) is satisfied that the necessary provision can be made under those arrangements (s 3AA(4) (s 3AA as so added; and s 3AA(4) amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 181));
- 548 (4) that a youth offending team has informed the court that in its opinion the imposition of such a requirement will be suitable in the case of the child or young person (Bail Act 1976 s 3AA(5) (as so added)).

'Local authority accommodation' has the same meaning as in the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1246): Bail Act 1976 s 3AA(11) (as so added). For the purposes of s 3AA (as added), a local justice area is a relevant area in relation to a proposed electronic monitoring requirement if the court considers that it will not be practicable to secure the electronic monitoring in question unless electronic monitoring arrangements are available in that area: s 3AA(12) (s 3AA as so added; and s 3AA(12) amended by the Courts Act 2003 Sch 8 para 181).

Where a court imposes an electronic monitoring requirement, the requirement must include provision for making a person responsible for the monitoring; and a person who is made so responsible must be of a description specified in an order made by the Secretary of State: Bail Act 1976 s 3AA(6) (as so added). See the Bail (Electronic Monitoring of Requirements) (Responsible Officer) Order 2002, SI 2002/844 (amended by SI 2005/984).

The Secretary of State may make rules for regulating: (i) the electronic monitoring of compliance with requirements imposed on a child or young person as a condition of bail; and (ii) without prejudice to the generality of head (i) supra, the functions of persons made responsible for securing the electronic monitoring of compliance with such requirements: Bail Act 1976 s 3AA(7) (as so added). Rules under s 3AA (as added) may make different provision for different cases: s 3AA(8) (as so added). Any power of the Secretary of State to make an order or rules under s 3AA (as added) is exercisable by statutory instrument: s 3AA(9) (as so added). A statutory instrument containing rules made under s 3AA (as added) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 3AA(10) (as so added).

21 Ibid s 3(6ZAA) (added by the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 s 131(1)).

22 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6A) (added by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 34(1), (2)). Of the medical practitioners so referred to at least one must be a practitioner approved for the purposes of the Mental Health Act 1983 s 12 (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 482): Bail Act 1976 s 3(6B) (added by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 34(1), (2); and amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 s 148, Sch 4 para 46).

23 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6C) (s 3(6C)-(6F) added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (2); and the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6C) amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 40).

24 Bail Act 1976 s 3(6D)(a) (as added: see note 23 supra). The specified conditions that apply are:

549 (1) he (ie 'P') is aged 18 or over (Sch 1 para 6B(1)(a) (Sch 1 para 6B added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (4)));

550 (2) a sample taken under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 63B (as added and amended) (testing for presence of Class A drugs: see PARA 1031 ante) in connection with the offence, or under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 161 (drug testing after conviction of an offence but before sentence: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 629), has revealed the presence in his body of a specified Class A drug (Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 para 6B(1)(b) (as so added));

551 (3) the offence is one under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 s 5(2) or (3) (see PARAS 770, 772 ante) and relates to a specified Class A drug, or the court is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that misuse by him of any specified Class A drug caused or contributed to the offence or (even if it did not) that the offence was motivated wholly or partly by his intended misuse of such a drug (Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 para 6B(1)(c) (as so added)).

In head (2) supra 'Class A drug' and 'misuse' have the same meanings as in the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971; and 'specified' (in relation to a Class A drug) has the same meaning as in the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 Pt 3 (ie specified by an order made by the Secretary of State): Bail Act 1976 s 3(6E) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (2)). As to 'Class A' drugs see PARA 770 ante. The Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 s 37(2) provides that references in that Act to misusing a drug are references to misusing it by taking it (ie taking it by a human being by way of any form of self-administration, whether or not involving the assistance of another).

25 Ie a sample referred to in note 24 head (2) supra.

26 'Relevant assessment' means an assessment conducted by a suitably qualified person of whether P is dependent upon or has a propensity to misuse any specified Class A drugs: Bail Act 1976 s 3(6E)(a) (s 3(6E) added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (2)). In the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6E)(a) (as added), 'suitably qualified person' means a person who has such qualifications or experience as are from time to time specified by the Secretary of State for these purposes: s 3(6F) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (2)).

27 'Relevant follow-up' means, in a case where the person who conducted the relevant assessment believes P to have such a dependency or propensity, such further assessment, and such assistance or treatment (or both) in connection with the dependency or propensity, as the person who conducted the relevant assessment (or conducts any later assessment) considers to be appropriate in P's case: Bail Act 1976 s 3(6E)(b) (as added: see note 26 supra).

28 Ibid s 3(6D)(b) (as added: see note 23 supra).

29 Ibid s 3(6D)(c) (as added: see note 23 supra).

30 For the purposes of ibid s 3(6D) (as added), a relevant assessment is to be treated as having been carried out if a person attends an initial assessment and remains for its duration, and the initial assessor is satisfied that the initial assessment fulfilled the purposes of a relevant assessment: Drugs Act 2005 s 17(2). An initial assessor may disclose information relating to an initial assessment for the purpose of enabling a court considering an application for bail by the person concerned to determine whether s 17(2) or (3) (see PARA 1170 post) applies: s 17(4). For the meanings of 'initial assessment' and 'initial assessor' see PARA 1032 ante.

31 For these purposes, 'child' means a person under the age of 14: Bail Act 1976 s 2(2).

32 For these purposes, 'young person' means a person who has attained the age of 14 and is under the age of 17: ibid s 2(2).

33 Ie by virtue of ibid s 3(6), 3(6ZAA) or (6A) (as added: see note 13 supra).

34 Ibid s 3(7) (amended by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 34(1), (3); and the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001 s 131(3)).

35 For these purposes, 'vary', in relation to bail, means imposing further conditions after bail is granted, or varying or rescinding conditions: Bail Act 1976 s 2(2). Variation of bail conditions does not affect the validity of a recognisance for continuous bail, but consideration should be given to explaining to a surety before he enters into a recognisance, and expressly warning him when he does so, that the conditions of bail may be varied by the court and that he should not enter into such a recognisance if he is concerned about the conditions: R v Wells Street Magistrates' Court, ex p Albanese [1982] QB 333, 74 Cr App Rep 180, DC. As to bail with sureties see PARA 1172 post.

36 Bail Act 1976 s 3(8) (amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 65(4), Sch 12; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 48(1), (2)(a)). The Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 48(1), (2) amends the Bail Act 1976 s 3 (as amended) so as to refer to persons being sent rather than committed for trial, but at the date at which this volume states the law this amendment only has effect in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante). As from a day to be appointed the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 48(1), (2) also amends the Bail Act 1976 s 3 (as amended) to include where a court has committed a person on bail to the Crown Court for sentence. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

Until a day to be appointed, where a notice of transfer is given under a relevant transfer provision, s 3(8) (as amended) has effect in relation to a person in relation to whose case the notice is given as if he had been committed on bail to the Crown Court for trial (s 3(8A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 15, Sch 2 para 9; and substituted by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(1), Sch 9 para 12(a)); and the Bail Act 1976 s 3(8) (as amended) applies where a court has committed a person on bail to the Crown Court for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (see PARA 1131 ante) as it applies where a court has committed a person on bail to the Crown Court for trial (Bail Act 1976 s 3(8B) (added by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 119, Sch 8 para 37)). For these purposes, 'relevant transfer provision' means the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 4 (prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1105 ante) or the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 53 (see PARA 1105 ante): Bail Act 1976 s 3(10) (added by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(1), Sch 9 para 12(b)). Note that there are two provisions in the Bail Act 1976 numbered s 3(10): see note 4 supra. As from a day to be appointed s 3(8A), (8B) (10) (as added) are repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 48(1), (2), Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. The Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 48(1), (2) amends the Bail Act 1976 s 3 so as to refer to persons being sent rather than committed for trial, but at the date at which this volume states the law this amendment only has effect in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante).

BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1168. Conditions of bail in case of police bail.

1168. Conditions of bail in case of police bail.

The general provisions relating to bail in criminal proceedings under the Bail Act 1976<sup>1</sup> apply equally in relation to bail granted by a custody officer<sup>2</sup> in cases where the normal powers to impose conditions of bail are available to him, subject to the following modifications<sup>3</sup>.

The provisions authorising the imposition on a person granted bail of a requirement<sup>4</sup> do not authorise the imposition of a requirement to reside in a bail hostel, nor do they authorise a requirement<sup>5</sup> to secure that that person makes himself available for the purpose of enabling inquiries or a report to be made to assist the court in dealing with him for the offence, or a requirement<sup>6</sup> to secure that he attends an interview with an authorised advocate or authorised litigator<sup>7</sup>.

- 1915 (1) a requirement for electronic monitoring<sup>8</sup>;
- 1916 (2) a requirement of residence in a bail hostel<sup>9</sup>;
- 1917 (3) in the case of a person accused of murder, the imposition of a requirement of undergoing a medical examination<sup>10</sup>; and
- 1918 (4) a drug dependence, or propensity to drug misuse, assessment<sup>11</sup>, do not apply<sup>12</sup>.

The provision<sup>13</sup> relating to the variation of the conditions of bail is replaced by a provision that where a custody officer has granted bail in criminal proceedings he or another custody officer serving at the same police station may, at the request of the person to whom it was granted, vary the conditions of bail; and in doing so he may impose conditions or more onerous conditions<sup>14</sup>.

Where a constable grants bail to a person no conditions may be imposed as to the provision of a surety or sureties to secure surrender to custody<sup>15</sup>, as to the giving of security for surrender to custody<sup>16</sup>, as to compliance with requirements to secure various specified purposes<sup>17</sup>, or as to requiring a parent or guardian to secure that a child or young person complies with a requirement imposed on him<sup>18</sup>, unless it appears to the constable that it is necessary to do so<sup>19</sup>:

- 1919 (a) for the purpose of preventing that person from failing to surrender to custody<sup>20</sup>; or
- 1920 (b) for the purpose of preventing that person from committing an offence while on bail<sup>21</sup>; or
- 1921 (c) for the purpose of preventing that person from interfering with witnesses or otherwise obstructing the course of justice, whether in relation to himself or any other person<sup>22</sup>; or
- 1922 (d) for that person's own protection or, if he is a child or young person, for his own welfare or in his own interests<sup>23</sup>.

1165-1176 In General

For bail decisions relating to persons aged under 18 who are accused of offences mentioned in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 see Bail Act 1976 s 9A (added by Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 12 para 3).

1168 Conditions of bail in case of police bail

NOTE 2--Or a custody officer under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt III (ss 22-27) (see PARA 1044): 1976 Act s 3A(1) (amended by Police and Justice Act 2006 Sch 14 para 5).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1169. General right to bail of accused persons and others.

1169. General right to bail of accused persons and others.

A person:

1923 (1) who is accused of an offence when:

79

122. (a) he appears or is brought before a magistrates' court or the Crown Court in the course of or in connection with proceedings for the offence<sup>1</sup>; or

123. (b) he applies to a court<sup>2</sup> for bail or for a variation of the conditions of bail in connection with the proceedings<sup>3</sup>; or

80

1924 (2) whose extradition is sought in respect of an offence, when he appears or is brought before a court in the course of or in connection with extradition proceedings in respect of the offence<sup>4</sup>, or when he applies to a court for bail or for a variation of the conditions of bail in connection with those proceedings<sup>5</sup>; or

1925 (3) who, having been convicted of an offence, appears or is brought before a magistrates' court or a Crown Court<sup>6</sup> to be dealt with<sup>7</sup>; or

1926 (4) who has been convicted of an offence and whose case is adjourned by the court for the purpose of enabling inquiries or a report to be made to assist the court in dealing with him for the offence<sup>8</sup>, must be granted bail except in specified<sup>9</sup> circumstances<sup>10</sup>.

If the court decides not to grant the defendant<sup>11</sup> bail, it is the court's duty to consider, at each subsequent hearing while the defendant is a person to whom heads (1) to (4) above apply and who remains in custody, whether he ought to be granted bail<sup>12</sup>. At the first hearing after that at which the court decided not to grant the defendant bail, he may support an application for bail with any argument as to fact or law that he desires, whether or not he has advanced that argument previously<sup>13</sup>. At subsequent hearings the court need not hear arguments as to fact or law which it has heard previously<sup>14</sup>.

1 Bail Act 1976 s 4(2)(a). The Bail Act 1976 s 4 applies in relation to the grant of bail by the Court of Appeal under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 90 (see PARA 1948 post) as if in the Bail Act 1976 s 4(2) the reference to the Crown Court included a reference to the Court of Appeal: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 90(4).

2 For these purposes, 'court' includes a judge of a court or a justice of the peace and, in the case of a specified court, includes a judge or (as the case may be) justice having powers to act in connection with proceedings before that court: Bail Act 1976 s 2(2) (amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 Sch 12).

3 Bail Act 1976 s 4(2)(b) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 33). The provisions in head (1) in the text do not apply as respects proceedings on or after a person's conviction of the offence: Bail Act 1976 s 4(2) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 ss 198(1), (4), 220, Sch 4).

4 Bail Act 1976 s 4(2A)(a) (s 4(2A), (2B) added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (5)).

5 Bail Act 1976 s 4(2A)(b) (as added: see note 4 supra). Section 4(2A) (as added) does not apply if the person is alleged to be unlawfully at large after conviction of the offence: s 4(2B) (as so added).

6 To be dealt with under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 Sch 3 Pt 2 (breach of certain youth community orders: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 234), or the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 8 Pt 2 (breach of requirements of community order: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 178); see the Bail Act 1976 s 4(3)(a), (b) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 304, Sch 32 paras 20, 22); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 8 and Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/950, art 2(1), Sch 2 para 5(1), (2).

7 Bail Act 1976 s 4(3) (as amended: see note 6 supra).

8 Ibid s 4(4).

9 le except as provided by ibid s 4(1), Sch 1 (as amended): see PARA 1170 post. Schedule 1 (as amended) also has effect as respects conditions of bail for a person to whom s 4 applies: s 4(5).

10 Ibid s 4(1). Section 4 (as amended) is subject to the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 41 (restriction of bail by magistrates' courts in cases of treason: see PARA 1178 post) and the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25 (exclusion of bail for defendants charged with or convicted of homicide or rape after previous conviction for such an offence: see PARA 1170 post): see the Bail Act 1976 s 4(7), (8) (s 4(7) amended by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 154(1), Sch 7 para 145; and the Bail Act 1976 s 4(8) added by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 32). The Bail Act 1976 s 4 (as amended) applies with modifications to cases to which a custody time limit applies: see PARA 1156 note 8 ante. In taking any decisions required by Sch 1 Pt I or Sch 1 Pt II, the considerations to which the court is to have regard include, so far as relevant, any misuse of controlled drugs by the defendant ('controlled drugs' and 'misuse' having the same meanings as in the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 (see PARAS 770 note 2, 1167 note 24 ante)): Bail Act 1976 s 4(9) (added by the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 s 58).

Where a custody time limit has expired the Bail Act 1976 s 4 (as amended) has effect as if duty to grant bail was not subject to the exception for specified circumstances: s 4(8A) (added by virtue of the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/299, reg 8(1), (2)(b); and amended by virtue of the Prosecution of Offences (Custody Time Limits) (Amendment) Regulations 1995, SI 1995/555, reg 2)).

11 For these purposes, 'the defendant' means a person to whom the Bail Act 1976 s 4 (as amended) applies; and any reference to a defendant whose case is adjourned for inquiries or a report is a reference to a person to whom s 4 (as amended) applies by virtue of s 4(4) (see the text and note 8 supra): s 4(6).

1165-1176 In General

For bail decisions relating to persons aged under 18 who are accused of offences mentioned in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 see Bail Act 1976 s 9A (added by Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 12 para 3).

1169 General right to bail of accused persons and others

NOTE 5--For 'to be ... conviction' read 'to have been convicted': 1976 Act s 4(2B) (amended by Police and Justice Act 2006 Sch 13 para 34).

TEXT AND NOTES 6, 7--Bail Act 1976 s 4(3) further amended: Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 4 paras 23, 102, Sch 28 Pt 1.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1170. Exceptions to right to bail where defendants are accused or convicted of imprisonable offences.

1170. Exceptions to right to bail where defendants are accused or convicted of imprisonable offences.

Where the offence or one of the offences of which the defendant<sup>1</sup> is accused or convicted in the proceedings is punishable with imprisonment<sup>2</sup> or his extradition is sought in respect of an offence, the defendant need not be granted bail<sup>3</sup>:

- 1927 (1) if the court<sup>4</sup> is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that the defendant, if released on bail, whether subject to conditions or not, would fail to surrender to custody<sup>5</sup>; or would commit an offence while on bail<sup>6</sup>; or would interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice, whether in relation to himself or any other person<sup>7</sup>;
- 1928 (2) if the offence is an indictable offence or an offence triable either way and it appears to the court that he was on bail in criminal proceedings on the date of the offence<sup>8</sup>;
- 1929 (3) in connection with extradition proceedings if the conduct constituting the offence would, if carried out by the defendant in England and Wales, constitute an indictable offence or an offence triable either way<sup>9</sup>, and it appears to the court that the defendant was on bail on the date of the offence<sup>10</sup>;
- 1930 (4) if the court is satisfied that the defendant should be kept in legal custody<sup>11</sup> for his own protection or, if he is a child<sup>12</sup> or young person<sup>13</sup>, for his own welfare<sup>14</sup>;
- 1931 (5) if he is in custody in pursuance of the sentence of a court<sup>15</sup> or of any authority acting under any of the Services Acts<sup>16</sup>;
- 1932 (6) where the court is satisfied that it has not been practicable to obtain sufficient information for the purpose of taking the required decisions<sup>17</sup> for want of time since the institution of the proceedings against him<sup>18</sup>;
- 1933 (7) if, having been released on bail in or in connection with the proceedings for the offence or in extradition proceedings, he has been arrested<sup>19</sup> for absconding or breaking conditions of bail<sup>20</sup>;
- 1934 (8) where:
  - 81
  - 124. (a) a defendant is aged 18 or over<sup>21</sup>; and
  - 125. (b) a sample taken under specified provisions<sup>22</sup> has revealed the presence in his body of a specified Class A drug<sup>23</sup>; and
  - 126. (c) either the offence is one of possession of a controlled drug and relates to a specified Class A drug<sup>24</sup>, or the court is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that misuse by him of any specified Class A drug caused or contributed to the offence<sup>25</sup> or (even if it did not) that the offence was motivated wholly or partly by his intended misuse of such a drug<sup>26</sup>; and
  - 127. (d) the specified condition<sup>27</sup> is satisfied or, if the court is considering on a second or subsequent occasion whether or not to grant bail, has been, and continues to be, satisfied<sup>28</sup>,
  - 82
- 1935 unless the court is satisfied that there is no significant risk of his committing an offence while on bail, whether subject to conditions or not<sup>29</sup>;

- 1936 (9) where his case is adjourned for inquiries or a report, if it appears to the court that it would be impracticable to complete the inquiries or make the report without keeping the defendant in custody<sup>30</sup>.

In taking the decisions required by head (1) above, or in deciding whether it is satisfied under certain provisions<sup>31</sup>, the court must have regard to such of the following considerations as appear to it to be relevant:

- 1937 (i) the nature and seriousness of the offence or default<sup>32</sup>, and the probable method of dealing with the defendant for it<sup>33</sup>;
 1938 (ii) the character, antecedents, associations and community ties of the defendant<sup>34</sup>;
 1939 (iii) the defendant's record as respects the fulfilment of his obligations under previous grants of bail in criminal proceedings<sup>35</sup>;
 1940 (iv) except in the case of a defendant whose case is adjourned for inquiries or a report, the strength of the evidence of his having committed the offence or having defaulted<sup>36</sup>,

as well as to any other considerations which appear to be relevant<sup>37</sup>.

A person who in any proceedings has been charged with or convicted of murder, attempted murder, manslaughter, rape (or similar offence)<sup>38</sup> or attempt to commit rape (or similar offence)<sup>39</sup>, and who has been previously convicted<sup>40</sup> by or before a court in any part of the United Kingdom<sup>41</sup> of any such offence or of culpable homicide<sup>42</sup> and, in the case of a previous conviction of manslaughter or of culpable homicide, if he was then sentenced to imprisonment or, if he was then a child or young person, to long-term detention under any of the relevant enactments<sup>43</sup>, may be granted bail in those proceedings only if the court or, as the case may be, the constable considering the grant of bail is satisfied that there are exceptional circumstances which justify it<sup>44</sup>.

Where the court is considering exercising its power to remand in custody for more than eight clear days<sup>45</sup>, it must have regard to the total length of time which the defendant would spend in custody if it were to exercise its power<sup>46</sup>.

As from a day to be appointed, where the defendant is under the age of 18, and it appears to the court that:

- 1941 (A) he was on bail in criminal proceedings on the date of the offence, the court, in deciding for the purposes of head (1) above whether it is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that the defendant, if released on bail, whether subject to conditions or not, would commit an offence on bail, must give particular weight to the fact that the defendant was on bail in criminal proceedings on the date of the offence<sup>47</sup>;
 1942 (B) having been released on bail in or in connection with the proceedings for the offence, he failed to surrender to custody<sup>48</sup>, the court, in deciding for the purposes of head (1) above whether it is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that the defendant, if released on bail, whether subject to conditions or not, would fail to surrender to custody, must give particular weight to the following: (aa) where the defendant did not have reasonable cause<sup>49</sup> for his failure to surrender to custody, the court must give particular weight to the fact that he failed to surrender to custody<sup>50</sup>; and (bb) where the defendant did have such reasonable cause, the court must give particular weight to the fact that he failed to surrender to custody at the appointed place as soon as reasonably practicable after the appointed time<sup>51</sup>.

- 1 For the meaning of 'the defendant' for these purposes see PARA 1169 note 11 ante.
  - 2 See the Bail Act 1976 s 4(5), Sch 1 Pt I para 1(a) (Sch 1 Pt I para 1 substituted by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (12)). For these purposes, the question whether an offence is one which is punishable with imprisonment is to be determined without regard to any enactment prohibiting or restricting the imprisonment of young offenders or first offenders: Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt III para 1.
  - 3 See ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 1(b) (as substituted: see note 2 supra).
  - 4 For the meaning of 'court' for these purposes see PARA 1169 note 2 ante.
  - 5 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2(1)(a) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2(1) renumbered as such by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 20(1)). For the meaning of 'surrender to custody' see PARA 1167 note 2 ante.
  - 6 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2(1)(b) (as renumbered: see note 5 supra).
  - 7 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 2(1)(c) (as renumbered: see note 5 supra). In considering whether to grant bail under s 4 (as amended) (see PARA 1169 ante), before the discretion to refuse bail arises pursuant to Sch 1 Pt I para 2 or Sch 1 Pt I para 9 (see the text and notes 31-37 infra), the court must be satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that one of the events described in Sch 1 Pt I para 2(a), (b) or (c) will happen; it is the existence of substantial ground for the belief, not the belief itself, which is the crucial factor; accordingly, if one court finds as a fact that substantial grounds exist at the time of the determination, a later court must accept that finding: R v Slough Justices, ex p Duncan (1982) 75 Cr App Rep 384, DC (decided before the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2 was amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003). The strict rules of evidence are inappropriate when considering whether there are substantial grounds for believing the matters set out in the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2 (as amended): Re Moles [1981] Crim LR 170; and see R v Mansfield Justices, ex p Sharkey [1985] QB 613, [1985] 1 All ER 193, DC.
- Where the defendant falls within one or more of the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2A (as added), Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (as amended), Sch 1 Pt I para 6B (as added), then Sch 1 Pt I para 2 (as amended) does not apply unless:
- 552 (1) where the defendant falls within Sch 1 Pt I para 2A (as added; prospectively substituted) (see the text and note 8 infra), the court is satisfied as mentioned in Sch 1 Pt I para 2A(1) (as added; prospectively substituted) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2(2)(a) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2(2) added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 20(1));
  - 553 (2) where the defendant falls within the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (see the text and note 20 infra), the court is satisfied as mentioned in Sch 1 Pt I para 6(1) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2(2)(b) (as so added));
  - 554 (3) where the defendant falls within Sch 1 Pt I para 6B (as added) (see the text and notes 21-28 infra), either the court is satisfied as mentioned in Sch 1 Pt I para 6A (as added) (see note 29 infra) or Sch 1 Pt I para 6A (as added) does not apply by virtue of Sch 1 Pt I para 6C (as added) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2(2) (as so added)).
- 8 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 2A (added by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 26(a)). As from a day to be appointed, the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 2A (as added) is substituted to instead provide that such a defendant may not be provided bail where the defendant is aged 18 or over, and it appears to the court that he was on bail in criminal proceedings on the date of the offence, unless the court is satisfied that there is no significant risk of his committing an offence while on bail, whether subject to conditions or not: Sch 1 Pt I para 2A(1), (2) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2A as so added; prospectively substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 14(1)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.
  - 9 Bail Act Sch 1 Pt I para 2B(a) (Sch 1 Pt I para 2B added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (13)).
  - 10 Bail Act Sch 1 Pt I para 2B(b) (as added: see note 9 supra).
  - 11 For these purposes, references to a defendant being kept in custody or being in custody include, where the defendant is a child or young person, references to him being kept or being in the care of the local authority in pursuance of a warrant of commitment under the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 s 23(1) (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 1247, 1253): Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt III para 3.
  - 12 For the meaning of 'child' see PARA 1167 note 31 ante.
  - 13 For the meaning of 'young person' see PARA 1167 note 32 ante.
  - 14 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 3.

15 For these purposes, 'court' in the expression 'sentence of a court' includes a service court as defined in the Visiting Forces Act 1952 s 12(1) (see ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 384); and 'sentence', in that expression, is to be construed in accordance with that definition: Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt III para 4.

16 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 4. For these purposes, 'the Services Acts' means the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 and the Naval Discipline Act 1957 (see ARMED FORCES): Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt III para 4.

17 Ie the decisions required by ibid Sch 1 Pt I (as amended).

18 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 5.

19 Ie in pursuance of ibid s 7 (as amended): see PARA 1200 post.

20 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (14)). As from a day to be appointed the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (as amended) is substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 15(1) to instead provide that where such a defendant is aged 18 or over, and it appears to the court that, having been released on bail in or in connection with the proceedings for the offence, he failed to surrender to custody, he may not be granted bail unless the court is satisfied that there is no significant risk that, if released on bail, whether subject to conditions or not, he would fail to surrender to custody: see the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6(1), (2) (Sch 1 Pt I para 6 as so amended; prospectively substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 15(1)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. Where it appears to the court that the defendant had reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody, he does not fall within the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (as amended; prospectively substituted) unless it also appears to the court that he failed to surrender to custody at the appointed place as soon as reasonably practicable after the appointed time: Sch 1 Pt I para 6(3) (as so amended; prospectively substituted). For these purposes, a failure to give to the defendant a copy of the record of the decision to grant him bail does not constitute a reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody: Sch 1 Pt I para 6(4) (as so amended; prospectively substituted).

21 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(a) (Sch 1 Pt I paras 6A-6C added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 19(1), (4)).

22 Ie a sample taken:

555 (1) under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 63B (as added and amended) (testing for presence of Class A drugs: see PARA 1031 ante) in connection with the offence (Bail Act Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(b)(i) (as added: see note 21 supra)); or

556 (2) under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 161 (drug testing after conviction of an offence but before sentence: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 629) (Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(b)(ii) (as so added)).

23 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(b) (as added: see note 21 supra). For the meaning of 'Class A drug' see the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971; and PARA 770 note 2 ante (definition applied by the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(3)(a) (as so added)). 'Specified', in relation to a Class A drug, means specified by an order made by the Secretary of State: Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 s 70(1); definition applied by the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(3)(c) (as so added).

24 Ie an offence under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 s 5(2) or (3): see PARAS 770, 772 ante.

25 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(c)(i) (as added: see note 21 supra).

26 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(1)(c)(ii) (as added: see note 21 supra).

27 The specified condition is that after the taking and analysis of the sample:

557 (1) a relevant assessment has been offered to the defendant but he does not agree to undergo it (ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(2)(a) (as added: see note 21 supra)); or 558 (2) he has undergone a relevant assessment, and relevant follow-up has been proposed to him, but he does not agree to participate in it (Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(2)(b) (as so added)).

For the meanings of 'relevant assessment' and 'relevant follow-up' see Sch 1 Pt I para 3(6E) (as added); and PARA 1167 notes 26-27 supra (definitions applied by Sch 1 Pt I para 6B(3)(b)). For these purposes, a person is to be treated as having undergone a relevant assessment if the person attends an initial assessment and remains for its duration, and the initial assessor is satisfied that the initial assessment fulfilled the purposes of a relevant assessment: Drugs Act 2005 s 17(3). An initial assessor may disclose information relating to an initial assessment for the purpose of enabling a court considering an application for bail by the person concerned to determine whether s 17(3) applies: s 17(4). For the meanings of 'initial assessment' and 'initial assessor' see PARA 1032 ante.

28 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 6B (as added: see note 21 supra).

29 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 6A (as added: see note 21 supra). This restriction on bail does not apply unless: (1) the court has been notified by the Secretary of State that arrangements for conducting a relevant assessment or, as the case may be, providing relevant follow-up have been made for the local justice area in which it appears to the court that the defendant would reside if granted bail; and (2) the notice has not been withdrawn: Sch 1 Pt I para 6C (as added (see note 21 supra); and amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 40).

30 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 7.

31 Ie whether the court is satisfied as mentioned in ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 2A(1) (as added; prospectively substituted) (see note 8 supra), Sch 1 Pt I para 6(1) (as amended; prospectively substituted) (see the text and note 20 supra), or Sch 1 Pt I para 6A (as added) (see the text and note 29 supra): Sch 1 Pt I para 9 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 20(2)).

32 For these purposes, 'default', in relation to the defendant, means the default for which he is to be dealt with under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 8 Pt 2 (breach of requirement of order: see PARA SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS VOL 92 (2010) PARA 178): Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt III para 4 (amended by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 54(1), (3); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 304, Sch 32 paras 20, 23).

33 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 9(a).

34 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9(b).

35 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9(c). For these purposes, references to previous grants of bail in criminal proceedings include references to bail granted before 17 April 1978; and so as respects the reference to an offence committed by a person on bail in relation to any period before 10 April 1995: Sch 1 Pt III para 2 (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 34). As from a day to be appointed, references to previous grants of bail include: (1) bail granted before 17 April 1978; (2) as respects the reference in Sch 1 Pt I para 2A (as added; prospectively substituted) (see the text and note 8 supra), bail granted before 10 April 1995; (3) as respects the references in Sch 1 Pt I para 6 (prospectively substituted) (see the text and note 20 supra), bail granted before 17 April 1976; (4) as respects the references in Sch 1 Pt I para 9AA (prospectively added) (see the text and note 47 infra), bail granted before the coming into force of that provision; (5) as respects the references in Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB (prospectively added) (see the text and notes 49-51 infra), bail granted before the coming into force of that provision; (6) as respects the reference of Sch 1 Pt II para 5 (as substituted) (see PARA 1171 post), bail granted before 17 April 1978: Sch 1 Pt III para 2 (prospectively substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 1, 3). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

36 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 9(d).

37 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9.

38 The following offences are included within this provision: (1) rape under the law of Scotland or Northern Ireland; (2) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 s 1 (rape) (repealed); (3) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 1 (rape: see PARA 165 ante); (4) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 2 (assault by penetration: see PARA 167 ante); (5) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 4 (causing a person to engage in sexual activity without consent: see PARA 171 ante), where the activity caused involved penetration within s 4(4)(a)-(d); (6) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 5 (rape of a child under 13: see PARA 166 ante); (7) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 6 (assault of a child under 13 by penetration: see PARA 168 ante); (8) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 8 (causing or inciting a child under 13 to engage in sexual activity: see PARA 172 ante), where an activity involving penetration within s 8(3)(a)-(d) was caused; (9) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 30 (sexual activity with a person with a mental disorder impeding choice: see PARA 197 ante), where the touching involved penetration within s 30(3)(a)-(d); (10) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 31 (causing or inciting a person, with a mental disorder impeding choice, to engage in sexual activity: see PARA 198 ante), where an activity involving penetration within s 31(3)(a)-(d) was caused: see the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(2)(a)-(m) (amended by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 139, Sch 6 para 32(1), (2)).

39 Ie an attempt to commit any of the offences referred to in note 38 supra: see the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(2)(n).

40 For these purposes, 'conviction' includes:

559 (1) a finding that a person is not guilty by reason of insanity;

560 (2) a finding under the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4A(3) (cases of unfitness to plead: see PARA 1265 post) that a person did the act or made the omission charged against him; and

561 (3) a conviction of an offence for which an order is made discharging the offender absolutely or conditionally (or in relation to an offence committed before 4 April 2005, placing him on probation); and 'convicted' is to be construed accordingly: Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(5) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 304, 332, Sch 32 para 67, Sch 37 Pt 7); Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 8 and Transitional and Saving Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/950, art 2(1), Sch 2 para 5(1), (2).

41 For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

42 Culpable homicide is a Scottish offence corresponding to that of manslaughter.

43 See the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(3). For these purposes, 'the relevant enactments' means the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 91 (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 78); Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(5) (amended by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 160).

44 See the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25(1). Section 25 (as amended) applies whether or not an appeal is pending against conviction or sentence: s 25(4). Section 25 (as amended) does not contravene the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 5 (right to liberty and security of the person); it places a burden on the defendant to rebut a presumption: R (on the application of O) v Crown Court at Harrow [2003] EWHC 868 (Admin), [2003] 1 WLR 2756, DC (affd sub nom R (on the application of O) v Crown Court at Harrow, Re O [2006] UKHL 42, [2006] 3 All ER 1157, [2006] 3 WLR 195). The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

'Satisfied' as to exceptional circumstances has been read so as to impose a purely evidential burden on the defendant: R (on the application of O) v Crown Court at Harrow [2003] EWHC 868 (Admin), [2003] 1 WLR 2756, at [94] per Hooper J (but contrast Kennedy LJ who did not consider that 'satisfied' in the present context imposed any burden on the defendant). See also Ilijakov v Bulgaria [2001] ECHR No 33977/96, [2001] 7 Archbold News 1, ECtHR.

45 Ie under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 128A (as added and amended) (see PARA 1147 ante).

46 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 9B (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 155(2)).

47 Bail Act 1976 Sch 1 Pt I para 9AA (prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 14(2)). The Bail Act 1976 Schedule 1 Pt I para 9AA (prospectively added) is to come into force as from a day to be appointed. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

48 Where it appears to the court that the defendant had reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody, ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB (prospectively added) does not apply unless it also appears to the court that he failed to surrender to custody at the appointed place as soon as reasonably practicable after the appointed time: Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB(2) (Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 15(2)). The Bail Act 1976 Schedule 1 Pt I para 9AB (prospectively added) is to come into force as from a day to be appointed. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

49 For these purposes, a failure to give to the defendant a copy of the record of the decision to grant him bail does not constitute a reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody: ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB(4) (prospectively added: see note 48 supra).

50 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB(1), (3)(a) (prospectively added: see note 48 supra).

51 Ibid Sch 1 Pt I para 9AB(1), (3)(b) (prospectively added: see note 48 supra).

1165-1176 In General

For bail decisions relating to persons aged under 18 who are accused of offences mentioned in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 see Bail Act 1976 s 9A (added by Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 12 para 3).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1172. Bail with sureties.

1172. Bail with sureties.

Where a person is granted bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> on condition that he provides one or more surety or sureties for the purpose of securing that he surrenders to custody<sup>2</sup>, then, in considering the suitability for that purpose of a proposed surety, regard may be had, amongst other things, to:

- 1947 (1) the surety's financial resources<sup>3</sup>;
- 1948 (2) his character and any previous convictions of his<sup>4</sup>; and
- 1949 (3) his proximity, whether in point of kinship, place of residence or otherwise, to the person for whom he is to be surety<sup>5</sup>.

Where a court grants a person bail in criminal proceedings on such a condition but is unable to release him because no surety or no suitable surety is available, the court must fix the amount in which the surety is to be bound<sup>6</sup>. The recognisance of the surety may be entered into before such of the following persons or descriptions of persons as the court may by order specify or, if it makes no such order, before any of the following persons, that is to say:

- 1950 (a) where the decision is taken by a magistrates' court, before a justice of the peace, a justices' clerk or a police officer who is of the rank of inspector or above or who is in charge of a police station or, if Criminal Procedure Rules so provide, by a person of such other description as is specified in the rules<sup>7</sup>;
- 1951 (b) where the decision is taken by the Crown Court, before any of the persons specified in head (a) above or, if Criminal Procedure Rules so provide, by a person of such other description as is specified in the rules<sup>8</sup>;
- 1952 (c) where the decision is taken by the High Court or the Court of Appeal, before any of the persons specified in head (a) above or, if Civil Procedure Rules or criminal procedure rules so provide, by a person of such other description as is specified in the rules<sup>9</sup>;
- 1953 (d) where the decision is taken by the Courts-Martial Appeal Court, before any of the persons specified in head (a) above or, if courts-martial appeal rules so provide, by a person of such other description as is specified in the rules<sup>10</sup>, and Civil Procedure Rules, criminal procedure rules or courts-martial appeal rules may also prescribe the manner in which a recognisance which is to be entered into before such a person is to be entered into and the persons by whom and the manner in which the recognisance may be enforced<sup>11</sup>.

Where a surety seeks to enter into his recognisance before any person<sup>12</sup> but that person declines to take the surety's recognisance because he is not satisfied of the surety's suitability, the surety may apply to:

- 1954 (i) the court which fixed the amount of the recognisance in which the surety was to be bound<sup>13</sup>; or
- 1955 (ii) a magistrates' court<sup>14</sup>, for that court to take his recognisance and that court must, if satisfied of his suitability, take his recognisance<sup>15</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings' see PARA 1166 ante.

2 For the meaning of 'surrender to custody' see PARA 1167 note 2 ante.

3 Bail Act 1976 s 8(1), (2)(a). It is irresponsible, and possibly a matter for consideration by a professional disciplinary body, for a lawyer, legal executive or court clerk to tender anyone as a surety unless he had reasonable grounds for believing that the surety would, if necessary, be able to meet his financial undertaking. The same applies to a court official and unless the surety has the benefit of separate legal advice, the court official should make some inquiries to satisfy himself that the surety would, if necessary, be able to pay and that the recognisance was realistic: R v Birmingham Crown Court, ex p Rashid Ali (1998) 163 JP 145, DC.

4 Bail Act 1976 s 8(1), (2)(b).

5 Ibid s 8(1), (2)(c).

6 Ibid s 8(1), (3). The provisions of s 8(4), (5) (see the text and notes 7-15 infra) or, in a case where the proposed surety resides in Scotland, s 8(6) (see note 11 infra) apply for the purpose of enabling the recognisance to be entered into subsequently: s 8(3). See also the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 5(3) (prospectively repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 58, Sch 37 Pt 4 as from a day to be appointed, but at the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed).

10 Ibid s 8(1), (4)(d).

11 Ibid s 8(1), (4) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 186(1), (2)). If the court is satisfied of the suitability of the proposed surety, it may direct that arrangements be made for the recognisance of the surety to be entered into in Scotland before any constable, within the meaning of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967, having charge at any police office or station in like manner as the recognisance would be entered into in England and Wales: Bail Act 1976 s 8(6).

Where, in pursuance of s 8(4) (as amended) or s 8(6), a recognisance is entered into otherwise than before the court that fixed the amount of the recognisance, the same consequences follow as if it had been entered into before that court: s 8(7).

1173. Record of decisions.

Where:

- 1956 (1) a court<sup>1</sup> or constable grants bail in criminal proceedings<sup>2</sup>; or
- 1957 (2) a court withholds bail<sup>3</sup> in criminal proceedings<sup>4</sup>; or
- 1958 (3) a court, officer of a court or constable appoints a time or place or a different time or place for a person granted bail in criminal proceedings to surrender to custody<sup>5</sup>; or
- 1959 (4) a court or constable varies<sup>6</sup> any conditions of bail or imposes conditions in respect of bail in criminal proceedings<sup>7</sup>, that court, officer or constable must make a record of the decision<sup>8</sup> and, if requested to do so by the person in relation to whom the decision was taken, must cause him to be given a copy of the record of the decision as soon as practicable after the record is made<sup>9</sup>. However, where bail in criminal proceedings is granted by indorsing a warrant of arrest for bail<sup>10</sup>, the constable who releases on bail the person arrested must make the record instead of the judge or justice who issued the warrant<sup>11</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court or the Crown Court grants bail in criminal proceedings to a person<sup>12</sup> after hearing representations from the prosecutor<sup>13</sup> in favour of withholding bail, then the court must give reasons for granting bail<sup>14</sup>. A court which is so required to give reasons for its decision must include a note of those reasons in the record of its decision and, if requested to do so by the prosecutor, must cause the prosecutor to be given a copy of the record of the decision as soon as practicable after the record is made<sup>15</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court or the Crown Court:

- 1960 (a) withholds bail in criminal proceedings; or
- 1961 (b) imposes conditions in granting bail in criminal proceedings; or
- 1962 (c) varies any conditions of bail or imposes conditions in respect of bail in criminal proceedings, in relation to a person<sup>16</sup>, the court must give reasons for withholding bail or for imposing or varying the conditions<sup>17</sup>. A court which is so required to give reasons for its decision must include a note of those reasons in the record of its decision and must, except in a case where this need not be done<sup>18</sup>, give a copy of that note to the person in relation to whom the decision was taken<sup>19</sup>. However, the Crown Court need not give a copy of the note of the reasons for its decision to the person in relation to whom the decision was taken where that person is represented by counsel or a solicitor unless his counsel or solicitor requests the court to do so<sup>20</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court withholds bail in criminal proceedings from a person who is not represented by counsel or a solicitor, the court must if it is committing or sending him for trial to the Crown Court, or if it issues a certificate that the court has heard full argument on his application for bail before it refused the application<sup>21</sup>, inform him that he may apply to the Crown Court<sup>22</sup> to be granted bail<sup>23</sup>.

Where in criminal proceedings a magistrates' court remands a person in custody under specified provisions<sup>24</sup> after hearing full argument on an application for bail from him, and either it has not previously heard such argument on an application for bail from him in those proceedings or it has previously heard full argument from him on such an application but it is satisfied that there has been a change in his circumstances or that new considerations have been placed before it, it is the duty of the court to issue a certificate<sup>25</sup> that the court heard full argument on his application for bail before it refused the application<sup>26</sup>.

At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

25 The certificate must be in the prescribed form: see the Bail Act 1976 s 5(6A) (as added and amended: see note 24 supra). Where a court so issues a certificate in a case where the court has previously heard full argument but is satisfied that there has been a change in circumstances or that new considerations have been placed before it, the court must state in the certificate the nature of the change of circumstances or the new considerations which caused it to hear a further fully argued bail application: s 5(6B) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 60(3)). Where a court so issues a certificate, it must cause the person to whom it refuses bail to be given a copy of the certificate: Bail Act 1976 s 5(6C) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 60(3)).

The provisions under the Bail Act 1976 relating to the making of records of bail decisions<sup>1</sup> apply in relation to bail granted by a custody officer<sup>2</sup> in cases where the normal powers to impose conditions<sup>3</sup> of bail are available to him, subject to the following modifications<sup>4</sup>.

The provisions<sup>5</sup> requiring a court to give reasons for granting bail if it does so after hearing representations from the prosecutor<sup>6</sup> do not apply to bail granted by a custody officer<sup>7</sup>.

The provisions<sup>8</sup> requiring a magistrates' court or the Crown Court to give its reasons for withholding bail or imposing or varying any conditions in respect of bail and to include a note of its reasons in the record of its decision are substituted by a requirement that, where a custody officer, in relation to any person, imposes conditions in granting bail in criminal proceedings<sup>9</sup>, or varies any condition of bail or imposes conditions in respect of bail in such proceedings, the custody officer must give reasons for imposing or varying the conditions<sup>10</sup> and must include a note of those reasons in the custody record<sup>11</sup> and give a copy of the note to the person in relation to whom the decision was taken<sup>12</sup>.

BAIL/(1) IN GENERAL/1175. Reconsideration of decisions granting bail.

1175. Reconsideration of decisions granting bail.

Where:

- 1963 (1) a magistrates' court has granted bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> in connection with an offence triable only on indictment or triable either way or proceedings for such an offence<sup>2</sup>;
- 1964 (2) a constable has granted bail in criminal proceedings in connection with proceedings for such an offence<sup>3</sup>;
- 1965 (3) a magistrates' court or a constable has granted bail in connection with extradition proceedings<sup>4</sup>, the court or the appropriate court<sup>5</sup> in relation to the constable may, on application by the prosecutor<sup>6</sup> for the decision to be reconsidered:

- 1966 (a) vary the conditions of bail<sup>7</sup>;
- 1967 (b) impose conditions in respect of bail which has been granted unconditionally<sup>8</sup>; or
- 1968 (c) withhold bail<sup>9</sup>.

No application for such reconsideration of a decision may be made unless it is based on information which was not available to the court or constable when the decision was taken<sup>10</sup>. Whether or not the person to whom the application relates appears before it, the magistrates' court must take the decision in accordance with specified<sup>11</sup> provisions<sup>12</sup>.

Where the decision of the court on such a reconsideration is to withhold bail from the person to whom it was originally granted, the court must:

- 1969 (i) if that person is before the court, remand him in custody<sup>13</sup>; and
- 1970 (ii) if that person is not before the court, order him to surrender himself forthwith into the custody of the court<sup>14</sup>.

Where a person surrenders himself into the custody of the court in compliance with such an order, the court must remand him in custody<sup>15</sup>. A person who has been ordered to surrender to custody may be arrested without warrant by a constable if he fails without reasonable cause to surrender to custody in accordance with the order<sup>16</sup>.

Where the court, on a reconsideration, refuses to withhold bail from a relevant person<sup>17</sup> after hearing representations from the prosecutor in favour of withholding bail, then the court must give reasons for refusing to withhold bail<sup>18</sup>. A court which is required<sup>19</sup> to give reasons for its decision must include a note of those reasons in any record of its decision and, if requested to do so by the prosecutor, must cause the prosecutor to be given a copy of any such record as soon as practicable after the record is made<sup>20</sup>.

The effect of granting bail is not to set the defendant free, but to release him from the custody of the law and to entrust him to the custody of his sureties, who are bound to produce him to appear at his trial at a specified time and place<sup>1</sup>. The sureties may seize their principal at any time<sup>2</sup> and may discharge themselves by handing him over to the custody of the law, and he will then be imprisoned unless he obtains fresh bail. A surety who believes that the principal is likely to break the condition as to his appearance may have him arrested by a constable<sup>3</sup>. BAIL/(2) BAIL GRANTED BY A MAGISTRATES' COURT/1179. Remand on bail.

1179. Remand on bail.

Where a magistrates' court has power to remand any person, the court may<sup>1</sup> remand him on bail<sup>2</sup>. If a magistrates' court is satisfied that any person who has been remanded is unable by reason of illness or accident to appear or be brought before the court at the expiration of the period for which he was remanded, the court may remand him for a further time on bail<sup>3</sup>.

BAIL/(2) BAIL GRANTED BY A MAGISTRATES' COURT/1180. Bail on committing or sending to Crown Court.

1180. Bail on committing or sending to Crown Court.

A magistrates' court may commit or send a person for trial on bail in accordance with the Bail Act 1976<sup>1</sup>; and, where his release on bail is conditional on his providing one or more surety or sureties<sup>2</sup> and the court fixes the amount in which the surety is to be bound with a view to his entering into a recognisance subsequently, the court must in the meantime commit the defendant to custody<sup>3</sup>.

1 See PARA 1123 ante; and MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARAS 676, 777. Where a magistrates' court has committed or sent a person on bail to the Crown Court for trial or committed a person for sentence etc under any of the enactments mentioned in CrimPR 43.1(1) (see PARA 1123 note 11 ante), and subsequently varies any conditions of the bail or imposes any conditions in respect of the bail, the magistrates' court officer must send to the Crown Court officer a copy of the record made in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976 s 5 (as amended) relating to such variation or imposition of conditions: CrimPR 19.21. BAIL/(2) BAIL GRANTED BY A MAGISTRATES' COURT/1181. Exercise of discretion by justices in granting bail.

1181. Exercise of discretion by justices in granting bail.

In deciding questions relating to the granting of bail, justices act judicially and not ministerially<sup>1</sup>. A justice may be indicted if he refuses bail from improper motives<sup>2</sup>, or sued if he does so maliciously<sup>3</sup>.

Excessive bail ought not to be required<sup>4</sup>. If a justice is satisfied with the pecuniary sufficiency of the sureties offered<sup>5</sup>, he cannot reject them because of their political opinions<sup>6</sup>; but it is inexpedient to accept the defendant's legal representative as a surety<sup>7</sup>.

BAIL/(2) BAIL GRANTED BY A MAGISTRATES' COURT/1182. Postponement of taking recognisance.

1182. Postponement of taking recognisance.

Where a magistrates' court has power to take any recognisance, the court may, instead of taking it, fix the amount in which the defendant's sureties, if any, are to be bound; and thereafter the recognisance may be taken by any such person<sup>1</sup> as may be prescribed<sup>2</sup>. Where a recognisance is so entered into otherwise than before the court that fixed the amount of it, the same consequences follow as if it had been entered into before that court<sup>3</sup>.

1 Where a magistrates' court has fixed the amount in which any surety is to be bound by a recognisance, the recognisance may be entered into by a surety in connection with bail in criminal proceedings where the defendant is in a prison or other place of detention, before the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention as well as before the persons mentioned in the Bail Act 1976 s 8(4)(a) (see PARA 1172 head (a) ante): CrimPR 19.5(1).

The court officer for the magistrates' court which has fixed the amount in which any surety is to be bound by a recognisance or, under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5), (6) or (6A) (as added) (see PARA 1167 ante), imposed any requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail or any condition of bail must issue a certificate showing the amount and conditions, if any, of the recognisance or, as the case may be, containing a statement of the requirement or condition of bail; and a person authorised to take the recognisance or do anything in relation to the compliance with such requirement or condition of bail may not be required to take or do it without production of such certificate: CrimPR 19.5(2). If any person proposed as a surety for a person committed to custody by a magistrates' court produces to the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention in which the person so committed is detained a certificate to the effect that he is acceptable as a surety, signed by any of the justices composing the court or the clerk of the court and signed in the margin by the person proposed as surety, the governor or keeper must take the recognisance of the person so proposed: CrimPR 19.5(3).

Where the recognisance of any surety of a person committed to custody by a magistrates' court is taken by any person other than the court which committed the first-mentioned person to custody, the person taking the recognisance must send it to the court officer for that court; provided that if the person committed has been committed to the Crown Court for trial or committed for sentence etc under any of the enactments mentioned in CrimPR 43.1(1) (see PARA 1180 note 1 ante), the person taking the recognisance must send it to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court: CrimPR 19.5(4).

Where a magistrates' court has, with a view to the release on bail of a person in custody, fixed the amount in which any surety of such a person is to be bound or has, under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5), (6), or (6A) (as added), imposed any requirement to be complied with before his release or any condition of bail: (1) the magistrates' court officer must give notice thereof to the governor or keeper of the prison or place where that person is detained by sending him such a certificate as is mentioned in CrimPR 19.5(2); and (2) any person authorised to take the recognisance of a surety or do anything in relation to the compliance with such requirement must, on taking or doing it, send notice thereof by post to the governor or keeper and, in the case of a recognisance of a surety, must give a copy of the notice to the surety: CrimPR 19.6.

Where a magistrates' court has, with a view to the release on bail of a person in custody, fixed the amount in which any surety is to be bound or, under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) or (6), imposed any requirement to be complied with before his release and so given notice to the governor or keeper of the prison or place where that person is detained, the governor or keeper, when satisfied that the recognisances of all sureties required have been taken and that all such requirements have been complied with, must release the defendant, unless the defendant is in custody for some other cause: CrimPR 19.7.

Where a recognisance is conditioned for the appearance of a person before a magistrates' court, or for his doing any other thing connected with a proceeding before a magistrates' court, and the defendant fails to appear in accordance with the condition, the court must declare the recognisance to be forfeited and issue a summons directed to each person bound by the recognisance as surety, requiring him to appear before the court on a date specified in the summons to show cause why he should not be adjudged to pay the sum in which he is bound, and on that date the court may proceed in the absence of any surety if it is satisfied that he has been served with the summons: Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 120(1), (1A) (amended by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 55). See further SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 157.

3 Ibid s 119(2). For these purposes, references in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 or any other Act to the court before which a recognisance was entered into are to be construed accordingly: s 119(2). Nothing in s 119 enables a magistrates' court to alter the amount of a recognisance fixed by the High Court or the Crown Court: s 119(3) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 77, Sch 14 para 55).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(2) BAIL GRANTED BY A MAGISTRATES' COURT/1186. Appeal against grant of bail.

1186. Appeal against grant of bail.

Where a magistrates' court grants bail to a person who is charged with or convicted of an offence punishable by a term of imprisonment, the prosecution may appeal to a judge of the Crown Court against the granting of bail<sup>1</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court grants bail to a person in connection with extradition proceedings, the prosecution may appeal to a judge of the Crown Court against the granting of bail<sup>2</sup>.

Such an appeal<sup>3</sup> may be made only if:

- 1971 (1) the prosecution made representations that bail should not be granted; and
- 1972 (2) the representations were made before it was granted<sup>4</sup>.

In the event of the prosecution wishing to exercise this right of appeal, oral notice of appeal must be given to the court which granted bail at the conclusion of the proceedings in which such bail was granted and before the release from custody of the person concerned<sup>5</sup>. Written notice of appeal must thereafter be served on the court which granted bail and the person concerned within two hours of the conclusion of such proceedings<sup>6</sup>. Upon receipt from the prosecution of oral notice of appeal from its decision to grant bail the court which granted bail must remand in custody the person concerned, until the appeal is determined or otherwise disposed of<sup>7</sup>.

Where the prosecution fails, within the period of two hours, to serve one or both of the requisite notices<sup>8</sup>, the appeal is deemed to have been disposed of<sup>9</sup>.

The hearing of such an appeal against a decision of the court to grant bail must be commenced within 48 hours, excluding weekends and any public holiday<sup>10</sup>, from the date on which oral notice of appeal is given<sup>11</sup>.

At the hearing<sup>12</sup> of any such appeal by the prosecution, the appeal must be by way of rehearing; and the judge hearing the appeal may remand the person concerned in custody or may grant bail subject to such conditions, if any, as he thinks fit<sup>13</sup>.

1 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(1) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 18). In relation to a child or young person, within the meaning of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1238), the reference in the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(1) to an offence punishable by imprisonment is to be read as a reference to an offence which would be so punishable in the case of an adult: s 1(10)(a) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 18(1), (3)).

The Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(1) (as substituted) applies only where the prosecution is conducted by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, or by a person who falls within such class or description of person as may be prescribed for the purposes of s 1 (as amended) by order made by the Secretary of State: s 1(2). The power to make an order under s 1(2) is exercisable by statutory instrument and any such instrument is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 1(11). The following have been so prescribed: the Director of the Serious Fraud Office and any person designated under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 1(7) (see PARA 1089 ante); the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry; the Secretary of State for Social Security; a universal service provider (within the meaning of the Postal Services Act 2000 (see POST OFFICE)) in connection with the provision of a postal service (within the meaning of that Act (see POST OFFICE)); and the Director of Revenue and Customs Prosecutions (see PARA 1068 ante) and any person designated under the Commissioners for Revenue and Customs Act 2005 s 37(1) (see CUSTOMS AND EXCISE vol 12(3) (2007 Reissue) PARA 1193); Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 (Prescription of Prosecuting Authorities) Order 1994, SI 1994/1438 (amended by SI 2001/1149; SI 2005/1129). There is no longer a Secretary of State for Social Security; social security matters are now the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions.

Where the prosecution wishes to exercise the right of appeal, under the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1 (as amended), to a judge of the Crown Court against a decision to grant bail, the oral notice of appeal must be given to the justices' clerk and to the person concerned at the conclusion of the proceedings in which such bail was granted and before the release of the person concerned: CrimPR 19.16(1). References in CrimPR 19.16 to 'the person concerned' are references to such a person within the meaning of the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1 (as amended): CrimPR 19.16(11).

2 Bail Act 1976 s 1(1A) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (2)). 'Extradition proceedings' means proceedings under the Extradition Act 2003 (see EXTRADITION); 'magistrates' court' and 'court' in relation to extradition proceedings means a District Judge (Magistrates' Courts) designated for the purposes of the Extradition Act 2003 Pt 1 (ss 1-68) or Pt 2 (ss 69-141) by the Lord Chancellor; 'prosecution' in relation to extradition proceedings means the person acting on behalf of the territory to which extradition is sought: Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(12) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (9)).

5 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(4) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (4), Sch 4). This provision was satisfied where notice was given five minutes after the justices had withdrawn: R v Isleworth Crown Court, ex p Clarke [1998] 1 Cr App Rep 257, DC. When oral notice of appeal is given, the justices' clerk must announce in open court the time at which such notice was given: CrimPR 19.16(2). A record of the prosecution's decision to appeal and the time the oral notice of appeal was given must be made in the register and must contain the particulars set out: CrimPR 19.16(3). Where an oral notice of appeal has been given the court must remand the person concerned in custody by a warrant of commitment: CrimPR 19.16(4).

6 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(5) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (5)). The written notice of appeal required by the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(5) (as amended) must be in the form set out in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D, CA, Amendment to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D, CA; and must be served on the magistrates' court officer and the person concerned: CrimPR 19.17(2). For these purposes, 'the person concerned' has the same meaning as in the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993: CrimPR 19.17(1).

The Crown Court officer must enter the appeal and give notice of the time and place of the hearing to: (1) the prosecution; (2) the person concerned or his legal representative; and (3) the magistrates' court officer: CrimPR 19.17(3). On receipt of the written notice of appeal required by the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(5) (as amended), the court must remand the person concerned in custody by a warrant of commitment, until the appeal is determined or otherwise disposed of: CrimPR 19.16(5). A record of the receipt of the written notice of appeal must be made in the same manner as that of the oral notice of appeal under CrimPR 19.16(3) (see note 5 supra): CrimPR 19.16(6). If, having given oral notice of appeal, the prosecution fails to serve a written notice of appeal within the two hour period referred to in the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(5) (as amended) the justices' clerk must, as soon as practicable, by way of written notice (served by a court officer) to the persons in whose custody the person concerned is, direct the release of the person concerned on bail as granted by the magistrates' court and subject to any conditions which it imposed: CrimPR 19.16(7). If the prosecution serves notice of abandonment of appeal on a court officer, the justices' clerk must, forthwith, by way of written notice (served by the court officer) to the governor of the prison where the person concerned is being held, or the person responsible for any other establishment where such a person is being held, direct his release on bail as granted by the magistrates' court and subject to any conditions which it imposed: CrimPR 19.16(8). A court officer must record the prosecution's failure to serve a written notice of appeal, or its service of a notice of abandonment: CrimPR 19.16(9). Where a written notice of appeal has been served on a magistrates' court officer, he must provide as soon as practicable to a Crown Court officer a copy of that written notice, together with the notes of argument made by the court officer for the court under CrimPR 19.10 (see PARA 1173 ante); and a note of the date, or dates, when the person concerned is next due to appear in the magistrates' court, whether he is released on bail or remanded in custody by the Crown Court: CrimPR 19.16(10).

At any time after the service of written notice of appeal under CrimPR 19.17(2), the prosecution may abandon the appeal by giving notice in writing in the form set out in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D, CA, Amendment to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D, CA: CrimPR 19.17(6).

The notice of abandonment required by CrimPR 19.17(6) must be served on the person concerned or his legal representative; the magistrates' court officer; and the Crown Court officer: CrimPR 19.17(7).

7 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(6) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (6)). In relation to a child or young person (within the meaning of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1238), the references in the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(6) (as amended) and s 1(9) (see the text and note 13 infra) to remand in custody are to be read subject to the provisions of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 s 23 (remands to local authority accommodation: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 1247-1253): Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(10)(b) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 200(1), (8)). Where a person concerned has not been able to instruct a solicitor to represent him at the appeal, he may give notice to the Crown Court requesting that the Official Solicitor represent him at the appeal, and the court may, if it thinks fit, assign the Official Solicitor to act for the person concerned accordingly: CrimPR 19.17(5).

11 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(8) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 ss 200(1), (7), 220, Sch 4). The hearing must be commenced within 48 hours of the end of the day on which oral notice of appeal is given: R v Middlesex Crown Court, ex p Okoli [2001] 1 Cr App Rep 1, [2000] Crim LR 921, 165 JP 144.

12 The hearing may be conducted by the judge sitting in chambers: CrimPR 16.11(1), (2)(h). The person concerned is not entitled to be present at the hearing of the appeal unless he is acting in person or, in any other case of an exceptional nature, a judge of the Crown Court is of the opinion that the interests of justice require him to be present and gives him leave to be so: CrimPR 19.17(4). For these purposes, 'person concerned' has the same meaning as in the Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1 (as amended): CrimPR 19.17(1).

13 Bail (Amendment) Act 1993 s 1(9). Any record required by the Bail Act 1976 s 5 (see PARA 1173 ante) (together with any note of reasons required by s 5(4) to be included) must be made by way of an entry in the file relating to the case in question and the record must include the following particulars, namely: (1) the effect of the decision; (2) a statement of any condition imposed in respect of bail, indicating whether it is to be complied with before or after release on bail; and (3) where bail is withheld, a statement of the relevant exception to the right to bail (as provided in the Bail Act 1976 Sch 1: see PARAS 1170-1171 ante) on which the decision is based: CrimPR 19.17(8).

The Crown Court officer must, as soon as practicable after the hearing of the appeal, give notice of the decision and of the matters required by CrimPR 19.17(8) to be recorded to the person concerned or his legal representative; the prosecution; the police; the magistrates' court officer; and the governor of the prison or person responsible for the establishment where the person concerned is being held: CrimPR 19.17(9).

Where the judge hearing the appeal grants bail to the person concerned, the provisions of CrimPR 19.18(9) (informing the court of any earlier application for bail: see PARA 1188 post) and CrimPR 19.22 (conditions attached to bail granted by the Crown Court: see PARA 1187 note 12 post) apply as if that person had applied to the Crown Court for bail: CrimPR 19.17(10).

In addition to the methods of service permitted by CrimPR 4.3 (service of documents in Crown Court proceedings: see PARA 1992 post), the notices required by CrimPR 19.17(3), (5), (7), (9) may be sent by way of facsimile transmission and the notice required by CrimPR 19.17(3) may be given by telephone: CrimPR 19.17(11).

BAIL/(3) BAIL GRANTED BY THE CROWN COURT/1187. Crown Court's power to grant bail.

(3) BAIL GRANTED BY THE CROWN COURT

1187. Crown Court's power to grant bail.

The Crown Court may<sup>1</sup> grant bail to any person:

- 1973 (1) who has been committed in custody for appearance before the Crown Court<sup>2</sup>, or in relation to whose case a notice of transfer has been given under a relevant transfer provision<sup>3</sup> or who has been sent<sup>4</sup> in custody for trial<sup>5</sup>; or
- 1974 (2) who is in custody pursuant to a sentence imposed by a magistrates' court and who has appealed to the Crown Court against his conviction or sentence<sup>6</sup>; or
- 1975 (3) who is in the custody of the Crown Court pending the disposal of his case by that court<sup>7</sup>; or
- 1976 (4) who, after the decision of his case by the Crown Court, has applied to that court for the statement of a case for the High Court on that decision<sup>8</sup>; or
- 1977 (5) who has applied to the High Court for a quashing order to remove proceedings in the Crown Court in his case into the High Court, or has applied to the High Court for leave to make such an application<sup>9</sup>; or
- 1978 (6) to whom the Crown Court has granted a certificate<sup>10</sup>; or
- 1979 (7) who has been remanded in custody by a magistrates' court on adjourning a case<sup>11</sup>, and the time during which a person is released on bail under any of the above provisions does not count as part of any term of imprisonment or detention under his sentence<sup>12</sup>.

1    Ie subject to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25 (as amended) (see PARA 1170 ante): Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 48). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1. 10 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(f) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)). The text refers to a certificate granted under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 1(2) (as amended) (see PARA 1837 post) or s 11(1A) (as added) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 46) or a certificate that a case is fit for appeal on a ground which involves a question of law alone: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(f), (1B) (s 81(1B) added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 ss 29(1), 60(1)). See further PARA 1837 post.

The power conferred by head (6) in the text does not extend to a case to which the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 12 (as amended) (see PARA 1838 post), s 15 (as amended) (see PARA 1839 post) or s 16A (as added) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 332, 334, 368) applies: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1); and amended by the Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 s 7, Sch 3 para 6; and the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 58(1), Sch 10 para 15)). As to matters to be considered by the Crown Court judge hearing an application for bail under these provisions see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.50.3-IV.50.6, CA. The procedure is described in Guide to Proceedings in the Court of Appeal, Criminal Division (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 138.

The power conferred by head (6) in the text is to be exercised: (1) where the appeal is under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 1 (as amended) (see PARA 1837 post) or s 9 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 46, 48), by the judge who tried the case; and (2) where it is under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 10 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 47), by the judge who passed the sentence: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1C) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)). Such power may only be exercised within 28 days from the date of the conviction appealed against, or in the case of an appeal against sentence, from the date on which sentence was passed or, in the case of an order made or treated as made on conviction, from the date of the making of the order: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1D) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)). Such power may not be exercised if the appellant has made an application to the Court of Appeal for bail in respect of the offence or offences to which the appeal relates: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1E) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)). As to bail granted by the Court of Appeal see PARA 1193 et seq post.

It is a condition of bail granted in the exercise of such power that, unless a notice of appeal has previously been lodged in accordance with the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 18(1) (see PARA 1863 post): (a) such a notice must be so lodged within the period specified in s 18(2) (see PARA 1863 post); and (b) not later than 14 days from the end of that period, the appellant must lodge with the Crown Court a certificate from the Registrar of Criminal Appeals that a notice of appeal was given within that period: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1F) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)). If the Crown Court grants bail to a person in the exercise of such power, it may direct him to appear: (i) if a notice of appeal is lodged within the period mentioned in the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 18(2), at such time and place as the Court of Appeal may require; and (ii) if no such notice is lodged within that period, at such time and place as the Crown Court may require: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1G) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(1)).

11 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(g) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 60(1)). Head (7) in the text applies to a person who has been remanded in custody by a magistrate's court on adjourning a case under:

- 565 (1) the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 11 (remand for medical examination: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 723) (Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(g) (as so added)); or
- 566 (2) any of the following provisions: the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 5 (as amended) (adjournment of inquiry into offence: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 710); s 10 (adjournment of trial: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 711); s 18 (initial procedure on information against adult for offence triable either way: see PARA 1109 ante) (see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(g) (as so added; and amended by the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 165(1), Sch 9 para 87(a))).

As from a day to be appointed, the reference in head (2) supra to the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 5 (as amended) is repealed (see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(g)(i) (as so added; prospectively repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 54(1), (5)(a)(ii), Sch 37 Pt 4), and the following provisions are to be added to those listed above: the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(5) (as amended) (adjournment for proceedings under s 51 etc: see PARA 1132 ante); the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 17C (as added) (intention as to plea: adjournment: see PARA 1107 ante); s 24C (prospectively added) (intention as to plea by child or young person, adjournment: see PARA 1117 ante); see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81 (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 54(1), (5)(a)(ii), Sch 36 para 4, Sch 37 Pt 4). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

Where the Crown Court grants a person bail under head (7) in the text, it may direct him to appear at a time and place which the magistrates' court could have directed and the recognisance of any surety must be conditioned accordingly: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1H) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 60(1)). The Crown Court may only grant bail to a person under head (7) in the text, however, if the magistrates' court which remanded him in custody has certified under the Bail Act 1976 s 5(6A) (as added) (see PARA 1173 ante) that it heard full argument on his application for bail before it refused the application: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1J) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 60(1)).

As to venue in respect of applications to the Crown Court see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, at V.53.3, CA.

12 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1).

Where the Crown Court grants bail in criminal proceedings, the recognisance of any surety required as a condition of bail may be entered into before an officer of the Crown Court or, where the person who has been granted bail is in a prison or other place of detention, before the governor or keeper of the prison or place as well as before the persons specified in the Bail Act 1976 s 8(4) (see PARA 1172 ante): CrimPR 19.22(1). Where the Crown Court under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) or (6) (see PARA 1167 ante) imposes a requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail, the court may give directions as to the manner in which and the person or persons before whom the requirement may be complied with: CrimPR 19.22(2).

A person who, in pursuance of an order made by the Crown Court for the grant of bail, proposes to enter into a recognisance or give security must, unless the Crown Court otherwise directs, give notice to the prosecutor at least 24 hours before he enters into the recognisance or gives security: CrimPR 19.22(3).

Where, in pursuance of an order of the Crown Court, a recognisance is entered into or any requirement imposed under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) or (6) is complied with (being a requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail) before any person, it is his duty to cause the recognisance or, as the case may be, a statement of the requirement to be transmitted forthwith to the court officer; and a copy of the recognisance or statement must at the same time be sent to the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention in which the person named in the order is detained, unless the recognisance was entered into or the requirement was complied with before such governor or keeper: CrimPR 19.22(4). Where, in pursuance of the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5), security has been given in respect of a person granted bail with a duty to surrender to the custody of the Crown Court and either that person surrenders to the custody of the court or, that person having failed to surrender to the custody of the court, the court decides not to order the forfeiture of the security, the court officer must as soon as practicable give notice of the surrender to custody or, as the case may be, of the decision not to forfeit the security to the person before whom the security was given: CrimPR 19.22(5).

Where a recognisance has been entered into in respect of a person granted bail to appear before the Crown Court and it appears to the court that a default has been made in performing the conditions of the recognisance, the court may order the recognisance to be estreated: CrimPR 19.23(1). Where the court is to consider making such an order, the court officer must give notice to that effect to the person by whom the recognisance was entered into indicating the time and place at which the matter will be considered; and no such order may be made before the expiry of seven days after such notice has been given: CrimPR 19.23(2). As to the duty of a court before ordering forfeiture under CrimPR 19.23 see R v Crown Court at Reading, ex p Bello [1992] 3 All ER 353, 92 Cr App Rep 303, CA. 'Default', in the Crown Court Rules 1982, SI 1982/1109, r 21, means 'failure': R v Crown Court at Warwick, ex p Smalley [1987] 1 WLR 237, 84 Cr App Rep 51, DC.

Where a recognisance is conditioned for the appearance of a defendant before the Crown Court and the defendant fails to appear in accordance with the condition, the court must declare the recognisance to be forfeited: CrimPR 19.24(1). Where the Crown Court declares a recognisance to be forfeited under CrimPR 19.24(1), the court officer must issue a summons to the person by whom the recognisance was entered into requiring him to appear before the court at a time and place specified in the summons to show cause why the court should not order the recognisance to be estreated: CrimPR 19.24(2). At the time specified in the summons the court may proceed in the absence of the person by whom the recognisance was entered into if it is satisfied that he has been served with the summons: CrimPR 19.24(3).

BAIL/(3) BAIL GRANTED BY THE CROWN COURT/1188. Procedure on application to the Crown Court for bail.

1188. Procedure on application to the Crown Court for bail.

Where an application to the Crown Court relating to bail is made otherwise than during the hearing of proceedings in the Crown Court<sup>1</sup>, notice in writing of intention to make such an application must, at least 24 hours before it is made, be given to the prosecutor and, if the prosecution is being carried on by the Crown Prosecution Service, to the appropriate Crown prosecutor or, if the application is to be made by the prosecutor or a constable<sup>2</sup>, to the person to whom bail was granted<sup>3</sup>.

On receiving such notice, the prosecutor<sup>4</sup> or the appropriate Crown prosecutor or, as the case may be, the person to whom bail was granted must:

- 1980 (1) notify the Crown Court officer and the applicant that he wishes to be represented at the hearing of the application; or
- 1981 (2) notify the Crown Court officer and the applicant that he does not oppose the application; or
- 1982 (3) give to the Crown Court officer, for the consideration of the Crown Court, a written statement of his reasons for opposing the application, at the same time sending a copy of the statement to the applicant<sup>5</sup>.

The applicant is not entitled<sup>6</sup> to be present on the hearing of his application unless the Crown Court gives him leave to be present<sup>7</sup>.

Where a person who is in custody or has been released on bail desires to make an application relating to bail and has not been able to instruct a solicitor to apply on his behalf<sup>8</sup>, he may give notice in writing to the Crown Court of his desire to make such an application, requesting that the Official Solicitor act for him in the application, and the court may, if it thinks fit, assign the Official Solicitor to act for the applicant accordingly<sup>9</sup>. Where the Official Solicitor has been so assigned, the Crown Court may, if it thinks fit, dispense with the requirements as to notice of intention to make an application<sup>10</sup> and deal with the application in a summary manner<sup>11</sup>.

Any record required<sup>12</sup> (together with any note or reasons required<sup>13</sup> to be included) must be made by way of an entry in the file relating to the case in question and the records must include the following particulars:

- 1983 (a) the effect of the decision<sup>14</sup>;
- 1984 (b) a statement of any condition imposed in respect of bail, indicating whether it is to be complied with before or after release on bail<sup>15</sup>;
- 1985 (c) where conditions of bail are varied, a statement of the conditions as varied<sup>16</sup>; and
- 1986 (d) where bail is withheld, a statement of the relevant exception to the right to bail<sup>17</sup> on which the decision is based<sup>18</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Every person who makes an application to the Crown Court relating to bail must inform the court of any earlier application to the High Court or the Crown Court relating to bail in the course of the same proceedings: CrimPR 19.18(9).

BAIL/(3) BAIL GRANTED BY THE CROWN COURT/1189. Appeal to Crown Court.

1189. Appeal to Crown Court.

Where a magistrates' court grants bail<sup>1</sup> to a person ('the person concerned') on adjourning a case under specified provisions<sup>2</sup>, the person concerned may appeal to the Crown Court against any condition of bail of a specified<sup>3</sup> type<sup>4</sup>. However, such an appeal may not be brought unless an application<sup>5</sup> to the magistrates' court, by or on behalf of the person granted bail or by the prosecutor<sup>6</sup> or a constable for the variation or imposition of conditions, or an application<sup>7</sup> by the prosecutor for re-consideration of a decision to grant bail, was made and determined before the appeal was brought<sup>8</sup>.

On such an appeal the Crown Court may vary the conditions of bail<sup>9</sup>. Where the Crown Court determines such an appeal the person concerned may not bring any such further appeal<sup>10</sup> in respect of the conditions of bail unless an application or a further application<sup>11</sup> to the magistrates' court for variation of conditions is made and determined after the appeal<sup>12</sup>.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/ (4) BAIL GRANTED BY THE HIGH COURT/1190. Power of the High Court to grant, or vary the conditions of, bail.

(4) BAIL GRANTED BY THE HIGH COURT

1190. Power of the High Court to grant, or vary the conditions of, bail.

Where: (1) a magistrates' court withholds bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> or imposes conditions in granting bail in criminal proceedings<sup>2</sup>; and (2) it does so where an application to the court to state a case for the opinion of the High Court is made<sup>3</sup>, the High Court may grant bail or vary<sup>4</sup> the conditions<sup>5</sup>. Where the High Court so grants a person bail, it may direct him to appear at a time and place which the magistrates' court could have directed and the recognisance of any surety must be conditioned accordingly<sup>6</sup>.

The inherent power of the High Court to entertain an application:

1987 (a) in relation to bail<sup>7</sup> where a magistrates' court: (i) has granted or withheld<sup>8</sup> bail, or (ii) has varied the conditions of bail,

1988 (b) in relation to bail where the Crown Court has determined specified types of application<sup>9</sup>, is abolished<sup>10</sup>.

The High Court has no power to entertain an application in relation to bail where the Crown Court has determined<sup>11</sup> an appeal against specified<sup>12</sup> conditions of bail imposed by a magistrates' court on adjourning a case under specified<sup>13</sup> provisions<sup>14</sup>.

The High Court has no power to entertain an application in relation to bail where the Crown Court has granted or withheld bail<sup>15</sup> before an application, or before a hearing of an application for re-trial of a serious offence<sup>16</sup>.

1 For these purposes, 'bail in criminal proceedings' has the same meaning as in the Bail Act 1976 (see PARA 1166 ante): Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(4) (amended by the Bail Act 1976 s 12(1), Sch 2 para 37).

2 Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(1)(a) (s 22(1) substituted by the Bail Act 1976 s 12(1), Sch 2 para 37; and the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(1)(a) amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 65(4), Sch 12; and by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 17(1)(a)).

3 Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(1)(b) (s 22(1) as substituted (see note 2 supra); and s 22(1)(b) added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 17(1)(b)).

4 For these purposes, 'vary' has the same meaning as in the Bail Act 1976 (see PARA 1167 note 35 ante): Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(4) (as amended: see note 1 supra).

5 Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(1) (s 22(1) as substituted (see note 2 supra); and amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 15; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 37 Pt 2). The powers conferred by the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22 (as amended) are in substitution for the powers conferred by the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37(1)(b) (as substituted and amended: see PARAS 2010, 2017 post) but, save as aforesaid, the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22 (as amended) does not prejudice any powers of the High Court to admit or direct the admission of persons to bail: s 22(5).

The Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37(4), (6) (as amended) (ancillary provisions as to persons granted bail by the High Court under s 37 (as amended) and the currency of sentence in the case of persons so admitted: see PARA 2010 post) applies in relation to the powers conferred by the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22 (as amended) and persons granted bail in pursuance of those powers as it applies in relation to the powers conferred by the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37 (as amended) and persons admitted to bail in pursuance of those powers: Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(3) (amended by the Courts Act 1971 Sch 8 para 48(b); the Bail Act 1976 s 12(1), (2), Sch 2 para 37, Sch 3; and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 37 Pt 2).

6 Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 22(2) (substituted by the Bail Act 1976 Sch 2 para 37; and amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 Sch 12).

7 Any reference in the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 17 to an application in relation to bail is to be read as including an application for bail to be granted, an application for bail to be withheld, and an application for the conditions of bail to be varied: s 17(7).

8 Any reference in ibid s 17 to the withholding of bail is to be read as including a reference to the revocation of bail: s 17(8).

9 Ie under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(8) (as amended) (see PARA 1167 ante) or under the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 81(1)(a), (b), (c) or (g) (as amended) (see PARA 1187 heads (1)-(3), (7) ante). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

- 568 (2) that the person concerned resides at a particular place other than a bail hostel;
- 569 (3) for the provision of a surety or sureties or the giving of a security;
- 570 (4) that the person concerned remains indoors between certain hours;
- 571 (5) imposed under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(6ZAA) (as added) (requirements with respect to electronic monitoring: see PARA 1167 ante); or
- 572 (6) that the person concerned makes no contact with another person.

Nothing in s 17 affects any other power of the High Court to grant or withhold bail or to vary the conditions of bail, or any right of a person to apply for a writ of habeas corpus or any other prerogative remedy: s 17(6). Section 17 does not prevent judicial review of a bail decision in a magistrates' court: see PARA 2013 et seq post.

1190 Power of the High Court to grant, or vary the conditions of, bail

NOTE 5--Where a magistrates' court withholds bail in extradition proceedings or imposes conditions in granting bail in extradition proceedings, the High Court may grant bail or vary the conditions: 1967 Act s 22(1A) (added by Police and Justice Act 2006 Sch 13 para 27(2)(b)). 'Extradition proceedings' has the same meaning as in the Bail Act 1976 (see PARA 1166 NOTE 7): 1967 Act s 22(4) (amended by 2006 Act Sch 13 para 27(2)(c)).

NOTE 9--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/ (4) BAIL GRANTED BY THE HIGH COURT/1191. Bail pending appeal.

1191. Bail pending appeal.

The power of the High Court under any enactment or rule of law to grant bail in connection with proceedings pending before the High Court<sup>1</sup> includes power<sup>2</sup> to grant bail pending the appeal<sup>3</sup> to an appellant<sup>4</sup> or a person applying for leave to appeal to the House of Lords<sup>5</sup>. Where application is made to the High Court for leave to appeal, that court may give such directions as it thinks fit for discharging or enlarging any recognisances entered into by any surety, under any enactment or otherwise, with reference to the proceedings of that court<sup>6</sup>.

Where the defendant<sup>7</sup> in any proceedings from which appeal lies to the House of Lords<sup>8</sup> would, but for the decision of the court below<sup>9</sup>, be liable to be detained, and immediately after that decision the prosecutor<sup>10</sup> is granted, or gives notice that he intends to apply for, leave to appeal, the court may make an order providing for the detention<sup>11</sup> of the defendant, or directing that he may not be released except on bail<sup>12</sup>, so long as any appeal<sup>13</sup> is pending<sup>14</sup>. Unless the appeal has previously been disposed of, an order so made ceases to have effect at the expiration of the period for which the defendant would have been liable to be detained but for the decision of the court below<sup>15</sup>.

Where a person subject to a sentence is granted bail pending an appeal to the House of Lords<sup>16</sup>, the time during which he is released on bail is to be disregarded in computing the term of his sentence<sup>17</sup>. However, any sentence passed on such an appeal in substitution for another sentence begins to run, unless the House of Lords or the court below otherwise directs, from the time when that other sentence would have begun to run<sup>18</sup>.

1 See PARAS 1190 ante, 2010, 2017 post.

2 This power is subject to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25: see PARA 1170 ante.

3 For these purposes, an appeal under the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1)(a) (as amended) (see PARA 2020 post) is to be treated as pending until any application for leave to appeal is disposed of and, if leave is granted, until the appeal is disposed of; and an application for leave to appeal is to be treated as disposed of at the expiration of the time within which it may be made, if it is not made within that time: s 17(4). For these purposes, 'leave to appeal' means leave to appeal to the House of Lords under s 1(1)(a) (as amended) (see PARA 2020 post): s 1(5). As from a day to be appointed this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see s 1(5) (prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 40, Sch 9 para 13(1), (2)(d)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

4 Ie an appellant under the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1)(a) (as amended): see PARA 2020 post.

5 Ibid s 4(2) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 98(6), Sch 4 para 24(b); the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 10; and the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 63(2)). In relation to the time and place of appearance appointed and any recognisance to be entered into by any surety under the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37 (as amended) (as applied by the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 4(2) (as so amended)), any reference in the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37 (as amended) to the judgment of the High Court is to be construed as a reference to the judgment of the House of Lords or, if the case is remitted by that House to the court below, to the judgment of that court on the case as so remitted: Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 4(2) (amended by the Bail Act 1976 s 12(1), Sch 2 para 31). As from a day to be appointed this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 4(2) (as so amended; prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 40, Sch 9 para 13(1), (4)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to bail on an application for a quashing order following conviction or sentence by a magistrates' court see the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 37(1)(d) (as substituted); and MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 884.

6 Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 4(3) (amended by the Bail Act 1976 s 12(2), Sch 3; and the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 63(2)).

7 Ie, in relation to proceedings for an offence, and in relation to an application for a mandatory order, prohibitory order or quashing order in connection with such proceedings, the person who was or would have been the defendant in those proceedings: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 17(1)(a). Any references to 'the prosecutor' are to be construed accordingly: s 17(1).

8 Ie under ibid s 1(1)(a): see PARA 2020 post. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is replaced with that of the new Supreme Court: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1) (prospectively amended); and PARA 2020 post. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

9 For these purposes, any reference to the court below, in relation to any function of a Divisional Court, is to be construed as a reference to the Divisional Court or to a judge according as the function is by virtue of the rules of court exercisable by the Divisional Court or a judge: ibid s 17(3).

10 See note 7 supra.

11 Any order so made for the detention of a defendant who, but for the decision of the court below, would be liable to be detained under an order or direction under the Mental Health Act 1983 Pt III (ss 35-55) (as amended) (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 486 et seq) (other than under s 35, s 36 or s 38 (as amended)) is an order authorising his continued detention in pursuance of that order or direction, and the provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983 with respect to persons so liable (including the provisions as to the renewal of authority for detention and the removal or discharge of patients) apply accordingly: Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(4) (amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 s 148(1), (2), Sch 4 para 17).

Where an order is made under the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(1) (as amended) (see the text and note 14 infra) in the case of a defendant who, but for the decision of the court below, would be liable to be detained in pursuance of an interim hospital order under the Mental Health Act 1983 s 38 (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 491; and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 334), the order may, if the court thinks fit, be one authorising his continued detention in a hospital or mental nursing home; and in that event: (1) the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(3) (see the text and note 15 infra) does not apply to the order; (2) the Mental Health Act 1983 Pt III (as amended) applies as if he had been ordered under the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5 (as amended) to be detained in custody so long as an appeal under s 1 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 2020 post) is pending, and were detained in pursuance of a transfer direction together with a restriction direction; and (3) if the defendant is detained by virtue of these provisions and the appeal by the prosecutor succeeds, the Mental Health Act 1983 s 38(2) (power of court to make hospital order in the absence of an offender who is subject to an interim hospital order: see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 491; and SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 334) applies as if the defendant were still subject to an interim hospital order: Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(4A) (added by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 65(1), Sch 3 para 32; and amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 s 148(1), (2), Sch 4 para 17).

12 Bail may be granted in accordance with the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 4 (as amended) (see the text and notes 1-6 supra): s 5(1) (as amended: see note 10 supra). Such an order should normally be made: United States Government v McCaffery [1984] 2 All ER 570, 80 Cr App Rep 82, HL.

13 Ie any appeal under the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1)(a): see PARA 2020 post.

14 Ibid s 5(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 98(6), Sch 4 para 26).

15 Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(3). Where the court below has power to make an order under s 5(1) (as amended) (see the text and note 14 supra), and either no such order is made or the defendant is released or discharged by virtue of s 5(3), s 5(4) (see note 11 supra) or s 5(4A) (as added and amended) (see note 11 supra) before the appeal is disposed of, the defendant is not liable to be again detained as a result of the decision of the House of Lords on the appeal: s 5(5) (amended by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 Sch 3 para 32. As from a day to be appointed, this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 5(5) (as so amended; prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 40(4), Sch 9 para 13(1), (5)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

16 See note 13 supra. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is replaced with that of the new Supreme Court: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1) (prospectively amended); and PARA 2020 post. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

BAIL/ (4) BAIL GRANTED BY THE HIGH COURT/1192. Procedure on application to the High Court for bail.

1192. Procedure on application to the High Court for bail.

Every application to the High Court in respect of bail in any criminal proceedings:

- 1989 (1) where the defendant is in custody, must be made by claim form to a judge to show cause why the defendant should not be granted bail;
- 1990 (2) where the defendant has been admitted to bail, must be made by claim form to a judge to show cause why the variation in the arrangements for bail proposed by the applicant should not be made<sup>1</sup>.

The claim form<sup>2</sup> must, at least 24 hours before the day named therein for the hearing, be served:

- 1991 (a) where the application was made by the defendant, on the prosecutor and on the Director of Public Prosecutions, if the prosecution is being carried on by him;
- 1992 (b) where the application was made by the prosecutor or a constable<sup>3</sup>, on the defendant<sup>4</sup>.

Every application must be supported by witness statement or affidavit<sup>5</sup>.

Where a defendant in custody who desires to apply for bail is unable through lack of means to instruct a solicitor, he may give notice in writing to the court stating his desire to apply for bail and requesting that the Official Solicitor act for him in the application; and the court may assign the Official Solicitor to act for the applicant accordingly<sup>6</sup>.

Where the court grants the defendant bail or varies the arrangements under which the defendant has been granted bail, the order must be in the prescribed form and a copy of the order must be transmitted forthwith:

- 1993 (i) where the proceedings in respect of the defendant have been transferred to the Crown Court for trial or where the defendant has been committed to the Crown Court to be sentenced or otherwise dealt with, to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court;
- 1994 (ii) in any other case, to the designated officer for the court which committed the defendant<sup>7</sup>.

Where, in pursuance of an order of the High Court or the Crown Court, a person is released on bail in any criminal proceeding pending the determination of an appeal to the High Court or House of Lords or an application for a quashing order, then, upon the abandonment of the appeal or application, or upon the decision of the High Court or House of Lords being given, any justice, being a justice for the same local justice area as the magistrates' court by which that person was convicted or sentenced, may issue process for enforcing the decision in respect of which such appeal or application was brought or, as the case may be, the decision of the High Court or the House of Lords<sup>8</sup>.

If an applicant to the High Court in any criminal proceedings is refused bail, the applicant is not entitled to make a fresh application for bail to any other judge or to a Divisional Court<sup>9</sup>.

For the prescribed form of order see the relevant practice direction, Form 98 (order to release prisoner on bail), and Form 98A (order varying arrangements for bail): CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79, r 9(6), (10). The record required by the Bail Act 1976 s 5 (as amended) (see PARA 1173 ante) to be made by the High Court must be made by including in the file relating to the case in question a copy of the relevant order of the court and must contain the particulars set out in Form 98 or Form 98A, whichever is appropriate, except that in the case of a decision to withhold bail the record must be made by inserting a statement of the decision on the court's copy of the relevant claim form and including it in the file relating to the case in question: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(13).

The recognisance of any surety required as a condition of bail so granted may, where the defendant is in a prison or other place of detention, be entered into before the governor or keeper of the prison or place as well as before the persons specified in the Bail Act 1976 s 8(4) (see PARA 1172 ante): CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(6A). Where under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(5) or (6) (see PARA 1167 ante) the court imposes a requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail, it may give directions as to the manner in which and the person or persons before whom the requirement may be complied with: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(6B).

A person who, in pursuance of an order for the grant of bail made by the court under CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9, proposes to enter into a recognisance or give security must, unless the court otherwise directs, give notice in the prescribed form to the prosecutor at least 24 hours before he so enters into the recognisance or so complies with the requirements: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(7). For the prescribed form of notice see the relevant practice direction and Form 100.

Where, in pursuance of such an order a recognisance is entered into or requirement complied with before any person, it is the duty of that person to cause the recognisance or, as the case may be, a statement of the requirement complied with to be transmitted forthwith:

573 (1) where the proceedings in respect of the defendant have been transferred to the Crown Court for trial or where the defendant has been committed to the Crown Court for trial or to be sentenced or otherwise dealt with, to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court;

574 (2) in any other case, to the designated officer for the court which committed the defendant, and a copy of such recognisance or statement must at the same time be sent to the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention in which the defendant is detained, unless the recognisance was entered into or the requirement complied with before such governor or keeper: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(8).

No recognisance acknowledged in or removed into the Queen's Bench Division may be estreated without the order of a judge: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(1). Every application to estreat a recognisance in the Queen's Bench Division must be made by claim form and will be heard by a judge and must be supported by a witness statement showing in what manner the breach has been committed and proving that the summons was duly served: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(2). When it issues the claim form, the court will fix a date for the hearing of the application: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(2A). Any such claim form must be served at least two clear days before the day named therein for the hearing: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(3). On the hearing of the application the judge may, and if requested by any party must, direct any issue of fact in dispute to be tried by a jury: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(4). If it appears to the judge that a default has been made in performing the conditions of the recognisance, the judge may order the recognisance to be estreated: CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 8(5).

8 CPR Sch 1 RSC Ord 79 r 9(11). This provision refers to the petty sessions area, but this presumably is to be read as a reference to the local justice area. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is replaced with that of the new Supreme Court: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1) (prospectively amended); and PARA 2020 post. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

(5) BAIL GRANTED BY THE COURT OF APPEAL

1193. Bail pending appeal to the Court of Appeal.

If the Court of Appeal thinks fit, it may<sup>1</sup> grant the appellant<sup>2</sup> bail pending the determination of his appeal<sup>3</sup>. The power may be exercised on the application<sup>4</sup> of an appellant or, if it appears to the Registrar of Criminal Appeals that such power ought to be exercised, on a reference to the court by him<sup>5</sup>.

A judge of the Crown Court who grants a certificate of fitness for appeal<sup>6</sup> may grant bail pending appeal<sup>7</sup>.

The power to grant bail is rarely exercised. Exceptional circumstances must be shown to exist<sup>8</sup>.

Notice of the application must be given to the prosecution<sup>9</sup>.

1    Is subject to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25 (as amended): see PARA 1170 ante.

2    For the meaning of 'appellant' see PARA 1837 note 4 post.

3    Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 19(1)(a) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(2) (b); and amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 22). The power contained in the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 19(1)(a) (as substituted and amended) may be exercised by a single judge: s 31(2) (e) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(2)(c)). If the single judge refuses an application on the part of an appellant to exercise in his favour such power, the appellant is entitled to have the application determined by the Court of Appeal: Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 31(3). The power to grant bail pending determination of an appeal applies where the appellant is a person in respect of whom a deportation order is in force, even though the Secretary of State has refused to order his release: R v Ofori, R v Tackie (1993) 99 Cr App Rep 219, CA.

A second or subsequent application for bail may be made where circumstances have changed since bail was refused on an earlier application: R v Jones (1974) 59 Cr App Rep 120.

4    Notice of an application by the appellant to be granted bail pending the determination of his appeal or pending his re-trial must be in the form set out in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D, CA, Amendment to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D, CA; and, unless notice of appeal or of an application for leave to appeal has previously been given, must be accompanied by such a notice and must be served on the Registrar, save that where notice of such an application is given together with a notice of appeal or notice of application for leave to appeal, it must be served on the Crown Court officer: CrimPR 68.7(1). Such an application may be made to the court orally: CrimPR 68.7(2).

5    Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 19(2) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 29(2)(b)).

6    As to such certificate see PARA 1187 note 10 ante.

7    See PARA 1187 ante.

8    R v Watton (1978) 68 Cr App Rep 293. An application for bail is unlikely to succeed unless supported by strong grounds of appeal which are likely to result in the appellant being released from custody. Where there is a risk that the appellant's sentence will have been served by the time the appeal is heard and the grounds of appeal are arguable, bail may be granted if it is not possible to expedite the hearing: see R v Shah (13 August 1976, unreported), CA. As to the effect of release on bail on the computation of the term of any sentence see PARA 1845 post.

Although the court is reluctant to send an appellant released on bail back to custody, there is no principle to prevent the court from doing so: R v Cullis, R v Nash [1969] 1 All ER 593n, 53 Cr App Rep 162, CA; R v Kalia (1974) 60 Cr App Rep 200, CA; R v Macleod [1982] Crim LR 61, CA.

There is to be no substantial reduction made in a custodial sentence simply because the defendant has been on bail for a considerable time pending the hearing of his appeal: R v Callan (1993) 98 Cr App Rep 467, 158 JP 33, CA. Also see R v Neal (1986) Times, 29 January, CA (it is not always wise to apply for bail pending determination of appeal against sentence, especially if application is made soon after conviction and the sentence is comparatively short; the Court of Appeal has frequently taken the view that a period in prison pending such determination was sufficient; where the appellant has only been imprisoned for a comparatively short time, it is difficult for the Court of Appeal to say that that period of time suffices for the purposes of justice).

9 See the CrimPR 68.7(3). Unless the court or a judge thereof otherwise directs, notice in writing of intention to make an application relating to bail to the court must, at least 24 hours before it is made, be served on the prosecutor and on the Director of Public Prosecutions, if the prosecution was carried on by him, or on the appellant, if the application is to be made by the prosecutor or a constable under the Bail Act 1976 s 3(8) (as amended) (see PARA 1167 ante): CrimPR 68.7(3).

BAIL/(5) BAIL GRANTED BY THE COURT OF APPEAL/1194. Conditions of bail.

1194. Conditions of bail.

Where the Court of Appeal grants bail to the appellant, the recognisance of any surety required as a condition of bail may be entered into before the Registrar of Criminal Appeals or, where the person who has been granted bail is in a prison or other place of detention, before the governor or keeper of the prison or place, as well as before the persons specified<sup>1</sup> in the Bail Act 1976<sup>2</sup>.

Where the court imposes<sup>3</sup> a requirement to be complied with before a person's release on bail, the court may give directions as to the manner in which and the person or persons before whom the requirement may be complied with<sup>4</sup>.

A person who, in pursuance of an order for the grant of bail made by the court, proposes to enter into a recognisance as a surety or give security must, unless the court or a judge thereof otherwise directs, give notice to the prosecutor at least 24 hours before he so enters into the recognisance or gives security<sup>5</sup>.

Where the court has fixed the amount in which a surety is to be bound by a recognisance or has imposed<sup>6</sup> any requirement to be complied with before the appellant's release on bail, the Registrar must issue a certificate<sup>7</sup> showing the amount and conditions, if any, of the recognisance or, as the case may be, containing a statement of the requirement; and a person authorised to take the recognisance or do anything in relation to the compliance with such requirement may not be required to take or do it without production of such a certificate<sup>8</sup>.

Where, in pursuance of an order for the grant of bail made by the court, a recognisance is entered into or requirement complied with before any person, it is the duty of that person to cause that recognisance or, as the case may be, a statement that the requirement has been complied with, to be transmitted forthwith to the Registrar; and a copy of such recognisance or statement must at the same time be sent to the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention in which the appellant is detained, unless the recognisance was entered into or the requirement complied with before such governor or keeper<sup>9</sup>. A person taking a recognisance in pursuance of such an order must give a copy of it to the person entering into the recognisance<sup>10</sup>.

Where the court has fixed the amount in which a surety is to be bound by a recognisance or has imposed<sup>11</sup> any requirement to be complied with before the appellant's release on bail, the governor or keeper of the prison or other place of detention in which the appellant is detained must, on receipt of the certificate stating that the recognisances of all sureties have been taken and that all such requirements have been complied with or on being otherwise so satisfied, release the appellant<sup>12</sup>.

Any record which is required<sup>13</sup> must be made by including in the file relating to the case in question: (1) where bail is granted, a copy of the form<sup>14</sup> and a statement of the day on which, and the time and place at which, the appellant is notified to surrender to custody; and (2) in any other case, a copy of the notice<sup>15</sup> of determination of court<sup>16</sup>.

1 le the persons specified in the Bail Act 1976 s 8(4) (as amended) (see PARA 1172 ante).

2 CrimPR 68.8(1). The recognisance of a surety must be in the form set out in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D, CA, Amendment to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D, CA, there being an alternative form for use in relation to an appellant granted bail pending his re-trial or on the issue of a writ of venire de novo: CrimPR 68.8(2).

Where a recognisance has been entered into in respect of an appellant and it appears to the court that a default has been made in performing the conditions of the recognisance, the court may order the recognisance to be forfeited; and such an order may: (1) allow time for the payment of the amount due under the recognisance; (2) direct payment of that amount by instalments of such amounts and on such dates respectively as may be specified in the order; (3) discharge the recognisance or reduce the amount due thereunder: CrimPR 68.9(1). Where the court is to consider making such an order, the Registrar must give notice to that effect to the person by whom the recognisance was entered into indicating the time and place at which the matter will be considered; and no such order may be made before the expiry of seven days after the notice so required has been given: CrimPR 68.9(2). The provisions of CrimPR 68.9 apply, with the necessary modifications, with respect to a person pending his appeal to the House of Lords: see CrimPR 74.1(3); and PARA 1198 post. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is replaced with that of the new Supreme Court: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1) (prospectively amended); and PARA 2020 post. BAIL/(5) BAIL GRANTED BY THE COURT OF APPEAL/1198. Bail or detention pending appeal to the House of Lords.

1198. Bail or detention pending appeal to the House of Lords.

The Court of Appeal may<sup>1</sup>, if it seems fit, on the application of a person appealing or applying for leave to appeal<sup>2</sup> to the House of Lords, grant him bail pending the determination of his appeal<sup>3</sup>. Where, immediately after a decision of the Court of Appeal from which an appeal lies to the House of Lords, the prosecutor is granted, or gives notice that he intends to apply for, leave to appeal, and, but for the decision of the court, the defendant would be liable to be detained, the Court of Appeal may make an order providing for his detention, or direct that he must not be released except on bail<sup>4</sup> so long as an appeal to the House of Lords is pending<sup>5</sup>. Where an order is made in the case of a defendant who, but for the decision of the court, would be liable to be detained in pursuance of an order or direction under the Mental Health Act 1983<sup>6</sup> or a hospital order made by virtue of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964<sup>7</sup>, the order so made must be one authorising his continued detention in pursuance of any such order or direction<sup>8</sup>.

Where the Court of Appeal has power to make such an order<sup>9</sup>, and either no such order is made or the defendant is released or discharged<sup>10</sup> before the appeal is disposed of, the defendant is not liable to be again detained as a result of the decision of the House of Lords on the appeal<sup>11</sup>.

1 le subject to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 25: see PARA 1170 ante.

2 Other than a person appealing or applying for leave to appeal from a decision under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 9 (ss 57-74) (prosecution appeals: see PARA 1898 et seq post), the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(11) (appeals against orders or rulings at preparatory hearings: see PARA 1921 et seq post), the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 35 (appeal from judge's ruling in preparatory proceedings: see PARA 1922 post), or the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 47 (appeal in relation to the discharge of jury on ground of jury tampering: see PARA 1933 post): see the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 36 (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 36(1)(b); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 47(7), 68(2)).

3 Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 36 (amended by the Bail Act 1976 s 12(1), Sch 2 para 43; the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 15, Sch 2 para 2; the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168(2), Sch 10 para 23; the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 36(1); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 68(2)). As from a day to be appointed, this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 36 (as so amended; prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 40(4), Sch 9 para 16(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to the mode of application see PARA 1967 note 1 post. The provisions of CrimPR 68.8 (bail with condition of surety: see PARA 1194 ante) and CrimPR 68.9 (forfeiture of recognisances: see PARA 1194 ante) apply with respect to an appeal to the House of Lords as they apply with respect to an appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 Pt I (ss 1-32) (as amended)) (see PARA 1837 et seq post) with the necessary modifications: CrimPR 74.1(3). See also CrimPR 74.1(8); and PARA 1967 post. As from a day to be appointed the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords is replaced with that of the new Supreme Court: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 1(1) (prospectively amended); and PARA 2020 post. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. The power to grant bail may be exercised by a single judge: see PARA 1972 post.

4 Bail may be granted as under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 36 (as amended) (see the text and note 3 supra): s 37(2).

5 Ibid s 37(1), (2). An appeal to the House of Lords is treated as pending until any application for leave to appeal is disposed of and, if leave to appeal is granted, until the appeal is disposed of: s 34(3). For these purposes, an application for leave to appeal is to be treated as disposed of at the expiration of the time within which it may be made, if it is not made within that time: s 34(3). As to the time for applying for leave to appeal see PARA 1967 post. Unless the appeal has previously been disposed of, an order under s 37 (as amended) ceases to have effect at the expiration of the period for which the defendant would have been liable to be detained but for the decision of the Court of Appeal: s 37(3). As from a day to be appointed, ss 34, 37 are amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 9 para 16(1), (4), (6). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

6 le in pursuance of an order or direction under the Mental Health Act 1983 Pt III (ss 35-55) (as amended) (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 486 et seq), otherwise than under ss 35, 36, 38 (as amended) (admission to hospital of persons convicted by criminal courts).

7 le a hospital order made by virtue of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 5(2)(a) (as substituted) (powers to deal with persons not guilty by reason of insanity or unfit to plead etc): see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 332.

8 Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(4) (amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 s 148(1), Sch 4 para 23(g); and the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 58(1), Sch 10 para 5). The provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983 with respect to persons liable to be so detained (including provisions as to the renewal of authority for detention and the removal or discharge of patients) apply accordingly: Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(4) (amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 Sch 4 para 23(g)).

Where an order is made under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37 (as amended) in the case of a defendant who, but for the decision of the Court of Appeal, would be liable to be detained in pursuance of a remand under the Mental Health Act 1983 s 36 or an interim hospital order under s 38, the order may, if the Court of Appeal thinks fit, be one authorising his continued detention in a hospital or mental nursing home and in that event: (1) the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(3) (see note 5 supra) does not apply to the order; (2) the Mental Health Act 1983 Pt III (as amended) applies to him as if he had been ordered under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37 (as amended) to be detained in custody so long as an appeal to the House of Lords is pending, and were detained in pursuance of a transfer direction together with a restriction direction; and (3) if the defendant, having been subject to an interim hospital order, is detained by virtue of this provision and the appeal by the prosecutor succeeds, the Mental Health Act 1983 s 38(2) (power of court to make hospital order in the absence of an offender who is subject to an interim hospital order: see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 491) applies as if the defendant were still subject to an interim hospital order: Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(4A) (added by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 65(1), Sch 3 para 39; and amended by the Mental Health Act 1983 Sch 4 para 23(h)). As from a day to be appointed, this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(4A) (as so added and amended; prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 40(4), Sch 9 para 16(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

9 le an order under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37 (as amended).

10 le by virtue of ibid s 37(3) (see note 5 supra), s 37(4) (as amended) (see the text and note 8 supra) or s 37(4A) (as added and amended) (see note 8 supra).

11 Ibid s 37(5) (amended by the Mental Health (Amendment) Act 1982 s 65(1), Sch 3 para 69). As from a day to be appointed, this provision is amended so as to refer to the Supreme Court instead of the House of Lords: see the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37(5) (as so amended; prospectively amended by the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 9 para 16(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. See also DPP v Merriman [1973] AC 584, 56 Cr App Rep 766, HL. ## UPDATE

1198 Bail or detention pending appeal to the [Supreme Court]

TEXT AND NOTES--Where, immediately after a decision of the Court of Appeal from which an appeal lies to the Supreme Court, the prosecutor is granted, or gives notice that he intends to apply for, leave to appeal, if, but for the decision of the Court of Appeal, the defendant would be liable to recall (because he is subject to a community treatment order and, when it was made, he was liable to be detained) (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 528A), the Court of Appeal may make an order for the continuation of the community treatment order: Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37A (added by Mental Health Act 2007 Sch 4 para 2).

NOTES 3, 5, 8, 11--Appointed day for commencement of Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 9 is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

NOTE 3--CrimPR Pt 74 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pts 65, 74.

TEXT AND NOTES 4-11--Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 37 further amended to provide that, when the prosecution successfully appeals from the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court, an offender can be compelled to serve out any remainder of his sentence unless the Court of Appeal has actively made an order to the contrary effect: Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 Sch 8 para 13. BAIL/(6) OFFENCES RELATING TO BAIL/1199. Absconding by person released on bail.

(6) OFFENCES RELATING TO BAIL

1199. Absconding by person released on bail.

If a person who has been released on bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> fails without reasonable cause to surrender to custody<sup>2</sup>, he is guilty of an offence<sup>3</sup>.

If a person who:

- 1995 (1) has been released on bail in criminal proceedings; and
- 1996 (2) having reasonable cause therefor, has failed to surrender to custody, fails to surrender to custody<sup>4</sup> at the appointed place as soon after the appointed time as is reasonably practicable, he is guilty of an offence<sup>5</sup>.

Where a person has been released on bail in criminal proceedings and that bail was granted by a constable, a magistrates' court may not try that person for any such offence<sup>6</sup> in relation to that bail (the 'relevant offence') unless either or both of heads (a) and (b) below applies:

- 1997 (a) an information<sup>7</sup> is laid for the relevant offence within six months from the time of the commission of the relevant offence; or
- 1998 (b) an information is laid for the relevant offence no later than three months from the time of the occurrence of the first of the following events to occur after the commission of the relevant offence:

- 128. (i) the person surrenders to custody at the appointed place;
- 129. (ii) the person is arrested, or attends at a police station, in connection with the relevant offence or the offence for which he was granted bail;
- 130. (iii) the person appears or is brought before a court in connection with the relevant offence or the offence for which he was granted bail<sup>8</sup>.

Any such offence is punishable either on summary conviction or as if it were a criminal contempt of court<sup>9</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court convicts a person of any such offence<sup>10</sup>, the court may, if it thinks:

- 1999 (A) that the circumstances of the offence are such that greater punishment should be inflicted for that offence than the court has power to inflict; or
- 2000 (B) in a case where it commits or sends that person for trial to the Crown Court for another offence, that it would be appropriate for him to be dealt with for the offence under the above provisions<sup>11</sup> by the court before which he is tried for the other offence, commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>12</sup>.

A person who is convicted summarily of any such offence and is not committed to the Crown Court for sentence is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months or to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale or to both; and a person who is so committed for sentence or is dealt with as for such a contempt is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine or to both<sup>13</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings' see PARA 1166 ante.

2 It is for the defendant to prove that he had reasonable cause for his failure to surrender to custody: Bail Act 1976 s 6(3). As to whether 'prove' imposes a legal (or persuasive) burden or an evidential one, and, if the former, its compatibility with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6(2) (the presumption of innocence), see PARA 1368 et seq post. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq. A failure to give to a person granted bail in criminal proceedings a copy of the record of the decision does not constitute a reasonable cause for that person's failure to surrender to custody: Bail Act 1976 s 6(4). For the meaning of 'surrender to custody' see PARA 1167 note 2 ante.

Delay of seven minutes cannot be said to amount to an offence under s 6: R v Gateshead Justices, ex p Usher [1981] Crim LR 491, DC. It is a question of fact to be decided on all the circumstances of the particular case whether there is a 'reasonable cause': R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p Santos (1997) Times, 23 January, DC. It has been held that, where a defendant fails to surrender to his bail because he mistakenly thinks that his appearance is on another date because of an administrative blunder by his solicitors, there is no reasonable excuse for failure to surrender because the duty should have been known to the defendant in any event, although the circumstances would provide mitigating factors on his behalf: Laidlaw v Atkinson (1986) Times, 2 August, DC. Whether a mistake by a solicitor, such as giving the defendant the wrong date, amounts to 'reasonable cause', is a question of fact to be decided in all the circumstances of the case: R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p Santos supra.

3 Bail Act 1976 s 6(1). In any proceedings for an offence under s 6(1) or (2) (see the text and note 5 infra) a document purporting to be a copy of the part of the prescribed record which relates to the time and place appointed for the person specified in the record to surrender to custody and to be duly certified to be a true copy of that part of the record is evidence of the time and place appointed for that person to surrender to custody: s 6(8). For these purposes, 'the prescribed record' means the record of the decision of the court, officer or constable made in pursuance of s 5(1) (as amended) (see PARA 1173 ante); the copy of the prescribed record is duly certified if it is certified by the appropriate officer of the court or, as the case may be, by the constable who took the decision or a constable designated for the purpose by the officer in charge of the police station from which the person to whom the record relates was released; and 'the appropriate officer' of the court is: (1) in the case of a magistrates' court, the designated officer of the court; (2) in the case of the Crown Court, such officer as may be designated for the purpose in accordance with arrangements made by the Lord Chancellor; (3) in the case of the High Court, such officer as may be designated for the purpose in accordance with arrangements made by the Lord Chancellor; (4) in the case of the Court of Appeal, the Registrar of Criminal Appeals or such other officer as may be authorised by him to act for the purpose; (5) in the case of the Courts-Martial Appeal Court, the Registrar or such other officer as may be authorised by him to act for the purpose: s 6(9) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 184).

For the courses of action available in the event of a defendant failing to surrender to custody in accordance with the terms of his bail see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at I.13.1-I.13.19, CA; Practice Direction (Bail: Failure to Surrender) [2004] 1 WLR 589, sub nom Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Amendment No 3) (Bail: failure to surrender and trials in absence) [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 402 at I.13.1-I.13.19, CA.

4 See note 2 supra.

5 Bail Act 1976 s 6(2). See also note 2 supra.

6 Is an offence under ibid s 6(1) or (2): see the text and notes 1-5 supra.

7 As from a day to be appointed a reference to an information includes a reference to a written charge: see PARA 915 ante. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

8 Bail Act 1976 s 6(11)-(14) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 15(3)). The Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 127 (limitation of time for taking proceedings: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 589) is disapplied: Bail Act 1976 s 6(10) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 15(3)).

9 Bail Act 1976 s 6(5). Where a court decides of its own motion to deal with such an offence as if it were a contempt of court, the defendant must be given an opportunity to give an explanation and his counsel should be invited to make submissions: R v Davis (1986) 8 Cr App Rep (S) 64, CA. If the defendant is unrepresented, the court should give him the chance of legal representation for the purposes of explaining his absence, or at least the opportunity to explain himself: R v Woods (1989) 11 Cr App Rep (S) 551, CA. In serious cases an immediate custodial sentence is appropriate: R v Harbax Singh [1979] QB 319, 68 Cr App Rep 108, CA. In principle, a sentence for such an offence should be consecutive to the sentence for the substantive offence: R v Woods supra; R v O'Hara [2002] EWCA Crim 2963, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 121; R v McKinnon, R v White [2002] EWCA Crim 2952, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 133. Cf R v Gorman (1992) 14 Cr App Rep (S) 120, CA (explained in R v O'Hara supra; R v McKinnon, R v White supra). See also Schiavo v Anderton [1987] QB 20, 83 Cr App Rep 228, DC; considered in R v Reader (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 294, CA. The provision in the Bail Act 1976 s 6(5) that the offence may be dealt with as if it were a contempt of court does not convert the offence into an offence of contempt; it merely provides an alternative procedure for dealing with the offence (which remains an offence contrary to s 6(1)): R v Reader (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 294, CA; R v Lubega (1999) 163 JP 221, CA.

Where the Crown Court deals with such an offence as a contempt of court, an appeal lies as of right from any order or decision in relation to the offence: see the Administration of Justice Act 1960 s 13(1), (2)(bb) (as added), (5)(a) (as amended); and PARA 1920 post.

10    le an offence under the Bail Act 1976 s 6(1) or (2): see the text and notes 1-5 supra.

11    le an offence under ibid s 6(1) or (2): see the text and notes 1-5 supra.

12    Ibid s 6(6) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 48(1), (4)). The Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 48(1), (4) amends the Bail Act 1976 s 6(6) so as to refer to persons being sent rather than committed for trial, but at the date at which this volume states the law this amendment only has effect in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) or s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARAS 1132-1133 ante). See also CrimPR 43.1(1), (3); and PARA 1123 note 11 ante.

UPDATE

1199 Absconding by person released on bail

NOTE 2--Where a defendant fails to attend court in response to a summons, he cannot be convicted under the 1976 Act s 6 if he is not on bail at the time: R v Noble (2008) Times, 21 July, CA.

NOTE 3--Bail Act 1976 s 6(9) further amended: Armed Forces Act 2006 Sch 16 para 75.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/17. BAIL/(6) OFFENCES RELATING TO BAIL/1200. Liability to arrest for absconding or breaking conditions of bail.

1200. Liability to arrest for absconding or breaking conditions of bail.

If a person who has been released on bail in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> and is under a duty to surrender into the custody of a court fails to surrender to custody<sup>2</sup> at the time appointed for him to do so, the court may issue a warrant for his arrest<sup>3</sup>.

If a person has been released on bail in connection with extradition proceedings<sup>4</sup>, and that person is under a duty to surrender into the custody of a constable, and he fails to surrender to custody at the time appointed for him to do so, a magistrates' court may issue a warrant for the person's arrest<sup>5</sup>.

If a person who has been released on bail in criminal proceedings absents himself from the court at any time after he has surrendered into the custody of the court and before the court is ready to begin or to resume the hearing of the proceedings, the court may issue a warrant for his arrest; but no warrant may be so issued where that person is absent in accordance with leave given to him by or on behalf of the court<sup>6</sup>.

A person who has been released on bail in criminal proceedings and is under a duty to surrender into the custody of a court may be arrested without warrant by a constable:

- 2001 (1) if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that that person is not likely to surrender to custody;
- 2002 (2) if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that that person is likely to break any of the conditions of his bail or has reasonable grounds for suspecting that that person has broken any of those conditions; or
- 2003 (3) in a case where that person was released on bail with one or more surety or sureties<sup>7</sup>, if a surety notifies a constable in writing that that person is unlikely to surrender to custody and that for that reason the surety wishes to be relieved of his obligations as a surety<sup>8</sup>.

A person arrested in pursuance of heads (1) to (3) above must: (a) except where he was arrested within 24 hours of the time appointed for him to surrender to custody, be brought as soon as practicable and in any event within 24 hours<sup>9</sup> after his arrest before a justice of the peace<sup>10</sup>; and (b) in such excepted case, be brought before the court at which he was to have surrendered to custody<sup>11</sup>.

A person who has been released on bail in connection with extradition proceedings and is under a duty to surrender into the custody of a constable may be arrested without warrant by a constable on any of the grounds set out in heads (1) to (3) above<sup>12</sup>. A person so arrested must be brought as soon as practicable and in any event within 24 hours after his arrest before a justice of the peace for the local justice area in which he was arrested<sup>13</sup>.

A justice of the peace before whom a person is so brought<sup>14</sup> may, if of the opinion that that person:

- 2004 (i) is not likely to surrender to custody; or
- 2005 (ii) has broken or is likely to break any condition of his bail, remand him in custody or commit him to custody, as the case may require, or alternatively, grant him bail subject to the same or to different conditions, but if not of that opinion must grant him bail subject to the same conditions (if any) as were originally imposed<sup>15</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'bail in criminal proceedings' see PARA 1166 ante.

2 For the meaning of 'surrender to custody' see PARA 1167 note 2 ante.

3 Bail Act 1976 s 7(1).

4 For the meaning of 'extradition proceedings' see PARA 1166 note 7 ante.

5 Bail Act 1976 s 7(1A), (1B) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (7)).

6 Bail Act 1976 s 7(2).

7 As to bail with sureties see PARA 1172 ante.

8 Bail Act 1976 s 7(3).

9 In reckoning for the purposes of ibid s 7 (as amended) any period of 24 hours, no account is to be taken of Christmas Day, Good Friday or any Sunday: s 7(7) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (10)). See R v Governor of Glen Parva Young Offender Institution, ex p G (A Minor) [1998] QB 877, [1998] 2 Cr App Rep 349 (stipulation that defendant be brought before a justice within 24 hours is absolute and should not be overlooked).

10 A Recorder of the Crown Court is not a justice of the peace for the purposes of the Bail Act 1976 s 7 (as amended): Re Marshall (1994) 159 JP 688, DC.

11 Bail Act 1976 s 7(4) (amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 65(4), Sch 12; the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), (3), Sch 8 para 185, Sch 10; and the Extradition Act 2003 ss 198(1), (8), 220, Sch 4). Where a person who has been released on bail and is under a duty to surrender into the custody of a court is brought under the Bail Act 1976 s 7(4)(a) (see head (a) in the text) before a justice of the peace, the justice must cause a copy of the record made in pursuance of s 5 (as amended) (see PARA 1173 ante) relating to his decision under s 7(5) in respect of that person to be sent to the court officer for that court, although this rule does not apply where the court is a magistrates' court acting for the same local justice area as that for which the justice acts: CrimPR 19.12.

12 Bail Act 1976 s 7(4A) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (9)).

13 Bail Act 1976 s 7(4B) (added by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (9)). This provision refers to the petty sessions area, but this presumably is to be read as a reference to the local justice area.

14 Ie under the Bail Act 1976 s 7(4) (as amended) or s 7(4B) (as added).

15 Bail Act 1976 s 7(5) (amended by the Extradition Act 2003 s 198(1), (10)). Where the person so brought before the justice is a child or young person and the justice does not grant him bail, the Bail Act 1976 s 7(5) (as amended) has effect subject to the provisions of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 s 23 (as amended) (remand to the care of local authorities: see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 1247-1253): Bail Act 1976 s 7(6). For the meaning of 'child' see PARA 1167 note 31 ante; and for the meaning of 'young person' see PARA 1167 note 32 ante. Where a breach of condition is alleged, a justice acting under s 7(5) (as amended) must first consider whether there has been a breach of the bail condition alleged; if he finds such a breach he must then consider whether to admit the person to bail again or to remand him in custody and in this respect any issues relating to reasonable cause are relevant: R (on the application of Vickers) v West London Magistrates' Court [2003] EWHC 1809 (Admin), (2003) 167 JP 473.

A single justice has the jurisdiction to determine whether a bailed defendant should be remanded in custody or granted further bail: R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p DPP [1993] QB 233, 95 Cr App Rep 222, DC. A justice has no power to adjourn proceedings under the Bail Act 1976 s 7(5) (as amended) since the terms of s 7(5) (as amended) are mandatory; if the justice is not of the opinion that the bailed defendant is not likely to surrender to custody or has broken or is likely to break any condition of his bail, he must grant the defendant bail subject to the same conditions, if any, as were originally imposed: R v Liverpool City Justices, ex p DPP supra. However, the Bail Act 1976 s 7(5) (as amended) does not prevent proceedings being adjourned so that they can be heard and determined by a differently constituted court on the day of adjournment: R (on the application of Hussain) v Derby Magistrates' Court [2001] EWHC Admin 507, [2001] 1 WLR 2454, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 37, DC. Where a person arrested under the Bail Act 1976 s 7 (as amended) is brought before the court he must be dealt with in accordance with s 7(5) (as amended). The magistrates' court does not have the power to commit the defendant to the Crown Court for that court to deal with the question of bail: R v Teeside Magistrates' Court, ex p Ellison [2001] EWCA Admin 11, 165 JP 355.

The procedures under the Bail Act 1976 s 7(5) (as amended) are compatible with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 5 (right to liberty and security), and art 6 (right to a fair trial) provided, in the case of art 5, that the court evaluates the material presented in the context of the consequences to the defendant and gives the defendant a fair opportunity to answer the material, including the opportunity to cross-examine a witness who has given oral evidence, and by giving evidence in person: R (on the application of DPP) v Havering Magistrates' Court, R (on the application of McKeown) v Wirral Borough Magistrates' Court [2001] 3 All ER 997, [2001] 2 Cr App Rep 12, DC. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

The Bail Act 1976 s 7 (as amended) applies with modifications in relation to cases to which a custody time limit applies: see PARA 1156 note 8 ante.

BAIL/(6) OFFENCES RELATING TO BAIL/1201. Agreeing to indemnify sureties in criminal proceedings.

1201. Agreeing to indemnify sureties in criminal proceedings.

If a person agrees with another to indemnify that other against any liability which that other may incur as a surety<sup>1</sup> to secure the surrender to custody of a person accused or convicted of or under arrest for an offence, he and that other person are guilty of an offence<sup>2</sup>. Such an offence is committed whether the agreement is made before or after the person to be indemnified becomes a surety and whether or not he becomes a surety and whether the agreement contemplates compensation in money or in money's worth<sup>3</sup>.

Where a magistrates' court convicts a person of such an offence, the court may, if it thinks:

- 2006 (1) that the circumstances of the offence are such that greater punishment should be inflicted for that offence than the court has power to inflict; or
- 2007 (2) in a case where it commits or sends that person for trial to the Crown Court for another offence, that it would be appropriate for him to be dealt with for such an offence by the court before which he is tried for the other offence, commit him in custody or on bail to the Crown Court for sentence<sup>4</sup>.

A person guilty of such an offence is liable on conviction on indictment or if sentenced by the Crown Court on committal for sentence to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine or to both, or on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months<sup>5</sup> or to a fine not exceeding the prescribed sum<sup>6</sup> or to both<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to bail with sureties see PARA 1172 ante.

2 Bail Act 1976 s 9(1). No proceedings for such an offence may be instituted except by or with the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions: s 9(5). As to the effect of this limitation see PARA 1071 ante.

3 Ibid s 9(2).

4 Ibid s 9(3) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 48(1), (5)). The Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 48(1), (5) amends the Bail Act 1976 s 9(3)(b) (see head (2) in the text) so as to refer to persons being sent rather than committed for trial, but at the date at which this volume states the law this amendment only has effect in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) or s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARAS 1132-1133 ante).

5 As from a day to be appointed this maximum term of imprisonment is increased to a maximum term of 12 months (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 281(7), 282(2), (3) (not yet in force); and PARA 1121 ante), although this does not affect the penalty for any offence committed before that day (see s 282(4) (not yet in force)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

6 As to the prescribed sum see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 141.

An indictment is a written accusation preferred before the Crown Court, signed by the proper officer of that court, and charging one or more persons with the commission of one or more indictable offences<sup>1</sup>.

An indictment lies for any offence other than an offence over which courts of summary jurisdiction have exclusive jurisdiction<sup>1</sup>.

INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1204. Trial of indictable offences.

1204. Trial of indictable offences.

All proceedings on indictment must be brought before the Crown Court<sup>1</sup>. The jurisdiction of the Crown Court with respect to proceedings on indictment includes jurisdiction in proceedings on indictment for offences wherever committed, and in particular proceedings on indictment for offences within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty<sup>2</sup>.

At a coroner's inquest into the death of a person who came by his death by murder, manslaughter or infanticide, the purpose of the proceedings does not include the finding of any person guilty of the murder, manslaughter or infanticide; and accordingly a coroner's inquisition may in no case charge a person with any of those offences<sup>3</sup>.

1 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 46(1). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to trial on indictment see PARA 1232 et seq post. There is an alternative method of proceeding by way of impeachment which is in practice obsolete: see COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 355. A person may be punished for criminal contempt of court either summarily or on indictment; the latter method is, however, now obsolete: see CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 491.

INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1205. How an indictment is preferred.

1205. How an indictment is preferred.

A bill of indictment charging any person with an indictable offence may be preferred<sup>1</sup> by any person before a court in which the person charged may lawfully be indicted for that offence; and, where a bill of indictment has been so preferred, the proper officer of the court must, if he is satisfied that the statutory requirements<sup>2</sup> have been complied with, sign the bill<sup>3</sup>, and it thereupon becomes an indictment and is proceeded with accordingly<sup>4</sup>. However, if the judge<sup>5</sup> of the court is satisfied that the statutory requirements have been complied with, he may, on the application of the prosecution or of his own motion, direct the proper officer to sign the bill, and the bill must be signed accordingly<sup>6</sup>.

A bill of indictment is preferred before the Crown Court by delivering the bill to the Crown Court officer<sup>7</sup>. However, where with the assent of the prosecutor the bill is prepared by, or under the supervision of, the appropriate officer, it is not necessary for the bill to be delivered to him, but, as soon as it is settled to his satisfaction, it is deemed to have been duly preferred<sup>8</sup>. The bill of indictment must be preferred: (1) where a defendant has been committed for trial, within a period of 28 days commencing with the date of committal; (2) where a notice of transfer has been given<sup>9</sup> or served<sup>10</sup>, within a period of 28 days commencing with the date on which notice is given or served; or (3) where a person is sent for trial<sup>11</sup>, within a period of 28 days commencing with the date on which copies of the documents containing the evidence on which the charge or charges are based are served<sup>12</sup> on the defendant<sup>13</sup>; but that period may, on the application of the person preferring the bill of indictment or otherwise, be extended by a judge of the Crown Court<sup>14</sup> before or after it has expired, and any period so extended may be further extended in like manner<sup>15</sup>.

A person charged on indictment must, if he so requests, be supplied by the proper officer of the court of trial with a copy of the indictment free of charge<sup>16</sup>.

1    Is subject to the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2 (as amended): see PARAS 1206-1208 post.

2    Is the requirements of ibid s 2(2) (as amended): see PARA 1206 post.

As to the summary trial of an information against a child or young person for an indictable offence see PARA 1116 ante.

3    Signature by the proper officer of the court is a mandatory, rather than a directory, requirement: see R v Morais [1988] 3 All ER 161, 87 Cr App Rep 9, CA (trial and conviction on unsigned 'indictment' held to be a nullity; the Court of Appeal stated that the proper officer's signature was not 'a comparatively meaningless formality' but 'a necessary condition precedent to the existence of a proper indictment'); distinguished, on the ground that in the circumstances the requirement for the proper officer's signature was a meaningless formality, in R v Jackson [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 497, CA, (judge had directed in open court that two new indictments be signed because original indictment contained misjoined counts, but proper officer did not sign them; held that in circumstances proper officer's signature was a meaningless formality, that the proper officer's signature was deemed to have been appended, and that the indictments were therefore valid and the trial was not a nullity). The normal practice is for the signature to be placed immediately after the last count and to be dated; any departure from this practice is to be strongly discouraged but does not of itself invalidate the indictment: R v Laming (1989) 90 Cr App Rep 450, CA.

When the bill is signed, the date should be added and the date of preferment and any extension should be recorded on it: R v Stewart (1990) 154 JP 512, CA.

4    See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(1).

5 For these purposes, 'judge' includes any judge of the High Court, or any circuit judge, Recorder or District Judge (Magistrates' Court): see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 8(1) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 65(1)). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

13 CrimPR 14.2(1).

14 For these purposes, 'judge of the Crown Court' has the meaning given in note 5 supra.

15 CrimPR 14.2(2). Notwithstanding CrimPR 14.2(2), the first extension of the period may be granted by the Crown Court officer provided that the period of the extension does not exceed 28 days; but if the court officer is of the opinion that the first extension of the period should not be granted, he must refer the application to a judge of the Crown Court who must determine the application himself: CrimPR 14.2(3).

Where such an application is made after the expiry of the period referred to in CrimPR 14.2(1) (see the text and notes 9-13 supra) or, as the case may be, the expiry of that period as extended under CrimPR 14.2(2), the application must in addition include a statement of the reasons why the application was not made before the expiry of the period or, as the case may be, the extended period: CrimPR 14.2(5).

The time limit prescribed for the preferment of a bill of indictment is not necessarily mandatory: see R v Urbanowski [1976] 1 All ER 679, 62 Cr App Rep 229, CA; R v Sheerin (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 68, CA; R v Soffe (1982) 75 Cr App Rep 133, CA (court gave general guidance on the procedure to be adopted in preferring bills of indictment); R v Farooki (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 257, CA. Consequently, a breach of CrimPR 14.2 does not invalidate subsequent proceedings: R v Soffe supra; R v Farooki supra.

16 Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 10(1). The cost of supplying a person charged on indictment with a copy of the indictment is to be treated as part of the costs of the prosecution for the purposes of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 ss 16, 17 (as amended; prospectively further amended) (see PARAS 2059, 2062 post); Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 10(2); Interpretation Act 1978 ss 17(2)(a), 23. Those engaged in the defence should be in close touch with the court so as to obtain a copy of the indictment as soon as it is signed: R v Dickson [1969] 1 All ER 729, 53 Cr App Rep 263, CA.

INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1206. Restrictions on preferring indictments.

1206. Restrictions on preferring indictments.

No bill of indictment charging any person with an indictable offence may be preferred unless:

- 2008 (1) the person charged has been committed for trial for the offence<sup>1</sup>;
- 2009 (2) the offence is specified<sup>2</sup> in a notice of transfer<sup>3</sup>;
- 2010 (3) the person charged has been sent<sup>4</sup> for trial<sup>5</sup>;
- 2011 (4) the bill is preferred by the direction of the criminal division of the Court of Appeal<sup>6</sup> or by the direction or with the consent of a judge of the High Court<sup>7</sup>; or
- 2012 (5) the bill is preferred under the provisions<sup>8</sup> relating to the re-institution of proceedings stayed by the Crown Court<sup>9</sup>.

However, where the person charged has been committed for trial, the bill of indictment against him may include, either in substitution for or in addition to counts charging the offence or offences for which he was committed, any counts founded on facts or evidence disclosed to the magistrates' court inquiring into that offence as examining justices, being counts which may be lawfully joined in the same indictment<sup>10</sup>. In a case to which head (2) above applies, the bill of indictment may include, either in substitution for or in addition to any count charging an offence specified in the notice of transfer, any counts founded on material that accompanied the copy of that notice which<sup>11</sup> was given to the person charged, being counts which may lawfully be joined in the same indictment<sup>12</sup>. In a case to which head (3) above applies, the bill of indictment may include, either in substitution for or in addition to any count charging an offence specified in the notice<sup>13</sup>, any counts founded on material which<sup>14</sup> was served on the person charged, being counts which may be lawfully joined in the same indictment<sup>15</sup>.

The charges which may be added are not to be confined to charges similar to those on which the committal was based<sup>16</sup>. The power to include in an indictment a count representing a charge which the examining justices have rejected should be exceptionally used<sup>17</sup>. Where the justices have refused to commit upon a charge, the prosecution may include a count for that charge in the indictment, but the defence is entitled to object by moving to quash that count; the trial judge must then rule whether the count is founded on facts or evidence disclosed in any examination or deposition taken before the justices, and may either allow or disallow that count of the indictment<sup>18</sup>. Although not included in the committal<sup>19</sup> or in any direction or consent, a count charging a previous conviction for an offence may be included in any bill of indictment<sup>20</sup>.

Where there has been a committal for trial for an offence not known to the law, the committal is a nullity and no other charge may be validly added<sup>21</sup>.

If a bill of indictment preferred otherwise than in accordance with the statutory provisions<sup>22</sup> is signed by the proper officer of the court, the indictment is liable to be quashed<sup>23</sup>; but if the bill contains several counts, and the statutory provisions have been complied with as respects one or more of them, those counts only that were wrongly included may be so quashed<sup>24</sup>. However, where a person who has been committed<sup>25</sup> for trial is convicted on any indictment or any count of an indictment, that indictment or count may not be so quashed in any proceedings on appeal, unless application was made at the trial that it should be so quashed<sup>26</sup>. There is no rule of law or practice which prohibits two indictments being in existence at the same time for the same offence against the same person on the same facts, but the court will not allow the prosecution to proceed on both such indictments<sup>27</sup>. They cannot in law be tried together and the court will insist that the prosecution elects the one on which the trial is to proceed<sup>28</sup>.

1 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(a). As from a day to be appointed this provision is amended so as to refer to persons being sent rather than committed for trial: see s 2(2)(a) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 34(1), (2)(a)). At the date at which this volume states the law this amendment has effect only in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante): Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 9) Order 2005, SI 2005/1267, art 2(1), Schedule para 2. The words 'the offence' require that there must be no substantial departure from the original charge, although the count need not be framed exactly as was the charge before the committing justices: see R v McDonnell [1966] 1 QB 233, 50 Cr App Rep 5. It is only once that an indictment may be preferred on the basis of one committal (but for an exception to this rule see R v Groom [1977] QB 6, 62 Cr App Rep 242, CA); if that indictment fails in toto, the remedy for the Crown, if it is desired to pursue the prosecution, is to obtain leave to prefer a second indictment: R v Thompson, R v Clein [1975] 2 All ER 1028, [1975] 1 WLR 1425, CA.

As from a day to be appointed head (2) in the text is repealed: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 34(1), (2)(b), Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

6 A re-trial pursuant to an order of the Court of Appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 7 (as amended) (see PARA 1896 post) is upon a fresh indictment preferred by direction of that court (see s 8(1) (as amended); and PARA 1896 post) but after the end of two months from the date of the order for his re-trial a person may not be arraigned on an indictment preferred in pursuance of such a direction unless the Court of Appeal gives leave: see s 8(1) (as amended); and PARA 1896 post.

7 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (amended by the Criminal Appeal Act 1964 s 5, Sch 2; the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 152(1), Sch 5; and the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 31(6), Sch 2).

9 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(c) (added by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 119, Sch 8 para 5(1)); and see R v Considine (1979) 70 Cr App Rep 239, CA (addition to indictment of offence for which examining justices did not commit for trial not unlawful). Leave to prefer an indictment is reserved to the Court of Appeal or a High Court judge; if leave is given by a judge in the Crown Court who is not a High Court judge, the indictment is invalid and the trial a nullity: R v Thompson, R v Clein [1975] 2 All ER 1028, [1975] 1 WLR 1425, CA. Cf R v Cairns (1983) 87 Cr App Rep 287, CA.

The Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) will not inquire into the exercise of the judge's discretion to consent to the preferment of a bill of indictment provided that it is clear that he had the jurisdiction to deal with the application: R v Rothfield [1937] 4 All ER 320, 26 Cr App Rep 103, CCA. 10 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2) proviso (i) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 47, Sch 1 paras 17, 39). As from a day to be appointed this proviso is substituted so that where the person charged has been sent for trial, the bill of indictment against him may include, either in substitution for or in addition to any count charging a specified offence, any counts founded on material which was served in pursuance of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52(6), Sch 3 para 1 (as amended) (see PARA 1138 ante) on the person charged, being counts which may lawfully be joined in the same indictment: see the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2) proviso (i) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 para 34(1), (2)). At the date at which this volume states the law this substitution has effect only in relation to cases sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51A(3)(d) (as added) (see PARA 1133 ante): Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 9) Order 2005, SI Counts arising from separate committals may be joined in one indictment: R v Wilson (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 169, CA. The Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2) (as amended; prospectively further amended) is not infringed in relation to one defendant by the addition of counts charging persons other than that defendant who have been separately committed for trial for offences which can lawfully be charged in counts in the same indictment: R v Groom [1977] QB 6, 62 Cr App Rep 242, CA.

INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1207. Voluntary bills.

1207. Voluntary bills.

On obtaining the consent of a judge of the High Court, any person may prefer a bill of indictment against anyone whom he accuses of committing an indictable offence<sup>1</sup>. The usual practice is to prefer such a bill of indictment only when there has been a dismissal of an information by a magistrates' court<sup>2</sup> or when there has been a sending or committal for trial and the prosecution wishes to include in the indictment a new offence<sup>3</sup> or an offence which amounts to a substantial departure from the charge originally made<sup>4</sup>.

1 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(1), (2) (amended by the Criminal Appeal Act 1964 s 5, Sch 2; the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 152(1), Sch 5; and the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 31(6), Sch 2); the Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084, r 6; and PARA 1206 ante. Such a bill is, by custom, still referred to as a 'voluntary bill', although strictly the voluntary bill which could, by common law, be preferred before a grand jury by any person, without previous inquiry, leave or notice, no longer exists.

2 See eg a case reported in (1913) 135 LT Jo 164.

3 See eg R v Morais [1988] 3 All ER 161, 87 Cr App Rep 9, CA.

4 Where it is sought to join a defendant or more than one with others who have already been committed for trial, it is the practice to prefer a voluntary bill in respect of all of them in order to avoid the delay which would be occasioned by further committal proceedings. See R v Smith [1958] 1 All ER 475, 42 Cr App Rep 35 (voluntary bill preferred combining several counts in order to avoid separate trials).

Supreme Court Act 1981 now cited as Senior Courts Act 1981: Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 11 para 1 (in force 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18. INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1208. Application for leave to prefer a voluntary bill.

1208. Application for leave to prefer a voluntary bill.

An application for consent to the preferment of a bill of indictment<sup>1</sup> may be made to a judge of the High Court<sup>2</sup>. Every such application must be in writing and must be signed by the applicant or his solicitor<sup>3</sup>. It must be accompanied by the bill of indictment which it is proposed to prefer and, unless the application is made by or on behalf of the Director of Public Prosecutions, it must also be accompanied by an affidavit by the applicant or, if the applicant is a corporation, by an affidavit by some director or officer of the corporation, that the statements contained in the application are, to the best of the deponent's knowledge, information and belief, true<sup>4</sup>. The application must also state whether or not any application has previously been made<sup>5</sup> and whether there have been any committal proceedings<sup>6</sup>, and the result of any such application or proceedings<sup>7</sup>. The defendant has no right to be heard or make representations<sup>8</sup>. In addition, the application must state whether there has been any sending for trial and any application for dismissal<sup>9</sup>, and the result of any such application<sup>10</sup>.

Where there have been no committal proceedings and no sending for trial, the application must state the reason why it is desired to prefer a bill without such proceedings and: (1) proofs of the evidence of witnesses whom it is proposed to call in support of the charges must accompany the application; and (2) the application must embody a statement that the evidence shown by the proofs will be available at the trial and that the case disclosed by the proofs is, to the best of the knowledge, information and belief of the applicant, substantially a true case<sup>11</sup>.

Where there have been committal proceedings, and the justice or justices have refused to commit the accused for trial, or there has been a sending for trial, and the charge or charges have been withdrawn or dismissed, the application must be accompanied by:

- 2013 (a) a copy of the committal documents; and
- 2014 (b) proofs of any evidence which it is proposed to call in support of the charges, so far as that evidence is not contained in the committal documents or given documents, and the application must embody a statement that the evidence shown by the proofs and, except in so far as may be expressly stated to the contrary in the application, the evidence shown by the committal documents or given documents will be available at the trial and that the case disclosed by the committal documents or given documents and proofs is, to the best of the knowledge, information and belief of the applicant, substantially a true case<sup>12</sup>.

Where the defendant has been committed or sent for trial, the application must state why it is made and must be accompanied by proofs of any evidence which it is proposed to call in support of the charges, so far as that evidence is not contained in the committal documents or given documents, and, unless the committal documents or given documents have already been transmitted to the judge to whom the application is made, must also be accompanied by a copy of the committal documents or given documents; and the application must embody a statement that the evidence shown by the proofs will be available at the trial, and that the case disclosed by the committal documents or given documents and proofs is, to the best of the knowledge, information and belief of the applicant, substantially a true case<sup>13</sup>.

It is the duty of any person in charge of any committal documents to give to any person desiring to make an application for leave to prefer a bill of indictment against a person in respect of whom committal proceedings have taken place a reasonable opportunity to inspect the committal documents and, if so required by him, to supply him with copies of the documents or any part of them<sup>14</sup>.

1     Ie under the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (as amended): see PARA 1206 ante.

2     Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084, r 6.

3     Ibid r 7.

4     Ibid r 8(a) (amended by SI 2000/3360). The application for consent must also be accompanied by documents specified in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.2, CA. As to the exercise by Crown prosecutors of the powers of the Director of Public Prosecutions in respect of the institution of proceedings see the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 1(6); and PARA 1081 ante. The contention that s 1(6) confers the powers of the Director on Crown prosecutors only where they are acting on the express direction of the Director would produce absurd results: R v Crown Court at Liverpool, ex p Bray [1987] Crim LR 51, DC.

5     Ie under the Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084 (as amended) or any rules revoked by those Rules.

6     For these purposes, 'committal proceedings' means proceedings before a magistrates' court acting as examining justices: see ibid r 2.

7     Ibid r 8(b).

8     R v Raymond [1981] QB 910, 72 App Rep 151, CA; R v Soffe (1982) 75 Cr App Rep 133, CA. There may well be a discretion vested in the judge to agree to receive written representations with regard to an application for leave to prefer a bill of indictment from, or on behalf of, the accused. That discretion, exercisable only in very unusual circumstances, does not, it is thought, extend to hearing oral representations. If the discretion does go that far, it is only in an extraordinary circumstance that it should be exercised in favour of the accused: R v Raymond supra at 921 and 161.

Neither the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 nor the Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971 expressly require a prosecuting authority applying for consent to the preferment of a voluntary bill to give notice of the application to the prospective defendant or to serve on him a copy of documents delivered to the judge. However, guidance issued by the prosecuting authorities for England and Wales on the procedures to be adopted in seeking judicial consent to the preferment of voluntary bills directs prosecutors: (1) on the making of application for consent to preferment of a voluntary bill, forthwith to give notice to the prospective defendant that such application has been made; (2) at about the same time, to serve on the prospective defendant a copy of all the documents delivered to the judge (save to the extent that these have already been served on him); (3) to inform the prospective defendant that he may make submissions in writing to the judge, provided that he does so within nine working days of the giving of notice under head (1) supra. Prosecutors will be directed that these procedures should be followed unless there are good grounds for not doing so, in which case prosecutors will inform the judge that the procedures have not been followed and seek his leave to dispense with all or any of them: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.4, IV.35.5, CA.

11    Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084, r 9(1) (amended by SI 2000/3360). In addition, the application must be accompanied by: (1) a summary of the evidence or other document which (a) identifies the counts in the proposed indictment on which he has been committed for trial (or which are substantially the same as charges on which he has been so committed); and (b) in relation to each other count in the proposed indictment, identifies the pages in the accompanying statements and exhibits where the essential evidence said to support that count is to be found; (2) marginal markings of the relevant passages on the pages of the statements and exhibits identified under head (1)(b) supra: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.2, CA.

the defendant has not been so committed, should also accompany the application: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.2, CA.

1208 Application for leave to prefer a voluntary bill

NOTE 14--CrimPR Pt 14 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 14.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18. INDICTMENTS/(1) PREFERRING AN INDICTMENT/1209. Decision on application.

1209. Decision on application.

Unless the judge otherwise directs in any particular case, his decision on an application for consent to the preferment of a bill of indictment must be signified in writing on the application without requiring the attendance before him of the applicant or of any of the witnesses; and, if the judge thinks fit to require the attendance of the applicant or of any of the witnesses, their attendance may not be in open court<sup>1</sup>. Unless the judge gives a direction to the contrary, where an applicant is required so to attend, he may attend by a solicitor or by counsel<sup>2</sup>.

The Court of Appeal will not inquire into the judge's exercise of his discretion in granting or refusing leave, provided that it is clear that the judge had jurisdiction to deal with the application<sup>3</sup>.

1 Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084, r 10. The preferment of a voluntary bill is an exceptional procedure. Consent should only be granted where good reason to depart from the normal procedure is clearly shown and only where the interests of justice, rather than considerations of administrative convenience, require it. Judges should not give leave to dispense unless good grounds are shown: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.3, IV.35.5, CA.

A judge to whom application for consent to the preferment of a voluntary bill is made will, of course, wish to consider carefully the documents submitted by the prosecutor and any written submissions timeously made by the prospective defendant, and may properly seek any necessary amplification. The judge may invite oral submissions from either party, or accede to a request for an opportunity to make such oral submissions, if the judge considers it necessary or desirable to receive such oral submissions in order to make a sound and fair decision on the application. Any such oral submissions should be made on notice to the other party, who should be allowed to attend: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.35.6, CA.

Once the consent of the judge has been obtained, the bill is preferred in the ordinary way: see PARA 1205 ante.

(i) Contents of Indictment

1210. General provisions.

In form an indictment is an accusation at the suit of the Queen that one or more persons named or otherwise identified have committed one or more specified offences, which has been signed by the proper officer of the court. Until it is signed, it is a bill of indictment<sup>1</sup>. Every indictment must contain, and is sufficient if it contains, a statement of the specific offence or offences with which the defendant is charged, together with such particulars as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge<sup>2</sup>. An indictment must be in the prescribed form or in a form substantially to the like effect<sup>3</sup>.

Notwithstanding any rule of law or practice, and subject to the provisions of the Indictments Act 1915, an indictment is not open to objection in respect of its form or contents if it is framed in accordance with rules<sup>4</sup> made under that Act<sup>5</sup>.

1 See the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(1) (as amended); and PARA 1205 ante.

2 See the Indictments Act 1915 s 3(1); and the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 5(1).

3 For the prescribed form of indictment see ibid r 4(1), Sch 1.

4 The Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, revoke and replace the Indictment Rules 1915 (contained in the Indictments Act 1915 Sch 1): see the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 2(1), Sch 2. A number of the Indictment Rules 1915 which were not reproduced in the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, are still observed as a matter of common sense and established practice: see PARAS 1213-1217 post. As to defective indictments see PARAS 1226-1227 post.

The Criminal Procedure Rule Committee (see COURTS vol 10 (Reissue) PARA 577) has power from time to time to make rules varying or annulling the rules contained in the Indictments Act 1915 Sch 1 (repealed) and to make further rules with respect to the matters dealt with in those rules; and those rules have effect subject to any modifications or additions so made: s 2(2) (amended by the Criminal Justice Administration Act 1956 s 19(4)(b); and the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 67).

5 Indictments Act 1915 s 3(2). An indictment for a specific offence is not open to objection in respect of its form if it is framed in accordance with a form of indictment for that offence for the time being approved by the Lord Chief Justice: see the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 5(2). At the date at which this volume states the law no specimen forms of indictment had been approved by the Lord Chief Justice under r 5(2).

NOTES--SI 1971/1253 revoked: SI 2007/699.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18. INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1211. Counts.

1211. Counts.

Where more than one offence is charged in an indictment, the statement and particulars of each offence must be set out in the indictment in a separate paragraph called a count<sup>1</sup>. A single count may not charge the defendant with more than one offence; if it does, it will, generally speaking, be bad for duplicity<sup>2</sup>.

Where an indictment contains more than one count, the counts must be numbered consecutively<sup>3</sup>. It is undesirable that an indictment should contain an unduly large number of counts<sup>4</sup> or that it should include charges of a trivial nature<sup>5</sup>.

When there are counts in an indictment which are mutually exclusive, the trial judge may leave both counts to the jury if the evidence establishes a prima facie case on both counts, without requiring the prosecution to make an election at the close of its case as to which count it wishes to be left to the jury<sup>6</sup>.

A count charging a person with one of the specified summary offences<sup>7</sup> may be included in an indictment if the charge:

- 2015 (1) is founded on the same facts or evidence as a count charging an indictable offence<sup>8</sup>; or
- 2016 (2) is part of a series<sup>9</sup> of offences of the same or similar character as an indictable offence which is also charged<sup>10</sup>, but only if (in either case) the facts or evidence relating to the offence: (a) were disclosed to a magistrates' court inquiring into the offence as examining justices; or (b) are disclosed by material which has been served<sup>11</sup> on the person charged<sup>12</sup>.

1 Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 4(2). Rules 5 and 6 (see PARAS 1212, 1218 post) apply to each count in an indictment as they apply to an indictment where one offence is charged: r 4(2).

- 581 (7) any summary offence specified by the Secretary of State (s 40(3)(e)).

The Secretary of State may by order made by statutory instrument specify for the purposes of s 40 (as amended) any summary offence which is punishable with imprisonment or involves obligatory or discretionary disqualification from driving: s 40(4). A statutory instrument containing such an order is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament: s 40(5). At the date at which this volume states the law no such order had been made.

10 A specified summary offence (see note 7 supra) cannot be included in the indictment if its only link is not with an indictable offence in the indictment but with another specified summary offence, linked to such an indictable offence which has been included: R v Callaghan (1991) 94 Cr App Rep 226, CA.

As from a day to be appointed head (a) in the text is repealed: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 60(1), (7), Sch 37 Pt 4. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. The Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 40(1) (as amended; prospectively further amended) does not justify the inclusion of a specified offence (see note 7 supra) in an indictment where there has been a transfer for trial: R v T, R v K [2001] 1 Cr App Rep 32, CA.

Where a specified summary offence (see note 7 supra) has been improperly included in an indictment, the proceedings are not thereby rendered a nullity; the wrongly included count can be quashed, leaving the other counts to stand, provided that this does not prejudice the defendant: R v Callaghan (1991) 94 Cr App Rep 226, CA; R v Smith [1997] QB 836, [1997] 1 Cr App Rep 390, CA; R v Lockley, R v Sainsbury [1997] Crim LR 455, CA. ### 1212. Statement and particulars of offence.

Each count of an indictment must commence with a statement of the offence charged, which must briefly describe it<sup>1</sup>. If the offence is created by or under an enactment, the statement must contain a reference to the relevant statutory provision<sup>2</sup>.

After the statement of the offence, particulars of the offence must be set out with such particularity as may be necessary for giving reasonable information as to the nature of the charge<sup>3</sup>.

Where the offence is one created by or under an enactment, the particulars must disclose the essential elements of the offence<sup>4</sup>.

The responsibility for the correctness of an indictment rests on counsel for the prosecution and not upon the court<sup>5</sup>.

1 See the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 5(1); and PARA 1210 ante. In the case of statutory offences, r 5(1) is subject to r 6 (see PARA 1218 post): r 5(1). The offence must be adequately described both in the statement, and in the particulars, of offence: R v Quintner (1934) 25 Cr App Rep 32, CCA; and see also R v Tyler (1992) 96 Cr App Rep 332, CA (indictment the particulars of which disclose correct offence but widen ambit of offence capable of amendment and not a nullity).

2 See the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 6(a); and PARA 1218 post.

3 See ibid r 5(1). In cases involving complicated conspiracies to defraud, the particulars of offence should contain considerable detail: see R v Landy [1981] 1 All ER 1172, 72 Cr App Rep 237, CA.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1213. Description of persons.

1213. Description of persons.

The description or designation in an indictment of the defendant, or of any other person to whom reference is made, must be such as is reasonably sufficient to identify him, without necessarily stating his correct name or his abode, style, degree or occupation<sup>1</sup>. It is sufficient to describe a person whose name is not known as 'a person unknown'<sup>2</sup>.

If the offence alleged is one that has been committed against the person or property of someone, the name and surname of that person should be stated, if known<sup>3</sup>.

In general, a statement of the age of the defendant or of the person injured is not necessary<sup>4</sup>. Where it is an essential ingredient of the particular offence that the person committing it or the person injured should be within particular age limits<sup>5</sup>, the indictment and every count in it must state the relevant age<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> See 2 Hale PC 175. See also the Indictment Rules 1915 r 7 (revoked); and see PARA 1210 note 4 ante. When a corporation is indicted, it should be described by its proper corporate name or style; the presumption of regularity (see PARA 1376 post) operates to establish the due incorporation of a corporation which has acted as such: R v Langton (1876) 2 QBD 296.

<sup>3</sup> 2 Hawk PC c 25 ss 71, 72; R v Earl of Cardigan (1841) 4 State Tr NS 601, HL. The name given may be either the real name of the person injured or the name by which he is known: R v Norton (1823) Russ & Ry 510, CCR; R v Williams (1836) 7 C & P 298 at 299; R v Gregory (1846) 8 QB 508. As to the proper description where parent and child have the same name see R v Peace (1820) 3 B & Ald 579 at 580. If the person injured was eg a peer, a baronet or a knight, this rank was formerly given (see R v Pitts (1839) 8 C & P 771; R v Graham (1791) 2 Leach 547; R v Gregory supra; R v Frost (1855) Dears CC 474), but this is no longer the practice.

Where a defendant would not be likely to know the exact nature of the charge alleged without particulars asserting the ownership of the property, such particulars should be stated in the indictment. In R v Gregory [1972] 2 All ER 861, 56 Cr App Rep 441, CA, it was held that, when the subject of a count was a common and indistinctive object, such as a starter motor, particulars of ownership were not surplusage for they informed the defendant of the nature of the case against him and limited the prosecution to that case as the one which it had sought to establish at the outset of the trial.

<sup>4</sup> It is not necessary to aver that the defendant is ten years of age or more. Although a person under ten may not be convicted of an offence (see PARA 37 ante), the fact of a person's being ten years of age or above is not an essential element of any particular offence, but a condition of criminal liability common to all offences.

1214. Description of document.

Where it is necessary to refer to any document or instrument in an indictment, it is sufficient to describe it by any name or designation by which it is usually known, or by giving its purport, without setting out any copy of it<sup>1</sup>.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1215. Place, time etc.

1215. Place, time etc.

It is sufficient to describe any place, time, thing, matter, act or omission whatsoever to which it is necessary to refer in an indictment, in ordinary language in such manner as to indicate with reasonable clearness the place, time, thing, matter, act, or omission referred to<sup>1</sup>.

It is usual to insert the date on which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed<sup>2</sup>, but the date is not material unless it is an essential part of the offence<sup>3</sup>. Where time is of the essence of the offence<sup>4</sup>, the day of the month or year, and sometimes the time of day, when the alleged offence was committed must be alleged<sup>5</sup>.

It is not necessary to state the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed unless it is an essential part of the offence<sup>6</sup>.

1 See the Indictment Rules 1915 r 9 (revoked); and see PARA 1210 note 4 ante.

2 As to the degree of precision necessary see HM Advocate v MacKenzie 1913 SC (J) 107. Where any offence mentioned in the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 Sch 1 (as amended) (see PARA 1164 ante) charged against any person is a continuous offence, it is not necessary to specify in the indictment the date of the acts constituting the offence but the indictment must be free from duplicity or repugnancy: see s 14(4); and PARA 1220 post. For a further general example of continuous offences see Hodgetts v Chiltern District Council [1983] 2 AC 120, sub nom Chiltern District Council v Hodgetts [1983] 1 All ER 1057, HL (it is not an essential characteristic of a single criminal offence that the prohibited act or omission took place once and for all on a single day, since it can take place continuously or intermittently over a period of time and still remain a single offence).

3 R v Dossi (1918) 13 Cr App Rep 158, 87 LJB 1024, CCA; and see also R v James (1923) 17 Cr App Rep 116, CCA.

4 Time is of the essence of the offence: (1) when an act is criminal only if done within a certain time of some other act or event (eg persons in possession of firearms within five years from the date of release from certain sentences, contrary to the Firearms Act 1968 s 21(2) (as amended) (see PARA 672 ante)); (2) when it is an essential ingredient of a particular offence that certain consequences should follow a particular act; (3) when it is an essential ingredient of a particular offence that the act alleged was committed between certain hours of the day or night (eg night poaching or making signals to smuggling vessels); and (4) when the prosecution for a particular offence must be commenced within a certain time of the commission of the criminal act alleged (see PARA 1047 ante).

5 In an indictment for night poaching it is sufficient to aver that the offence was committed by night without stating the hour: Davies v R (1829) 10 B & C 89. As to the averment of time in an indictment for an offence, for the commencement of the prosecution of which the time is limited, see R v Brown (1828) Mood & M 163 (time stated in the indictment must be taken to be the true time without a substantive averment).

6 It is otiose to state the place or county, where it has no bearing on the offence: R v Wallwork (1958) 42 Cr App Rep 153, 122 JP 229, CCA. Since the Crown Court is a single court with jurisdiction over all England and Wales (see PARA 1052 ante), the common law rules as to venue are of no importance in so far as trials on indictment are concerned and the instances in which it will be necessary to aver the place in which the offence was alleged to have been committed will now be rare.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1216. Mental element.

1216. Mental element.

Where any particular mental element is a necessary ingredient of an offence, the mental element must be stated in the indictment<sup>1</sup>. However, it is not necessary, in stating any intent to defraud, deceive, or injure, to state an intent to defraud, deceive, or injure any particular person where the statute creating the offence does not make an intent to defraud, deceive, or injure a particular person an essential ingredient of the offence<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Eg in an indictment for arson under the Criminal Damage Act 1971 s 1(1), (3) (see PARA 334 ante), an intent to destroy or damage, as the case may be, another's property, or recklessness as to whether such property would be destroyed or damaged, as the case may be, must be alleged. As to indictments under the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 see PARA 353 ante. See also the offences of: (1) wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm or to resist apprehension (see the Offences against the Person Act 1861 s 18 (as amended); and PARA 118 ante); (2) attempting to procure a miscarriage (see s 58; and PARA 109 ante); (3) blackmail (see the Theft Act 1968 s 21; and PARA 308 ante); (4) burglary (see s 9 (as amended); and PARA 294 ante); and (5) obstructing a railway (see the Malicious Damage Act 1861 s 35; and PARA 344 ante). As regards all of which the relevant intent must be specifically alleged in the indictment.

<sup>2</sup> See the Indictment Rules 1915 r 10 (revoked); and see PARA 1210 note 4 ante. See also R v Addis [1965] 2 All ER 794n, 49 Cr App Rep 95, CCA, where in an indictment for conspiracy to defraud it was held that an indictment was sufficient where the particulars of offence alleged that the defendant conspired together to cheat and defraud such persons as might be induced to part with money to certain named companies 'by false representations and other false and fraudulent devices'.

However, in R v Landy [1981] 1 All ER 1172, 72 Cr App Rep 237, CA, it was stated that the particulars in an indictment for conspiracy to defraud should be such as will enable the defendants and the trial judge to know the nature of the prosecution's case and will prevent the prosecution from shifting its ground during the trial without applying for leave to amend the indictment, and that the words 'and by divers other false and fraudulent devices' were outdated and not to be used any longer in an indictment. Further, the term 'falsely representing' was called imprecise and likely to confuse a jury.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18. INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1217. Property.

1217. Property.

The description of property in a count in an indictment must be in ordinary language and such as to indicate with reasonable clearness the property referred to<sup>1</sup>. If the property is so described, it is not always necessary, except when required for the purpose of describing an offence depending on any special ownership of property or special value of property, to name the person to whom the property belongs or the value of the property<sup>2</sup>. If, however, it is possible to do so, the indictment should aver who is the owner of the property<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, where a defendant would not be likely to know the nature of the charge alleged without particulars asserting the ownership of the property, such particulars should be stated in the indictment<sup>4</sup>. Where property is vested in more than one person and the owners of the property are referred to in an indictment, it is sufficient to describe the property as owned by one of those persons by name with others; and if the persons owning the property are a body of persons with a collective name, such as 'inhabitants', 'trustees', 'commissioners', or 'club', or other such name, it is sufficient to use the collective name without naming any individual<sup>5</sup>.

1 See the Indictment Rules 1915 r 6(1) (revoked); and see PARA 1210 note 4 ante. It is not necessary in a count charging the dishonest handling of stolen goods to assert the ownership of the goods provided that they are identified with reasonable clarity and that it is immaterial from whom they were stolen: R v Deakin [1972] 3 All ER 803, 54 Cr App Rep 841, CA.

A substantial misdescription of property, where a description is essential, will, unless amended, render the indictment bad: see R v Satchwell (1873) LR 2 CCR 21 (decided under the Malicious Damage Act 1861 s 17 (repealed)).

2 See the Indictment Rules 1915 r 6(1) (revoked); and R v Gregory [1972] 2 All ER 861, 56 Cr App Rep 441, CA.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1218. Statutory offences.

1218. Statutory offences.

Where the specific offence with which a defendant is charged in an indictment is one created by or under an enactment:

- 2017 (1) the statement of offence must contain a reference to the section of, or the paragraph of the Schedule to, the Act creating the offence in the case of any offence created by a provision of an Act, or to the provision creating the offence in the case of an offence created by a provision of a subordinate instrument<sup>1</sup>;
- 2018 (2) the particulars must disclose the essential elements of the offence, provided that an essential element need not be disclosed if the defendant is not prejudiced or embarrassed in his defence by the failure to disclose it<sup>2</sup>;
- 2019 (3) it is not necessary to specify or negative an exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification<sup>3</sup>.

Where an offence created by or under an enactment states the offence to be the doing or the omission to do any one of any different acts in the alternative, or the doing or the omission to do any act in any one of any different capacities, or with any one of any different intentions, or states any part of the offence in the alternative, the acts, omissions, capacities or intentions, or other matters stated in the alternative in the enactment or subordinate instrument may be stated in the alternative in an indictment charging the offence<sup>4</sup>. The courts have emphasised the desirability in settling indictments of following the words of the statute creating the offence and not departing from them when it is unnecessary to do so<sup>5</sup>.

1 Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 6(a). Rule 6 is without prejudice to r 5 (see PARA 1210 ante): r 6. Where a section of an enactment under which an indictment is laid has been repealed, the indictment is bad, although in essence the offence charged has been preserved by a later statute: R v Taylor (1924) 18 Cr App Rep 105, 93 LJB 912, CCA. Cf R v Tuttle (1929) 21 Cr App Rep 85, 45 TLR 357, CCA; and see R v Nelson (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 119, CA (indictment which failed to mention the statute contravened was not a nullity, but merely defective).

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(i) Contents of Indictment/1220. Duplicity.

1220. Duplicity.

Each count in an indictment must allege only one offence<sup>1</sup>. Thus a count in an indictment may not charge a defendant with one or other of two offences, and must not be capable of being construed as applying to two different offences without stating which one is charged<sup>2</sup>. A count which alleges more than one offence is said to be bad for duplicity<sup>3</sup>. No single count may charge the defendant with two or more offences<sup>4</sup>; but a defendant may be charged in separate counts with committing a number of offences<sup>5</sup>. Whether an enactment creates one or more offences is a matter of statutory interpretation<sup>6</sup>. There will be only one offence if it was clearly the intention of Parliament to create one offence embracing the commission of numerous offences which themselves, if the details were known, could be individually chargeable<sup>7</sup>.

Duplicity is a matter of form; it is not a matter relating to the evidence called in support<sup>8</sup>.

An application to quash the indictment for irregularity of form, particularly for duplicity, should, save in exceptional circumstances, be made on the arraignment of the defendant and before his plea is taken<sup>9</sup>.

1 Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 4(2). In relation to theft, if someone like an employee or trustee is unable to account for property held or received by him as such, and it is clear that the whole or part of the property has been appropriated within a specific period but it is impossible to prove when or, indeed, whether there was more than one appropriation, there can be a conviction on an indictment charging theft of the whole deficiency on one count: R v Tomlin [1954] 2 QB 274, 38 Cr App Rep 82, CCA; R v Hallam, R v Blackburn [1995] Crim LR 323, CA.

In addition, in theft, there can be a single charge of theft where there has been a 'continuous offence', ie a continuous course of individual appropriations of the same type over a period: R v Firth (1869) LR 1 CCR 172, CCR; R v Henwood (1870) 11 Cox CC 526; DPP v McCabe [1992] Crim LR 885, DC; Barton v DPP [2001] EWHC Admin 223, 165 JP 779, DC.

2 R v Surrey Justices, ex p Witherick [1932] 1 KB 450; R v Wilmot (1933) 149 LT 407, CCA; Jones v Sherwood [1942] 1 KB 127 (a conviction of alternative offences is bad). Because assault and battery are separate offences (see PARA 147 ante), a charge alleging that the defendant did 'assault and batter' the victim is bad for duplicity: DPP v Taylor, DPP v Little [1992] 1 QB 645, [1992] 1 All ER 299, DC.

3 An indictment containing a duplicitous count is not void but merely irregular: R v Levantiz [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 465, CA. An appeal on a duplicitous count will not be allowed unless there has been a substantial miscarriage of justice: R v Levantiz supra; R v Thompson [1914] 2 KB 99, 9 Cr App Rep 252, CCA.

4 R v Thompson [1914] 2 KB 99, 9 Cr App Rep 252, CCA (count charging offence, which was not a continuing offence, as having been committed 'on divers days' bad for duplicity). See also R v Williams [1953] 1 QB 660, 37 Cr App Rep 71, CCA (where a count was quashed for duplicity because it charged the larceny of a sum which was the aggregate of sums charged in other counts). Where articles have been stolen from various departments of a store, each article should be the subject of a different count: R v Ballysingh (1953) 37 Cr App Rep 28, CCA. However, if the evidence reveals that there was one activity made up of a number of acts of the same kind connected in time and place, those acts may be charged as one offence in a simple count of an indictment: see Heaton v Costello (1984) 148 JP 688, DC. An information or count in an indictment is not bad for duplicity if it relates to one activity even though the activity may involve more than one act: Jemmison v Priddle [1972] 1 QB 489, 56 Cr App Rep 229, DC. It is legitimate to bring a single charge in respect of one activity even though that activity may involve more than one act. The question whether the charge relates to one offence or more than one offence is to be determined by applying common sense and by deciding what is fair in the circumstances; it is a question of fact and degree: DPP v Merriman [1973] AC 584 at 593, [1972] 3 All ER 42 at 47, HL, per Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest, and at 607 and 59 per Lord Diplock. See also R v Wilson (1979) 69 Cr App Rep 83, CA; R v Jones (1974) 59 Cr App Rep 120, CA. The question whether there is more than one offence disclosed is a question of fact and degree: R v Wilson supra.

5 Eg beating two persons at the same time; libelling two persons in one publication: see R v Benfield, R v Saunders (1760) 2 Burr 980 at 983-984. A defendant may be charged in the same count with publishing a libel and causing it to be published: see R v Bradlaugh (1883) 15 Cox CC 217. A defendant may be charged with 'destroying, defacing, and injuring' a register: R v Bowen (1844) 1 Den 22, CCR.

6 Thomson v Knights [1947] KB 336, [1947] 1 All ER 112, DC. A provision may create two (or more) offences or it may create one offence with alternative ways of committing it. There are separate offences where the provision refers to two separate types of conduct as constituting an offence (see R v Surrey Justices, ex p Withwick [1932] 1 KB 450, DC; R v Naismith [1961] 2 All ER 735, [1961] 1 WLR 952, C-MAC; Mallon v Allon [1964] 1 QB 385, [1963] 3 All ER 843, DC; R v Bolton Justices, ex p Khan [1999] Crim LR 912, DC) as opposed to referring to various ways of committing one specified piece of conduct (Bale v Rosier [1977] 2 All ER 160, [1977] 1 WLR 263, DC; R v Nicklin [1977] 2 All ER 444, [1977] 1 WLR 403, 64 Cr App Rep 205, CA).

It has, for example, been held that the Theft Act 1968 s 22 (see PARA 302 ante) creates a single offence of handling stolen goods, which can be committed by a variety of specified activities: Griffiths v Freeman [1970] 1 All ER 1117, [1970] 1 WLR 659, DC; R v Nicklin supra; cf R v Bloxham [1983] 1 AC 109 at 113, 74 Cr App Rep 279 at 289, HL, per Lord Bridge (two distinct offences: one of receiving and the other one of the other specified activities). Nevertheless, on a charge of dishonest handling contrary to the Theft Act 1968 s 22, where the prosecution relies on different methods of the alleged handling, it is desirable that it should provide particulars of the offence by dividing the indictment into two counts, one dealing with the first part of s 22 (ie the old type of receiving), and the other dealing with the second part of s 22, alleging dishonest undertaking or assisting in the retention etc of stolen goods by or for the benefit of another: see R v Bloxham supra; R v Nicklin supra. A conviction on a simple count of handling stolen goods without sub-divided particulars may be upheld where the summing up has made the position clear to the jury, and provided it is made clear at the trial what case is being presented: R v Pitchley (1972) 57 Cr App Rep 30, CA; and see also Griffiths v Freeman supra; R v Sloggett [1972] 1 QB 430, 55 Cr App Rep 532, CA; R v Marshall (1971) 56 Cr App Rep 263, CA; R v Alt (1972) 56 Cr App Rep 457, CA; R v Willis [1972] 3 All ER 797, 57 Cr App Rep 1, CA; R v Deakin [1972] 3 All ER 803, 54 Cr App Rep 841, CA. Cf R v Ikpong [1972] Crim LR 432, CA. See further PARA 302 note 9 ante. Where there is any doubt as to the form of handling, particulars of charges should be laid in the alternative as a person charged only with handling by dishonestly receiving cannot be convicted of another form of handling: R v Nicklin supra.

Whenever there is doubt as to whether or not a provision creates one offence, the safe course is to include separate counts in the indictment for each type of activity specified in the provision which it is wished to allege (eg because there is doubt as to which can be proved). An indictment bad for duplicity can be amended by the court: see PARA 1227 post.

8 R v Greenfield [1973] 3 All ER 1050 at 1054, 57 Cr App Rep 849 at 855, CA (prosecution evidence consistent with existence of more than one conspiracy did not make bad in law count charging one conspiracy). For examples of the application of this rule see R v Greenfield supra; R v Griffiths [1966] 1 QB 589, [1965] 2 All ER 448, CCA; cf R v West [1948] 1 KB 709, 32 Cr App Rep 152, CCA; R v Davey [1960] 3 All ER 533, 45 Cr App Rep 11, CCA.

See also R v Laming (1989) 90 Cr App Rep 450, (1989) Times, 19 December, CA (defence counsel applied 'most unusually and inappropriately' to trial judge, after defendant's conviction, for declaration that trial a nullity because indictment allegedly invalid (on grounds of lack of signature: see PARA 1205 ante)). Any such application after conviction should be made by way of appeal to the Court of Appeal: R v Laming supra.

1220 Duplicity

TEXT AND NOTE 1--SI 1971/1253 revoked: SI 2007/699.

NOTE 3--The rule relating to duplicity relates to form; the fact that a count in an indictment is duplicitous will not lead to the quashing of a conviction if, on the facts, the duplicity has not caused any injustice to the defendant: R v Marchese [2008] EWCA Crim 389, [2009] 1 WLR 992, [2008] All ER (D) 150 (Feb).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(ii) Joinder of Offences or Defendants/1221. Joinder of offences.

(ii) Joinder of Offences or Defendants

1221. Joinder of offences.

Charges for any offences may be joined in the same indictment<sup>1</sup> if those charges are founded on the same facts<sup>2</sup>, or form or are part of a series of offences of the same or a similar character<sup>3</sup>. A series of offences may be constituted by only two<sup>4</sup>. Although, to be part of a series, the offences need not arise out of the same facts or be part of a system of conduct, there must be a sufficient connection between them<sup>5</sup>.

Except where the prosecutor is put to his election as to the count upon which he will proceed, the defendant may be put in charge of the jury, and evidence may be given, upon all the counts of the indictment at the same trial<sup>6</sup>; but for the purposes of verdict and judgment each count is treated as a separate indictment<sup>7</sup>. A verdict must be taken separately on each count, for, if there is a general verdict on the whole indictment followed by a general judgment, then, if some of the counts should be found to be bad, the whole judgment may be vitiated<sup>8</sup>. The simultaneous trial of two indictments is a nullity<sup>9</sup>. Where different persons have been separately committed for trial for offences which may lawfully be charged in the same indictment, the counts founded on the separate committals may be joined in one indictment even though an indictment in respect of one committal has already been signed<sup>10</sup>.

1 Separate offences must form the subject of separate counts: see PARA 1211 ante.

2 To be 'founded on the same facts' charges must have a common factual origin; if the 'subsidiary' charge could not be alleged but for the facts which give rise to the 'primary' charge, the charges are 'founded on the same facts'; it is not necessary, however, that the facts should be identical in substance or contemporaneous: R v Barrell, R v Wilson (1979) 69 Cr App Rep 250, CA. See also R v Barnes (1985) 83 Cr App Rep 38, CA; R v Williams [1993] Crim LR 533, CA; R v Lockley, R v Sainsbury [1997] Crim LR 455, CA.

3 Indictments Act 1915 s 4 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1948 s 83(3), Sch 10 Pt 1; and the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 10(2), Sch 3 Pt III); Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 9.

Where an indictment is defective because of the misjoinder of disparate offences, the defect cannot be cured by severance of the misjoined counts and an order for their separate trial under the Indictments Act 1915 s 5(3) (see PARA 1222 post), although it may amend the indictment so as to remove one or more of the counts, if a court proceeds to try a misjoined indictment: R v Newland [1988] QB 402, 87 Cr App Rep 118, CA; followed in R v O'Reilly [1989] Crim LR 652, CA. However, the court may stay proceedings on such an indictment and give leave to the prosecution to prefer out of time two or more fresh indictments splitting up the offences so that each indictment complies with the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 9: R v Follett [1989] QB 338, 88 Cr App Rep 310, CA. Another way to deal with counts removed from the indictment on the grounds of misjoinder would be to seek a voluntary bill of indictment: see PARAS 1207-1209 ante. In R v Newland supra it was also held that, if a court proceeds to try a misjoined indictment, or orders separate trials, the proceedings will be a nullity and any resulting convictions on the indictment will be quashed; but in R v Smith [1997] QB 836, [1997] 1 Cr App Rep 390, CA, the Court of Appeal (obiter) disapproved this part of the decision in R v Newland supra and stated that only a misjoined count should be quashed. R v Smith supra was followed in R v Lockley, R v Sainsbury [1997] Crim LR 455, CA. How it is determined which count or counts is or are misjoined in a case of breach of the rules dealt with in this paragraph has not yet been explained; there is no obvious misjoined offence, as there is where a summary offence has been improperly joined: see PARA 1211 ante.

The court has a discretion, outside the strict limits of a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, to stay, and as a general rule should stay, a second indictment containing charges founded on the same facts as those in a previous indictment, or forming, or being part of, a series of offences of the same or similar character as those in the previous indictment, if satisfied that the subject matter of the second indictment ought to have been included in the first. Accordingly, charges which may properly be joined in one indictment ought in general to be so joined: Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254 at 1359-1360, 48 Cr App Rep 183 at 260-261, HL, per Lord Devlin. 'The prosecutor should join in one indictment all the charges that he wishes to prefer in respect of one incident': Connelly v DPP supra at 1367 and 282 per Lord Pearce. In R v Thatcher [1967] 3 All ER 410n, 51 Cr App Rep 452, CA, an application to proceed with an indictment which had been stayed was held on the facts to be an abuse of the process of the court. As to stay of indictments see PARA 1224 post.

In deciding whether offences are similar in character, both the law and the facts must be taken into account: Ludlow v Metropolitan Police Comr [1971] AC 29 at 39, 54 Cr App Rep 233 at 241-242, HL (attempted larceny and robbery with violence at neighbouring public houses within a period of 16 days held to constitute a series).

5 R v Kray [1970] 1 QB 125, 53 Cr App Rep 569, CA; R v Baird (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 308, CA. When joining counts relating to offences widely separated in time, the longer the gap between the separate offences, the clearer the nexus must be to give rise to one period being admissible to prove offences in another period: R v O'Brien [2000] Crim LR 863, CA.

6 As to the undesirability of indictments containing a large number of counts, and the desirability of the prosecution being put to its election if an unduly large number of counts is contained in one indictment, see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.34.3, CA. ### 1221 Joinder of offences

NOTE 3--SI 1971/1253 revoked: SI 2007/699. Whether counts have been properly joined does not depend on the explanation given by an appellant, propriety of indictment is to be judged when it is drawn: R v Roberts [2008] EWCA Crim 1304, [2009] 1 Cr App Rep 273, [2008] All ER (D) 226 (Jun).

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(ii) Joinder of Offences or Defendants/1222. Separate trial of counts.

1222. Separate trial of counts.

Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, the court<sup>1</sup> is of opinion that the defendant may be prejudiced or embarrassed in his defence by reason of being charged with more than one offence in the same indictment, or that, for any other reason, it is desirable to direct that he should be tried separately for any one or more offences charged in an indictment, the court may order a separate trial of any count or counts of the indictment<sup>2</sup>. The mere fact that evidence is admissible on one count and inadmissible on another is not by itself a ground for separate trials unless the prejudice created by that evidence would be improper and too great to be overcome by any direction in the summing up<sup>3</sup>.

Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial, the court is of opinion that the postponement of the trial of a person is expedient as a consequence of the exercise of any power of the court to order a separate trial of a count<sup>4</sup>, the court must make such order as to the postponement of the trial as appears necessary<sup>5</sup>. Where an order of the court for a separate trial or for the postponement of a trial is made:

- 2020 (1) if such order is made during a trial, the court may order that the jury (if there is one) be discharged from giving a verdict on the count or counts, the trial of which is postponed, or on the indictment, as the case may be<sup>6</sup>;
- 2021 (2) the procedure on the separate trial of a count is the same in all respects as if the count had been found in a separate indictment; and the procedure on the postponed trial is the same in all respects (if the jury has been so discharged<sup>7</sup>) as if the trial had not commenced<sup>8</sup>; and
- 2022 (3) the court may make such order as to granting the defendant bail, and as to the enlargement of recognisances and otherwise, as the court thinks fit<sup>9</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> For these purposes, 'the court' means the court before which any indictable offence is tried or prosecuted: Indictments Act 1915 s 8(2).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid s 5(3). Any power of the court under s 5 (as amended) (see the text and notes 3-9 infra) is in addition to, and not in derogation of, any other power of the court for the same or similar purposes: s 5(6). There must be some special feature of the case which would render a joint trial of several counts prejudicial or embarrassing to the defendant, requiring separate trials in the interests of justice. Examples might be that the offences charged are too numerous or complicated or difficult to disentangle, or that one of the counts is of a scandalous nature likely to arouse in the minds of the jury feelings hostile to the defendant: see Ludlow v Metropolitan Police Comr [1971] AC 29 at 41, 54 Cr App Rep 233 at 245-246, HL, per Lord Pearson. See also R v McGlinchey (1983) 78 Cr App Rep 282, CA; R v Dixon (1989) 92 Cr App Rep 43n, CA; R v Cannan (1991) 92 Cr App Rep 16, CA; R v Christou [1997] AC 117, [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 360, HL. The court's power under the Indictments Act 1915 s 5(3) applies to valid indictments only and may not be used to sever an indictment which is in breach of the Indictment Rules 1971, SI 1971/1253, r 9 (see PARA 1221 ante): R v Newland [1988] QB 402, 87 Cr App Rep 118, CA. See also R v Follett [1989] 1 All ER 995, 88 Cr App Rep 310, CA; R v O'Reilly [1989] Crim LR 652, CA. The Court of Appeal will not interfere with the exercise of the judge's discretion to order separate trials unless it is shown that the judge has failed to exercise his discretion on usual and proper principles: R v Flack (1969) 53 Cr App Rep 166 at 171, CA, per Salmon LJ; R v Cannan (1991) 92 Cr App Rep 16 at 23, CA, per Lord Lane CJ.

As to the separate trial of two or more defendant jointly indicted see PARA 1303 post.

<sup>3</sup> In general, if offences are properly joined, the defendant has no right to have the indictment severed merely because he may wish to give evidence in respect of one count but not another. It is a matter for the discretion of the trial judge: see the Indictments Act 1915 s 5(3); and R v Phillips (DM) (1987) 86 Cr App Rep 18, CA. See also R v Sims [1946] KB 531, 31 Cr App Rep 158, CCA (the mere fact that evidence is admissible on one count and not on another is not in itself a ground for ordering counts to be tried separately, because often the matter can be made clear in the summing up without prejudice to the defendant, but if it cannot be this is a ground for ordering separate trials).

4 Or to amend an indictment: see PARA 1227 post.

1222 Separate trial of counts

NOTE 2--SI 1971/1253 revoked: SI 2007/699.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/18.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(ii) Joinder of Offences or Defendants/1223. Joinder of two or more defendants.

1223. Joinder of two or more defendants.

Where two or more persons join in the commission of an offence, all, or any number, of them may be indicted for that offence jointly in one indictment<sup>1</sup>. As a general rule it is not proper for a jury to try several defendants together on charges of committing individual offences that have nothing to do with each other; where, however, the matters which constitute the individual offences of the several alleged offenders are on the evidence so related, whether in time or by other facts, that the interests of justice are best served by their being tried together, they may properly be the subject of counts in one indictment and, subject always to the discretion of the trial judge, may be tried together<sup>2</sup>. This rule is not limited to cases where there is evidence that several alleged offenders acted in concert<sup>3</sup>. Charges against some only of the defendants may be included in an indictment charging them all<sup>4</sup>; but in complicated cases where the indictment contains numerous counts concerning different persons the prosecution should endeavour to divide the trial into convenient parts in order to reduce the issues before the jury and render the duties of the court easier<sup>5</sup>. Indictments should be kept as short as possible; and no more defendants should be tried together on one indictment than is necessary for the presentation of the case against the principal defendant. Necessity not convenience is the guiding factor<sup>6</sup>.

Where two or more persons are jointly charged with an offence alleged to have been committed by each on the same and not separate occasions, and when they were together, it is not essential for the prosecution to establish that each was acting in concert with the other; it is open to the jury to convict each of having committed independently the offence which is the subject matter of the joint charge<sup>7</sup>. Thus where one of two persons jointly charged with an offence is acquitted, the other may be convicted of that offence as if he had been charged in a separate count with a separate offence<sup>8</sup>. There is no rule of law which deprives a court of jurisdiction to try two defendants together on an indictment containing only two separate counts, each being a count against one defendant alone<sup>9</sup>.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(iii) Defective Indictments/1224. Stay of indictment.

(iii) Defective Indictments

1224. Stay of indictment.

Once an indictment is before the court it must be tried except in the following cases: (1) if it is held defective<sup>1</sup>; (2) if matter in bar is pleaded and is tried and confirmed in favour of the defendant<sup>2</sup>; (3) if a nolle prosequi is entered<sup>3</sup>; (4) if the court has no jurisdiction to try an offence charged in the indictment<sup>4</sup>; (5) if the charges are founded on the same facts as those on which a previous indictment is based<sup>5</sup>; and (6) if the proceedings are an abuse of the court's process<sup>6</sup>. It has also become an accepted practice, where a defendant has pleaded guilty to one or more counts of an indictment, and this is regarded as an adequate plea to the indictment as a whole, for the trial judge to order that any remaining counts in an indictment to which the defendant has pleaded not guilty, should remain on the file marked not to be proceeded with without leave of the court or of the Court of Appeal<sup>7</sup>. Likewise, it is an accepted practice that, where a defendant has pleaded guilty, or been found guilty, on one indictment, the judge may order that another indictment to which the defendant has pleaded not guilty should so remain with the consent of the prosecution and the defendant<sup>8</sup>.

A stayed indictment may be proceeded with on application by the prosecution in certain circumstances<sup>9</sup> unless to do so would be oppressive to the defendant<sup>10</sup> or would be an abuse of the process of the court<sup>11</sup>.

A stayed indictment will not be proceeded with on application by the defendant if to do so would be an abuse of the process of the court<sup>12</sup>.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(iii) Defective Indictments/1225. Abuse of process.

1225. Abuse of process.

Proceedings in the Crown Court on an indictment or a count in the indictment<sup>1</sup> may be stayed where they constitute an abuse of the court's process<sup>2</sup>. In order to determine an application to stay for abuse of process, the court should hear from both the prosecution and the defence<sup>3</sup>. A stay of proceedings is of no effect whilst the prosecution is able to take any of the following steps: (1) to inform the court that it intends to appeal; or (2) to request an adjournment to consider whether to appeal, and after the adjournment to inform the court that it intends to appeal<sup>4</sup>.

The power to stay proceedings for abuse of process can be exercised in many different circumstances, but two main strands can be detected in the authorities: (a) cases in which the court concedes that the defendant cannot receive a fair trial; and (b) cases where the court concludes that it would be unfair for the defendant to be tried<sup>5</sup>.

Examples of circumstances which may result in proceedings being stayed for abuse of process are: unjustifiable delay by the prosecution or delay which is so prejudicial to the defendant that a fair trial cannot be held<sup>6</sup>; adverse publicity rendering fair trial impossible<sup>7</sup>; revocation of a promise not to prosecute if there are special circumstances<sup>8</sup>; deliberate and improper manipulation by the prosecution of the criminal process so as to take unfair advantage of the defendant<sup>9</sup>; entrapment by police officers or other agents of the state when it would not be contrary to the public interest in the integrity of the criminal justice system that a trial should take place<sup>10</sup>; and unconscionable abuse of executive power<sup>11</sup>.

1 An indictment is not indivisible; the court may stay an indictment in part, if appropriate, where there are a number of counts or a number of defendants: R v Munro (1992) 97 Cr App Rep 183, CA.

2 Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254, 48 Cr App Rep 183, HL. As to staying proceedings in a magistrates' court for abuse of process see R v Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex p Bennett [1994] 1 AC 42, sub nom Bennett v Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court [1993] 3 All ER 138, HL; R v Belmarsh Magistrates' Court, ex p Watts [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 188, DC; R (on the application of AP, MD and JS) v Leeds Youth Court [2001] EWHC Admin 215, 165 JP 684, DC.

In all cases where a defendant in the Crown Court proposes to make an application to stay an indictment on the ground of abuse of process, written notice of such application must be given to the prosecuting authority and to any co-defendant not later than 14 days before the date fixed or warned for trial ('the relevant date'). Such notice must: (1) give the name of the case and the indictment number; (2) state the fixed date or the warned date as appropriate; (3) specify the nature of the application; (4) set out in numbered sub-paragraphs the grounds on which the application is to be made; (5) be copied to the chief listing officer at the court centre where the case is due to be heard: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.36.1, CA. Any co-defendant who wishes to make a like application must give a like notice not later than seven days before the relevant date, setting out any additional grounds relied upon: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.36.2, CA. See further Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.36.3, IV.36.4 and IV.36.5, CA.

6 A-G's Reference (No 1 of 1990) [1992] QB 630, 95 Cr App Rep 296, CA. Although the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953) Cmd 8969) art 6(1) (right to a fair trial) entitles the defendant to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal, breach of art 6(1) should result in proceedings being stayed only if a fair trial is no longer possible, or it is for any compelling reason unfair to try the defendant: A-G's Reference (No 2 of 2001) [2003] UKHL 68, [2004] 2 AC 72, [2004] 1 All ER 1049. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

The discretionary decision whether or not to grant a stay on the ground of abuse of process through delay is an exercise in judicial assessment dependent on judgment rather than any conclusion as to fact based on evidence; it is therefore misleading to apply to the exercise of that decision the language of burden and standard of proof: R v S [2006] EWCA Crim 756, [2006] All ER (D) 73 (Mar).

The correct approach for a judge to whom an application for a stay by reason of delay is made is to bear in mind the following principles: (1) even where delay is unjustifiable, a permanent stay should be the exception rather than the rule; (2) where there is no fault on the part of the complainant or the prosecution, it will be very rare for a stay to be granted; (3) no stay should be granted in the absence of serious prejudice to the defence so that no fair trial can be held; (4) when assessing possible serious prejudice, the judge should bear in mind his power to regulate the admissibility of evidence, and that the trial process itself should ensure that all the relevant factual issues arising from delay will be placed before the jury for its consideration from the judge; (5) if having considered all these factors, a judge's assessment is that a fair trial will be possible, a stay should not be granted: see R v S supra.

Normally an application for stay based on delay in reporting sexual abuse should not be made at the outset of the trial, because, save in exceptional cases, such an application will fail and will take up the court's time unnecessarily; if an application is to be made, the best time for doing so is after the evidence of the complainant has been called and for the judge then to decide whether the trial should proceed or whether the evidence is such that it would not be safe for a jury to convict: R v Smolinski [2004] EWCA Crim 1270, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 661.

7 R v Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex p DPP (1992) 95 Cr App Rep 9, DC; A-G v MGN Ltd [1997] 1 All ER 456, DC.

8 See eg R v Bloomfield [1997] 1 Cr App Rep 135, CA (abuse of process where prosecution had revoked assurance given at plea and directions not to offer evidence against defendant: stay of proceedings upheld); DPP v Taylor [2004] EWHC 1554 (Admin), [2004] 7 Archbold News 2, DC (Crown Prosecution Service advised defendant that he would not be prosecuted for careless driving after fatal road traffic accident, but then proceeded to so prosecute following representations from victim's family; held justices entitled to find abuse of process on the basis of the general proposition that the assurance of the Crown about whether or not a prosecution would ensue should ordinarily be relied on); cf R v Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex p DPP [1999] COD 441, DC (revocation of assurance of no prosecution given by police could not in itself justify stay of proceedings; there had to be special circumstances); R v Mulla [2003] EWCA Crim 1881, [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 72, CA (when case listed for trial on causing death by dangerous driving charge, the prosecution had indicated a decision to accept a plea to careless driving but the judge expressed dissent and requested re-consideration; later that day the prosecution indicated that it would not now accept such a plea; decision not to stay proceedings for abuse of process upheld; no abuse of process because defendant knew from outset that the judge was unhappy with the decision not to proceed with the more serious charge, and therefore the defendant's hopes had not been inappropriately raised and then dashed). A police officer's decision to caution rather than prosecute an offender does not preclude a victim's right to bring a private prosecution, although it may in certain circumstances be an abuse of process for a court to entertain such a prosecution: see Jones v Whalley [2006] UKHL 41, [2006] 3 WLR 179, [2006] All ER (D) 369 (Jul) (revsg [2005] EWHC 931 (Admin), 169 JP 466, [2005] All ER (D) 114 (May)) (offender accepted police caution on terms that he would not be prosecuted; abuse of court's process for subsequent private prosecution to proceed).

UPDATE

1225 Abuse of process

NOTE 2--A private prosecution may be deemed an abuse of process if the crime which is the subject of the prosecution is one that has been encouraged by the private prosecutor or if in some other way the private prosecutor has essentially created the same mischief as that about which he complains: R (on the application of Dacre) v Westminster Magistrates' Court [2008] EWHC 1667 (Admin), [2009] 1 All ER 639.

NOTE 5--See also DPP v B [2008] EWHC 201 (Admin), [2008] All ER (D) 51 (Jan), DC (no abuse where judge asked prosecution to consider increasing number of charges against defendant); R v Gore; R v Maher [2009] EWCA Crim 1424, [2009] 1 WLR 2454, (2009) 173 JP 505 (no abuse where prosecution for inflicting grievous bodily harm not stayed although penalty notice already imposed in respect of same incident: evidence justifying prosecution for an offence of violence came to light after issue of notice) (see further PARA 587 NOTE 1).

TEXT AND NOTES 6-11--Where a defendant has been acquitted of an offence on grounds that he has a statutory defence, it is an abuse of process to proceed with a separate charge on the same factual basis to which the statutory defence does not apply: R v Asfaw [2008] UKHL 31, [2008] 1 AC 1061, [2008] 3 All ER 775.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(iii) Defective Indictments/1226. Objections to indictments.

1226. Objections to indictments.

Nothing in the Indictments Act 1915 prevents an indictment being open to objection if it contravenes or fails to comply with any other enactment<sup>1</sup>; but, save in exceptional circumstances, the objection should be taken on arraignment and before the defendant's plea is taken<sup>2</sup>.

INDICTMENTS/(2) FORM OF INDICTMENT/(iii) Defective Indictments/1227. Amendment of indictments.

1227. Amendment of indictments.

Where, before trial, or at any stage of a trial<sup>1</sup>, it appears to the court<sup>2</sup> that the indictment is defective<sup>3</sup>, the court must make such order for the amendment of the indictment as the court thinks necessary to meet the circumstances of the case, unless, having regard to the merits of the case, the required amendments cannot be made without injustice<sup>4</sup>.

In those cases where no injustice is caused to the defendant, an indictment may be amended after arraignment<sup>5</sup> for the purpose of substituting another offence for that originally charged or for the purpose of adding a further charge<sup>6</sup>. Even after arraignment and plea, a count alleging a further offence or offences may be added; but this is not permissible if it would cause injustice to the defendant<sup>7</sup>. Provided the amendment causes no injustice to the defendant, alterations in matters of particulars may be made<sup>8</sup>. Where an indictment is so amended, a note of the order for amendment must be indorsed on the indictment, and the indictment is then treated for the purposes of the trial and for the purpose of all proceedings in connection therewith as if it had been signed in its amended form<sup>9</sup>. In general, where amendment is substantial, it is desirable that the arraignment be repeated<sup>10</sup>.

Where the trial judge considers that it is expedient, by reason of an order for amendment of the indictment, he may postpone the trial<sup>11</sup>.

1     le even after verdict where amendment does not relate to a material averment: R v Dossi (1918) 87 LJB 1024, 13 Cr App Rep 158, CCA (amendment after verdict of date of offence specified in indictment permissible; date not material because not an essential element of offence charged); R v Nelson (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 119, CA (statement of offence failed to refer to statute allegedly contravened; amendment after verdict permissible). As to the duty of counsel for the prosecution see PARA 1212 text and note 6 ante.

2     For the meaning of 'the court' see PARA 1222 note 1 ante.

3     'Defective' includes the concept of 'lack' or 'want': R v Palmer [2002] EWCA Crim 892, (2002) Times, 18 April, so that an indictment can be amended by the addition of a new defendant.

4     Indictments Act 1915 s 5(1) (amended by the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 31(6), Sch 2). Any power of the court under the Indictments Act 1915 s 5 (as amended) is in addition to, and not in derogation of, any other power of the court for the same or similar purposes: s 5(6). The court's power to amend an indictment under s 5(1) (as amended) applies to all indictments preferred by whatever method: R v Walters, R v Tovey, R v Padfield (1979) 69 Cr App Rep 115, CA; R v Ismail (1991) 92 Cr App Rep 92, CA; R v Wells [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 417, CA; R v Allcock [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 227, CA; R v Hemmings [2000] 2 All ER 155, [2000] 1 Cr App Rep 360, CA.

The Indictments Act 1915 s 5(1) (as amended) imposes on the trial judge a duty to remedy a defective indictment if the necessary amendment may be made without injustice: R v Fraser (1923) 93 LJB 236, 17 Cr App Rep 182, CCA. An indictment is defective if it is bad for duplicity (see PARA 1220 ante) or misjoinder (see PARAS 1221-1223 ante), or if: (1) it charges offences which are not disclosed by the committal documents or the documents served on the defendant after being sent for trial and fails to charge an offence which is so disclosed (R v Martin [1962] 1 QB 221 at 227, 45 Cr App Rep 199 at 204, CCA; R v Radley (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 394, CA); (2) it does not accord with the evidence given at the trial (R v Hall [1968] 2 QB 788, 52 Cr App Rep 528, CA; R v Johal, R v Ram [1973] QB 475, 56 Cr App Rep 348, CA); (3) when the evidence in support of the indictment discloses more than one offence (R v Jones (1974) 59 Cr App Rep 120, CA; R v Stanley (1998) Times, 8 December, CA); (4) where the indictment originates from a voluntary bill of indictment, the indictment does not include a charge in respect of an offence disclosed on the material before the High Court judge who granted leave to prefer the voluntary bill (R v Wells supra; R v Allcock supra); (5) it does not disclose as a defendant a person who might properly be joined in the indictment (R v Ismail supra; R v Palmer supra). In view of the fact that justice lies at the back of all these considerations and no amendment is to be made if it cannot be made without injustice, a fairly liberal meaning should be given to the language of the Indictments Act 1915 s 5 (as amended): R v Radley supra at 401. See also R v Tirado (1974) 59 Cr App Rep 80 at 87-88, CA.

5 An amendment during the course of the trial is likely to prejudice the defendant, and the longer the interval between arraignment and amendment, the more likely it is that injustice will be caused: R v Johal, R v Ram [1973] QB 475, 56 Cr App Rep 348, CA. See also R v Jennings (1949) 33 Cr App Rep 143, CCA (amendment resulting in a totally different offence from that originally charged must have prejudiced the defendant; conviction quashed).

6 R v Johal, R v Ram [1973] QB 475, 56 Cr App Rep 348, CA; R v Radley (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 394, CA; R v Teong Sun Chuah, R v Teong Tatt Chuah [1991] Crim LR 463, CA. In R v Johal, R v Ram supra the Court of Appeal was of the opinion that the principle in R v Harden [1963] 1 QB 8, 46 Cr App Rep 90, CCA, as stated in the headnote to that case in the Criminal Appeal Reports at (1962) 46 Cr App Rep 90 at 91 ('an amendment of a count of an indictment may not be made after arraignment if the result is to substitute another offence for that originally charged'), as a statement of principle to be applied generally was too wide. Thus R v Hughes (1927) 20 Cr App Rep 4, 136 LT 671, CCA (an amendment must be of a defect in form and must not amount to an alteration or revision of the substance of the charge) would appear to have been overruled by implication. See also R v Pain, R v Jory, R v Hawkins (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 141, CA (substitution of count where proof of offences charged under original counts proved facts justifying prosecution under amended count); R v Collison (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 249, CA (addition of count of unlawful wounding, where members of the jury disagreed on the charge of wounding with intent and therefore could not convict of lesser offence, on which they were agreed, under the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3) (see PARA 1335 post)); R v Cash [1985] QB 801, 80 Cr App Rep 314, CA (amendment during closing speech of prosecuting counsel).

7 R v O'Connor [1997] Crim LR 516, CA; R v Piggott, R v Litwin [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 320, CA. #### 1228. Power to alter place of trial.

The Crown Court may<sup>1</sup> give directions, or further directions, altering the place of any trial on indictment, whether by varying the decision of a magistrates' court<sup>2</sup> or by substituting some other place for the place specified in a notice of transfer<sup>3</sup>, or by varying a previous decision of the Crown Court<sup>4</sup>, or by varying the place of trial where a person has been sent<sup>5</sup> for trial<sup>6</sup>. Where a preparatory hearing has been ordered<sup>7</sup>, directions altering the place of trial may be so given at any time before the time when the jury is sworn<sup>8</sup>.

If dissatisfied with the place of trial as fixed by the magistrates' court, as specified in a notice of transfer<sup>9</sup>, or as fixed by the Crown Court, the defendant or the prosecutor may apply to the Crown Court for a direction, or further direction, varying the place of trial; and the court must take the matter into consideration and may comply with or refuse the application, or give a direction not in compliance with the application, as the court thinks fit<sup>10</sup>.

1229. Stay of proceedings by nolle prosequi.

Proceedings on an indictment may be stayed at any time after the signing of the indictment<sup>1</sup> and before judgment<sup>2</sup>, at the instance of either the prosecutor or the defendant, if the Attorney General, who alone has authority to do so<sup>3</sup>, enters a nolle prosequi<sup>4</sup>. The Attorney General's power in this respect is not subject to the control of the courts, but its exercise does not prevent a judge, on the application of the prosecutor, from directing that the indictment should remain on the file and not be proceeded with unless by leave of the court or of the Court of Appeal<sup>5</sup>.

1230. When nolle prosequi may be entered.

A nolle prosequi may be entered as against one of two or more defendants who are jointly indicted to enable that one defendant to give evidence for the Crown against his co-defendants<sup>1</sup>; and, if two persons indicted together are found guilty of different offences, a nolle prosequi may be entered against one and judgment passed on the other<sup>2</sup>. A nolle prosequi may be entered: (1) where an indictment is not the proper remedy<sup>3</sup>; (2) where civil remedies are also pursued<sup>4</sup>; (3) where the proceedings are vexatious<sup>5</sup>; or (4) where there have been summary proceedings on the same events<sup>6</sup>. A nolle prosequi will normally be entered where the defendant cannot be produced in court to plead or stand trial owing to physical or mental incapacity which is expected to be permanent<sup>7</sup>.

1231. Effect of nolle prosequi.

Nolle prosequi is distinct from, and does not have the same effect as, offering no evidence and submitting to acquittal<sup>1</sup>. ## 19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS

(1) PROCEEDINGS ON INDICTMENT GENERALLY

1232. All proceedings on indictment to be before the Crown Court.

By the Courts Act 1971, assize courts and courts of quarter sessions were abolished and replaced by the Crown Court, which is part of the Supreme Court of England and Wales<sup>1</sup>. All proceedings on indictment must be brought before the Crown Court<sup>2</sup>; and the jurisdiction of the Crown Court with respect to such proceedings includes jurisdiction in proceedings on indictment for offences wherever committed, and in particular proceedings on indictment for offences within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty<sup>3</sup>. The Crown Court being a part of the Supreme Court, judicial review by way of a mandatory order, quashing order or prohibiting order does not lie to it in respect of its jurisdiction in matters relating to trial on indictment<sup>4</sup>. All enactments and rules of law relating to procedure in connection with indictable offences continue to have effect in relation to proceedings in the Crown Court<sup>5</sup>. The order in which business is conducted, the fixing of dates and matters of that nature are within the day-to-day control of the Crown Court<sup>6</sup>.

Where a child or young person is tried in the Crown Court all possible steps should be taken to assist him to understand and participate in proceedings<sup>7</sup>.

The jurisdiction of the Crown Court in hearing any application<sup>8</sup> relating to procedural matters preliminary or incidental to proceedings in the Crown Court may be exercised by a judge of the Crown Court sitting in chambers<sup>9</sup>.

1 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 1(1). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 In the administration of justice in Wales, the English and Welsh languages should be treated on a basis of equality: see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.23.1, and at III.23.2-III.23.13, CA. If a defendant in a court in England asks to give or call evidence in the Welsh language, the case should not be transferred to Wales. In ordinary circumstances interpreters can be provided on request: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.22.1, CA.

Active, hands on, case management both pre-trial and throughout the trial itself, is now regarded as an essential part of a judge's duty: R v Jisl [2004] EWCA Crim 696, [2004] All ER (D) 31 (Apr), (2004) Times 19 April.

5 Supreme Court Act 1981 s 79(1). Without prejudice to the generality of s 79(1), this provision applies in particular to: (1) the practice by which, on any one indictment, the taking of pleas, the trial by jury and the pronouncement of judgment may respectively be by or before different judges; (2) the release, after respite of judgment, of a convicted person on recognisance to come up for judgment if called on, but meanwhile to be of good behaviour; (3) the manner of trying any question relating to the breach of a recognisance; and (4) the manner of execution of any sentence on conviction, or the manner in which any other judgment or order given in connection with trial on indictment may be enforced: s 79(2).

7 Some children or young persons ('young defendants') accused of committing serious crimes may be very young and very immature when standing trial in the Crown Court. The purpose of such trial is to determine guilt (if that is in issue) and decide the appropriate sentence if the young defendant pleads guilty or is convicted. The trial process should not itself expose the young defendant to avoidable intimidation, humiliation or distress. All possible steps should be taken to assist the young defendant to understand and participate in the proceedings. The ordinary trial process should, so far as necessary, be adapted to meet those ends. Regard should be had to the welfare of the young defendant as required by the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 44 (as amended) (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1232): Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, CA at IV.39.1, IV.39.3; and see further Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) supra at IV.39.2, IV.39.4-IV.39.17.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(1) PROCEEDINGS ON INDICTMENT GENERALLY/1234. Record of proceedings.

1234. Record of proceedings.

In general, the whole of proceedings on indictment must be recorded by means of shorthand notes or, with the permission of the Lord Chancellor<sup>1</sup>, by mechanical means<sup>2</sup>. Where it is not practicable for the proceedings to be recorded in this manner, the trial judge must direct how and to what extent the proceedings are to be recorded<sup>3</sup>. It is important that a note is taken of every plea and, where the plea is taken in one court and the trial takes place in another, that the note of the latter should include the plea<sup>4</sup>. Where proceedings are recorded by means of shorthand notes, it is not necessary to record the opening or closing addresses on behalf of the prosecution or a defendant unless the trial judge otherwise directs<sup>5</sup> or to record any other part of the proceedings which the judge directs need not be recorded<sup>6</sup>. It is the duty of the judge, counsel and court officials to ensure that a proper record of the evidence and summing up is made<sup>7</sup>.

1 The permission of the Lord Chancellor may contain conditions concerning the custody, and supply of transcripts, of a recording made by mechanical means: CrimPR 68.12(4).

2 See the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 32(1); CrimPR 68.12(1); and see also PARA 1859 post. As to the need to record discussion between judge and counsel in chambers see R v Smith [1990] 1 All ER 634, 90 Cr App Rep 413, CA.

3 CrimPR 68.12(3).

4 R v Strickson (1936) 25 Cr App Rep 206, CCA.

5 CrimPR 68.12(2)(a). See R v Osborne-Odelli [1998] Crim LR 902, CA (where important exchanges take place during final speeches, the shorthand writer must be summoned to record them).

6 CrimPR 68.12(2)(b).

7 It is the judge's duty to do all that is practicable to ensure that an adequate and, so far as is possible, an unchallengeable record is made. If for any reason there is no competent shorthand writer or adequate mechanical means of recording, the trial judge should make a note of his summing up. Counsel should make their own notes, particularly of the summing up, and are entirely free to raise any query with the trial judge: R v Payne, R v Spillane [1971] 3 All ER 1146n, 56 Cr App Rep 9, CA. The absence or inadequacy of a shorthand note is not of itself a ground for allowing an appeal: see R v Le Caer (1972) 56 Cr App Rep 727, CA; and PARA 1859 post.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(1) PROCEEDINGS ON INDICTMENT GENERALLY/1235. Presence of defendant.

1235. Presence of defendant.

In general a defendant has a right to be present<sup>1</sup> throughout his trial<sup>2</sup>. However, a judge has a discretion to commence or continue a trial in the defendant's absence, although this discretion must be exercised with the utmost care and caution; fairness to the defendant is of prime importance but fairness to the prosecution should also be taken into account<sup>3</sup>.

The trial judge may, if he considers that the sight or behaviour of the defendant in the dock may intimidate a witness, remove the defendant from the presence of the witness, though not it seems out of hearing<sup>4</sup>. There is a variety of special measures which can be directed to protect vulnerable or intimidated witnesses<sup>5</sup>.

A defendant must be present at the time of sentence if he is in custody and does not waive that right<sup>6</sup>. If the trial continues after the defendant has voluntarily absented himself, for example, by escaping from custody or failing to surrender to custody whilst on bail, and the defendant is convicted, the judge may sentence him in his absence<sup>7</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> On a charge of felony the rule was that, unless removed for disorderly conduct, the defendant had to be present throughout his trial: see R v Berry (1897) 104 LT Jo 110. Since the abolition of the distinctions between felonies and misdemeanours, the law and practice in relation to all offences is that formerly applicable to misdemeanours: see the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 1(2); and PARA 49 ante. See, however, R v Lee Kun [1916] 1 KB 337 at 341, 11 Cr App Rep 293 at 300, CCA, per Lord Reading CJ ('Even in a charge of misdemeanour there must be exceptional circumstances to justify proceeding with the trial in his absence'); applied in R v Teesside Justices, ex p Nilsson (1991) 155 JP 101, DC.

<sup>3</sup> R v Jones (Anthony) [2002] UKHL 5, [2002] 1 AC 1, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 128. If the defendant's absence is due to involuntary illness or incapacity, it will rarely, if ever, be right to exercise the discretion in favour of commencing the trial, at any rate unless the defendant is represented and asks that the trial should begin or continue: R v Jones (Anthony) supra. It is generally desirable that a defendant should be legally represented if he has voluntarily absconded and the trial continues in his absence: R v Jones (Anthony) supra. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(1) PROCEEDINGS ON INDICTMENT GENERALLY/1236. Attendance at court of parent or guardian.

1236. Attendance at court of parent or guardian.

Where a child or young person<sup>1</sup> is charged with an offence or is for any other reason brought before a court, the court may, and must in the case of a child or young person who is under 16, require a person who is a parent or guardian<sup>2</sup> of his to attend at the court at all the stages of the proceedings, unless and to the extent that it is satisfied that it would be unreasonable to require such attendance, having regard to the circumstances of the case<sup>3</sup>.

1 For the meanings of 'child' and 'young person' see PARA 143 note 2 ante.

2 In relation to a child or young person for whom a local authority has parental responsibility and who is in its care, or is provided with accommodation by it in the exercise of any functions which are social services functions within the meaning of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970 (see SOCIAL SECURITY AND PENSIONS vol 44(2) (Reissue) PARA 1005 et seq), the reference to a person who is a parent or guardian of his is to be construed as a reference to that authority or, where he is allowed to live with such a person, as including such a reference: see the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 34A(2) (s 34A added by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 56; and amended by the Local Government Act 2000 s 107(1), Sch 5 para 1). For these purposes, 'local authority' and 'parental responsibility' have the same meanings as in the Children Act 1989 (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 134, 138): see the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 34A(2) (as so added and amended).

3 See ibid s 34A (as added and amended: see note 2 supra).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(1) PROCEEDINGS ON INDICTMENT GENERALLY/1237. Legal representation.

1237. Legal representation.

Both prosecutor and defendant<sup>1</sup> are entitled to have a barrister or solicitor<sup>2</sup> to appear on their behalf in the Crown Court to conduct their respective cases<sup>3</sup>. A defendant, if he wishes and if he has the means, may be assisted and represented by solicitor and counsel privately, or he may be assisted and represented funded by the Legal Services Commission through the Criminal Defence Service<sup>4</sup>. If the defence advocate is dismissed or withdraws, the judge has a discretion (to be exercised by reference to the interests of justice) whether to adjourn the proceedings so as to enable another advocate to be instructed<sup>5</sup>.

There is no reason why an unrepresented defendant should not, with the consent of the trial judge, have a friend with him to advise, take notes and generally assist him, provided that person does not seek to take part in the proceedings as an advocate<sup>6</sup>.

There are restrictions on the imposition of custodial sentences upon persons not legally represented<sup>7</sup>.

If, during the course of a criminal trial and prior to final sentence, the defendant voluntarily absconds and defending counsel's instructing solicitor withdraws from the case<sup>8</sup>, counsel too must withdraw<sup>9</sup>. If the trial judge requests counsel to remain to assist the court, counsel has an absolute discretion whether he does so<sup>10</sup>. If he does, he must act on the basis that his instructions are withdrawn and he will not be entitled to use any material contained in his brief save that part already established in evidence before the court<sup>11</sup>. He should request the trial judge to instruct the jury that this is the basis on which he is prepared to assist the court<sup>12</sup>. If, for any reason, counsel's instructing solicitor does not withdraw from the case, counsel retains an absolute discretion whether to continue to act<sup>13</sup>. If he does continue, he should conduct the case as if his client were still present in court but had decided not to give evidence and on the basis of any instructions he has received<sup>14</sup>. He will be free to use any material contained in his brief and may cross-examine witnesses called for the prosecution and call witnesses for the defence<sup>15</sup>.

1 Everyone charged with a criminal offence has the right to defend himself in person or through legal assistance of his own choosing or, if he has not sufficient means to pay for legal assistance, to be given it free when the interests of justice so require: Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6(3)(c). #### 1238. Introduction.

The Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>1</sup>, together with the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction<sup>2</sup>, give the criminal courts powers and responsibilities to manage cases actively, and to reduce the numbers of ineffective hearings.

The Rules indicate that criminal procedure is subject to two sets of overarching principles: the principles of justice contained in a statement of the overriding objective<sup>3</sup>, and the duty of active case management<sup>4</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(i) Case Management/1239. The overriding objective.

1239. The overriding objective.

The overriding objective of the Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>1</sup> is that criminal cases be dealt with justly<sup>2</sup>. Dealing with a criminal case justly includes:

- 2023 (1) acquitting the innocent and convicting the guilty<sup>3</sup>;
  - 2024 (2) dealing with the prosecution and the defence fairly<sup>4</sup>;
  - 2025 (3) recognising the rights of a defendant, particularly the right to a fair trial under the European Convention on Human Rights<sup>5</sup>;
  - 2026 (4) respecting the interests of witnesses, victims and jurors and keeping them informed of the progress of the case<sup>6</sup>;
  - 2027 (5) dealing with the case efficiently and expeditiously<sup>7</sup>;
  - 2028 (6) ensuring that appropriate information is available to the court when bail and sentence are considered<sup>8</sup>; and
  - 2029 (7) dealing with the case in ways that take into account:
- 582
- 56. (a) the gravity of the offence alleged<sup>9</sup>;
  - 57. (b) the complexity of what is in issue<sup>10</sup>;
  - 58. (c) the severity of the consequences for the defendant and others affected<sup>11</sup>; and
  - 59. (d) the needs of other cases<sup>12</sup>.
- 583

Each participant<sup>13</sup>, in the conduct of each case, must:

- 2030 (i) prepare and conduct the case in accordance with the overriding objective<sup>14</sup>;
- 2031 (ii) comply with the Criminal Procedure Rules, practice directions and directions made by the court<sup>15</sup>; and
- 2032 (iii) at once inform the court and all parties of any significant failure (whether or not that participant is responsible for that failure) to take any procedural step required by the Criminal Procedure Rules, any practice direction or any direction of the court<sup>16</sup>.

The court must further the overriding objective in particular when:

- 2033 (A) exercising any power given to it by legislation (including the Criminal Procedure Rules)<sup>17</sup>;
- 2034 (B) applying any practice direction<sup>18</sup>; or
- 2035 (C) interpreting any rule or practice direction<sup>19</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(i) Case Management/1240. Case management.

1240. Case management.

The court<sup>1</sup> is under a duty to further the overriding objective by actively managing the case<sup>2</sup>.

Active case management includes:

- 2036 (1) the early identification of the real issues<sup>3</sup>;
- 2037 (2) the early identification of the needs of witnesses<sup>4</sup>;
- 2038 (3) achieving certainty as to what must be done, by whom, and when, in particular by the early setting of a timetable for the progress of the case<sup>5</sup>;
- 2039 (4) monitoring the progress of the case and compliance with directions<sup>6</sup>;
- 2040 (5) ensuring that evidence, whether disputed or not, is presented in the shortest and clearest way<sup>7</sup>;
- 2041 (6) discouraging delay, dealing with as many aspects of the case as possible on the same occasion, and avoiding unnecessary hearings<sup>8</sup>;
- 2042 (7) encouraging the participants to co-operate in the progression of the case<sup>9</sup>; and
- 2043 (8) making use of technology<sup>10</sup>.

The court must actively manage the case by giving any direction appropriate to the needs of that case as early as possible<sup>11</sup>. Each party must actively assist the court in fulfilling its duty to further the overriding duty to manage the case actively, without or if necessary with a direction; and apply for a direction if needed to further the overriding objective<sup>12</sup>.

At the beginning of the case each party must, unless the court otherwise directs nominate an individual responsible for progressing that case (a 'case progression officer'<sup>13</sup>), and must tell other parties and the court who he is and how to contact him<sup>14</sup>. In fulfilling its duty to further the overriding objective to manage the case actively, the court must where appropriate nominate a court officer responsible for progressing the case, and must make sure the parties know who he is and how to contact him<sup>15</sup>. A case progression officer must:

- 2044 (a) monitor compliance with directions<sup>16</sup>;
- 2045 (b) make sure that the court is kept informed of events that may affect the progress of that case<sup>17</sup>;
- 2046 (c) make sure that he can be contacted promptly about the case during ordinary business hours<sup>18</sup>;
- 2047 (d) act promptly and reasonably in response to communications about the case<sup>19</sup>; and
- 2048 (e) if he will be unavailable, appoint a substitute to fulfil his duties and inform the other case progression officers<sup>20</sup>.

In fulfilling its duty to further the overriding objective to manage the case actively, the court may give any direction and take any step actively to manage a case unless that direction or step would be inconsistent with legislation, including the Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>21</sup>. In particular, the court may:

- 2049 (i) nominate a judge, magistrate, justices' clerk or assistant to a justices' clerk to manage the case<sup>22</sup>;
- 2050 (ii) give a direction on its own initiative or on application by a party<sup>23</sup>;
- 2051 (iii) ask or allow a party to propose a direction<sup>24</sup>;
- 2052 (iv) for the purpose of giving directions, receive applications and representations by letter, by telephone or by any other means of electronic communication, and conduct a hearing by such means<sup>25</sup>;
- 2053 (v) give a direction without a hearing<sup>26</sup>;
- 2054 (vi) fix, postpone, bring forward, extend or cancel a hearing<sup>27</sup>;
- 2055 (vii) shorten or extend (even after it has expired) a time limit fixed by a direction<sup>28</sup>;
- 2056 (viii) require that issues in the case should be determined separately, and decide in what order they will be determined<sup>29</sup>; and
- 2057 (ix) specify the consequences of failing to comply with a direction<sup>30</sup>.

At every hearing, if a case cannot be concluded there and then the court must give directions so that it can be concluded at the next hearing or as soon as possible after that<sup>31</sup>.

At every hearing the court must, where relevant:

- 2058 (A) if the defendant is absent, decide whether to proceed nonetheless<sup>32</sup>;
- 2059 (B) take the defendant's plea (unless already done) or if no plea can be taken then find out whether the defendant is likely to plead guilty or not guilty<sup>33</sup>;
- 2060 (C) set, follow or revise a timetable for the progress of the case, which may include a timetable for any hearing including the trial or (in the Crown Court) the appeal<sup>34</sup>;
- 2061 (D) in giving directions, ensure continuity in relation to the court and to the parties' representatives where that is appropriate and practicable<sup>35</sup>; and
- 2062 (E) where a direction has not been complied with, find out why, identify who was responsible, and take appropriate action<sup>36</sup>.

The following rule applies to a party's preparation for trial<sup>37</sup> or (in the Crown Court) appeal<sup>38</sup>. In fulfilling his duty<sup>39</sup> actively to assist the court, each party must: comply with directions given by the court<sup>40</sup>; take every reasonable step to make sure his witnesses will attend when they are needed<sup>41</sup>; make appropriate arrangements to present any written or other material<sup>42</sup>; and promptly inform the court and the other parties of anything that may affect the date or duration of the trial or appeal, or significantly affect the progress of the case in any other way<sup>43</sup>.

In order to manage the trial or (in the Crown Court) appeal, the court may require a party to identify:

- 2063 (aa) which witnesses he intends to give oral evidence<sup>44</sup>;
- 2064 (bb) the order in which he intends those witnesses to give their evidence<sup>45</sup>;
- 2065 (cc) whether he requires an order compelling the attendance of a witness<sup>46</sup>;
- 2066 (dd) what arrangements, if any, he proposes to facilitate the giving of evidence by a witness<sup>47</sup>;
- 2067 (ee) what arrangements, if any, he proposes to facilitate the participation of any other person, including the defendant<sup>48</sup>;
- 2068 (ff) what written evidence he intends to introduce<sup>49</sup>;
- 2069 (gg) what other material, if any, he intends to make available to the court in the presentation of the case<sup>50</sup>;
- 2070 (hh) whether he intends to raise any point of law that could affect the conduct of the trial or appeal<sup>51</sup>; and
- 2071 (ii) what timetable he proposes and expects to follow<sup>52</sup>.

The case management forms set out in the Consolidated Practice Direction<sup>53</sup> must be used, and where there is no form then no specific formality is required<sup>54</sup>.

The court must make available to the parties a record of directions given<sup>55</sup>.

1 The provisions of CrimPR Pt 3 (ie CrimPR 3.1-3.11) (see the text and notes 2-55 infra) apply to the management of each case in a magistrates' court and in the Crown Court (including an appeal to the Crown Court) until the conclusion of that case: CrimPR 3.1.

The Crown Court may give a direction that will apply in a magistrates' court if the case is to continue there: CrimPR 3.5(4). Any power to give a direction includes a power to vary or revoke that direction: CrimPR 3.5(5).

A party may apply to vary a direction if: (1) the court gave it without a hearing; (2) the court gave it at a hearing in his absence; or (3) circumstances have changed: CrimPR 3.6(1). A party who applies to vary a direction must apply as soon as practicable after he becomes aware of the grounds for doing so; and he must give as much notice to the other parties as the nature and urgency of his application permits: CrimPR 3.6(2).

The parties may agree to vary a time limit fixed by a direction, but only if:

57 (a) the variation will not affect the date of any hearing that has been fixed, or significantly affect the progress of the case in any other way (CrimPR 3.7(1)(a));

58 (b) the court has not prohibited variation by agreement (CrimPR 3.7(1)(b)); and 59 (c) the court's case progression officer is promptly informed (CrimPR 3.7(1)(c)).

The court's case progression officer must refer the agreement to the court if he doubts the condition in head (a) above is satisfied: CrimPR 3.7(2).

(ii) Non-statutory Preliminary Hearings and Plea and Case Management Hearings

1241. Preliminary hearings.

Where a case is sent for trial, a preliminary hearing ('PH') is not always required; it should be ordered by the magistrates' court or by the Crown Court only where such a hearing is considered necessary; the PH should be held about 14 days after sending<sup>1</sup>. Whether or not a magistrates' court orders a PH, it should order a plea and case management hearing ('PCMH') to be held within about 14 weeks after sending for trial where a defendant is in custody and within about 17 weeks after sending for trial if the defendant is on bail<sup>2</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(ii) Non-statutory Preliminary Hearings and Plea and Case Management Hearings/1242. Plea and case management hearing.

1242. Plea and case management hearing.

Active case management at the plea and case management hearing ('PCMH') should reduce the number of ineffective and cracked trials and delays during the trial to resolve legal issues. The effectiveness of a PCMH in a contested case depends in large measure upon preparation by all concerned and upon the presence of the trial advocate or an advocate who is able to make decisions and give the court the assistance which the trial advocate could be expected to give. Resident judges in setting the listing policy should ensure that list officers fix cases as far as possible to enable the trial advocate to conduct the PCMH and the trial<sup>1</sup>.

In class 1 and class 2 cases<sup>2</sup>, and in all cases involving a serious sexual offence against a child, the PCMH must be conducted by: (1) a High Court judge; (2) a circuit judge or a recorder to whom the case has been assigned<sup>3</sup>; or (3) a judge authorised by the presiding judges to conduct such hearings. In the event of a guilty plea before such an authorised judge, the case will be adjourned for sentencing by a High Court judge or by a circuit judge or recorder to whom the case has been assigned<sup>4</sup>.

In other courts, the resident judge should exercise discretion as to the manner in which the form is used taking account of the views of the local criminal justice agencies and of practitioners. In the event of the residing judge deciding to use the forms in a manner that is not agreed to by either the local criminal justice agencies or the practitioners, the resident judge should consult the presiding judges of his circuit before doing so: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.41.11, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(iii) Pre-trial Rulings/1244. Meaning of pre-trial ruling.

(iii) Pre-trial Rulings

1244. Meaning of pre-trial ruling.

For the purposes of the statutory provisions<sup>1</sup> relating to a pre-trial ruling, a hearing is a pre-trial hearing if it relates to a trial on indictment and it takes place:

- 2072 (1) after the defendant has been sent for the trial for the offence<sup>2</sup>; and
- 2073 (2) before the start of the trial<sup>3</sup>.

For the purposes of such provisions, a hearing is also a pre-trial hearing if:

- 2074 (a) it relates to a trial on indictment to be held in pursuance of a voluntary bill of indictment preferred<sup>4</sup> by direction of the Court of Appeal, or by direction or with consent of a judge<sup>5</sup>; and
- 2075 (b) it takes place after the bill of indictment has been preferred and before the start of the trial<sup>6</sup>.

2    Ibid s 39(1)(a) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 para 66(1), (7)).

3    Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 39(1)(b).

For the purposes of s 39 (as amended), the start of a trial on indictment occurs at the time when a jury is sworn to consider the issue of guilt or fitness to plead or, if the court accepts a plea of guilty before the time when a jury is sworn, when that plea is accepted; but this is subject to the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 8 and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 30 (preparatory hearings: see PARA 1256 post): s 39(3) (s 39(3) amended, and s 39(4) added, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 65, 71). For this purpose, references to 'the time when a jury is sworn' include the time when that jury would be sworn but for the making of an order under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 7 (ss 43-50) (not yet fully in force; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1284 post): see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 39(4) (as so added).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(iii) Pre-trial Rulings/1245. Power to make rulings.

1245. Power to make rulings.

A judge may make at a pre-trial hearing a ruling as to: (1) any question as to the admissibility of evidence; (2) any other question of law relating to the case concerned<sup>1</sup>. Such a ruling may be made: (a) on an application by a party to the case; or (b) of the judge's own motion<sup>2</sup>.

Such a ruling has binding effect from the time it is made until the case against the defendant or, if there is more than one, against each of them is disposed of; and the case against a defendant is disposed of if he is acquitted or convicted or if the prosecutor<sup>3</sup> decides not to proceed with the case against him<sup>4</sup>.

A judge<sup>5</sup> may discharge or vary (or further vary) such a ruling if it appears to him that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and a judge may so act: (i) on an application by a party to the case; or (ii) of the judge's own motion<sup>6</sup>.

1 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 40(1). A pre-trial ruling under s 40 is not binding for the purposes of a re-trial: R v Clayton [1998] 8 Archbold News 3, CA.

2 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 40(2).

3 Ie any person acting as prosecutor, whether an individual or a body: ibid s 40(7).

4 Ibid s 40(3).

5 The judge need not be the judge who made the ruling or, if it has been varied, the judge (or any judge) who varied it: ibid s 40(6).

6 Ibid s 40(4). See R v Clayton [1998] 8 Archbold News 3, CA. No application may be made under head (i) in the text unless there has been a material change of circumstances since the ruling was made or, if a previous application has been made, since the application (or last application) was made: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 40(5).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(iii) Pre-trial Rulings/1246. Restrictions on reporting.

1246. Restrictions on reporting.

With the exceptions referred to below:

- 2076 (1) no written report of specified matters may be published<sup>1</sup> in the United Kingdom<sup>2</sup>;
- 2077 (2) no report of specified matters may be included in a relevant programme<sup>3</sup> for reception in the United Kingdom<sup>4</sup>.

The following are specified matters for these purposes:

- 2078 (a) a ruling made at a pre-trial hearing<sup>5</sup>;
- 2079 (b) proceedings on an application for such a ruling to be made<sup>6</sup>;
- 2080 (c) an order that such a ruling be discharged or varied or further varied<sup>7</sup>;
- 2081 (d) proceedings for an application for such a ruling to be discharged or varied or further varied<sup>8</sup>.

The judge dealing with any specified matter may order that the above restrictions on reporting are not to apply, or are not to apply to a specified extent, to a report of the matter<sup>9</sup>. Where there is only one defendant and he objects to the making of such an order<sup>10</sup>, the judge must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of the defendant that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and, if the order is made, it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objection or representations<sup>11</sup>. Where there are two or more defendants and one or more of them objects to the making of such an order, the judge must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of each of the defendants that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and, if the order is made, it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objection or representations<sup>12</sup>.

If a report is published or included in a relevant programme in contravention of an order restricting reporting, each of the following persons is guilty of an offence:

- 2082 (i) in the case of a publication of a written report as part of a newspaper or periodical, any proprietor, editor or publisher of the newspaper or periodical<sup>13</sup>;
- 2083 (ii) in the case of a publication of a written report otherwise than as part of a newspaper or periodical, the person who publishes it<sup>14</sup>;
- 2084 (iii) in the case of the inclusion of a report in a relevant programme, any body corporate which is engaged in providing the service in which the programme is included and any person having functions in relation to the programme corresponding to those of an editor of a newspaper<sup>15</sup>.

A person guilty of an offence under these provisions is liable on summary conviction to a fine of an amount not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale<sup>16</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> 'Publish', in relation to a report, means publish the report, either by itself or as part of a newspaper or periodical, for distribution to the public; and expressions cognate with 'publish' are to be construed accordingly: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 41(8)(a), (b).

2 Ibid s 41(1)(a) (s 41(1) amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 311(1), (8)). As to the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

3 'Relevant programme' means a programme included in a programme service, within the meaning of the Broadcasting Act 1990 (see TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING vol 45(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 328): Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 41(8)(c).

4 Ibid s 41(1)(b) (as amended: see note 2 supra). Section 41(1) (as amended) does not apply to: (1) the publication of a report of matters; or (2) the inclusion in a relevant programme of a report of matters, at the conclusion of the trial of the defendant or of the last of the defendants to be tried: s 41(6). Nothing in s 41 (as amended) affects any prohibition or restriction imposed by virtue of any other enactment on a publication or on matter included in a programme: s 41(7).

13 Ibid s 42(1)(a). See note 15 infra.

14 Ibid s 42(1)(b). See note 15 infra.

15 Ibid s 42(1)(c). The definitions in s 41(8) (see notes 1, 3 supra) apply for the purposes of s 42 as they apply for the purposes of s 41 (see the text and notes 1-12 supra): s 42(4).

16 Ibid s 42(2). As to the standard scale see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 142. Proceedings for an offence under s 42 are not to be instituted in England and Wales otherwise than by or with the consent of the Attorney General: s 42(3). For the effect of this limitation see PARA 1071 ante.

(iv) Preparatory Hearings in Serious or Complex Fraud Cases or Serious or Long Cases or Terrorism Cases

1247. Application.

An application for a preparatory hearing<sup>1</sup> must be made in writing in the prescribed form<sup>2</sup>, must include a short explanation of the reasons for applying<sup>3</sup>, and must be served on the court officer and all other parties<sup>4</sup>.

A prosecutor who wants the court to order that the trial will be conducted without a jury<sup>5</sup> must apply under these provisions for a preparatory hearing, whether or not the defendant has applied for one<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> CrimPR 15.1(1)(c). As to the persons who may make the application see PARA 1250 post; and as to service of documents see PARA 1255 post.

The provisions about preparatory hearings are intended to assist in the control and management of heavy fraud and other complex criminal cases. The Criminal Procedure Rules 2005 also assist in this respect, and they are supplemented by the Protocol for the Control and Management of Heavy Fraud and Other Complex Criminal Cases [2005] 2 All ER 429, CA, issued by Lord Woolf CJ.

1249. Representations concerning application for a preparatory hearing; determination of application.

A party who wants to make written representations concerning an application for a preparatory hearing<sup>1</sup> must do so within seven days of receiving a copy of that application, and must serve those representations on the court officer and all other parties<sup>2</sup>.

A defendant who wants to oppose an application for an order that the trial will be conducted without a jury<sup>3</sup> must serve written representations under these provisions, including a short explanation of the reasons for opposing that application<sup>4</sup>.

Applications for a preparatory hearing<sup>5</sup> are normally determined without a hearing<sup>6</sup>. However, where an application is made to order a trial without a jury<sup>7</sup>, the court must hold a hearing for the purpose of determining whether to grant the application<sup>8</sup>.

1250. Making of order: serious or complex fraud cases.

Where it appears to a judge of the Crown Court that the evidence on an indictment reveals a case of fraud of such seriousness or complexity that substantial benefits are likely to accrue from a hearing (a 'preparatory hearing') before the time when a jury is sworn<sup>1</sup>, for the purpose of:

- 2085 (1) identifying issues which are likely to be material to the verdict of the jury<sup>2</sup>;
- 2086 (2) assisting their comprehension of any such issues<sup>3</sup>;
- 2087 (3) expediting the proceedings before the jury<sup>4</sup>;
- 2088 (4) assisting the judge's management of the trial<sup>5</sup>; or
- 2089 (5) considering questions as to the severance or joinder of charges<sup>6</sup>, he may order that such a hearing is to be held<sup>7</sup>.

A judge may make such an order on the application<sup>8</sup> of the prosecution or of the person indicted or, if the indictment charges a number of persons, any of them, or of his own motion<sup>9</sup>.

Where a judge orders a preparatory hearing and decides that any order which could be made at the hearing under specified provisions<sup>10</sup> should be made before the hearing, he may make any such order before the hearing, or at the hearing<sup>11</sup>.

1 The reference to 'the time when the jury is sworn' includes the time when the jury would be sworn but for the making of an order under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 7 (ss 43-50) (not yet fully in force; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1284 post): see the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1), (2A) (s 7(1) amended, and s 7(2A) added, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 52, 53).

2 See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1)(a). This provision is substituted so as to provide 'identifying issues which are likely to be material to the determinations and findings which are likely to be required during the trial': see s 7(1)(a) (s 7(1)(a)-(c) substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45(1), (4)). At the date at which this volume states the law this substitution had effect in so far as applying to applications under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 44 (see PARA 1284 post) (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 13 and Transitional Provision) Order 2006, SI 2006/1835, art 2(c)), but no order had been made bringing the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 into force for any remaining purposes. An application concerning disclosure is not one of the purposes of a preparatory hearing within the meaning of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1) (as amended): see R v H [2006] All ER (D) 92 (Jul), CA.

3 See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1)(b). This provision is substituted so as to provide 'if there is to be a jury, assisting their comprehension of those issues and expediting the proceedings before them': see s 7(1)(b) (as substituted: see note 2 supra).

4 See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1)(c). This provision is substituted so as to provide: 'determining an application to which the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 (not yet fully in force) (application for trial without jury under ss 43, 44 (not yet fully in force): see PARA 1284 post) applies': see the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1)(c) (as substituted: see note 2 supra).

6 Ibid s 7(1)(e) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 310(1)).

7 See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 168, Sch 9 para 30). As to notification of the order see PARA 1252 post. As from a day to be appointed a judge may order a preparatory hearing for the further purpose of determining an application by the prosecution for certain counts to be tried without a jury under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 17 (not yet in force): see s 18(2) (not yet in force); and PARA 1285 post. The parties to a preparatory hearing at which an application under s 17 (not yet in force) is to be determined must be given an opportunity to make representations with respect to the application: s 18(4) (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

In a trial relating to serious or complex fraud the trial judge must, save in exceptional circumstances, be the judge who presided at the preparatory hearing; and what are exceptional circumstances will have to be decided in each case; but whereas death or illness of the judge will clearly qualify as such, administrative convenience will not: R v Southwark Crown Court, ex p Comrs for Customs and Excise [1993] 1 WLR 764, 97 Cr App Rep 266, DC. See also R v Lord Chancellor, ex p Maxwell [1997] 1 WLR 104, CA.

8 As to the form of application see PARA 1247 ante; and as to the time for making the application see PARA 1248 ante.

11 Ibid s 9A(1), (2) (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 72, Sch 3 para 4). In such a case the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(4)-(10) (see PARA 1253 post) applies.

UPDATE

1250 Making of order: serious or complex fraud cases

NOTE 2--R v H, cited, affirmed: [2007] UKHL 7, [2007] 3 All ER 269.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(iv) Preparatory Hearings in Serious or Complex Fraud Cases or Serious or Long Cases or Terrorism Cases/1251. Making of order: complex, serious or long cases or terrorism cases.

1251. Making of order: complex, serious or long cases or terrorism cases.

Where it appears to a judge of the Crown Court that an indictment reveals a case of such complexity, a case of such seriousness or a case whose trial is likely to be of such length, that substantial benefits are likely to accrue from a hearing before the time when a jury is sworn<sup>1</sup> and for any of the following specified purposes, he may order that a preparatory hearing be held<sup>2</sup>. Those purposes are:

- 2090 (1) identifying issues which are likely to be material to the verdict of the jury<sup>3</sup>;
- 2091 (2) assisting the jury's comprehension of any such issues<sup>4</sup>;
- 2092 (3) expediting the proceedings before the jury<sup>5</sup>;
- 2093 (4) assisting the judge's management of the trial<sup>6</sup>;
- 2094 (5) considering questions as to the severance or joinder of charges<sup>7</sup>.

An order for a preparatory hearing must be made by a Crown Court judge in every case which is a case in which at least one of the offences charged by the indictment against at least one of the persons charged is a terrorism offence<sup>8</sup>. An order for a preparatory hearing must also be made by a Crown Court judge in every case which is a case in which:

- 2095 (a) at least one of the offences charged by the indictment against at least one of the persons charged is an offence carrying a maximum of at least 10 years' imprisonment<sup>9</sup>; and
- 2096 (b) it appears to the judge that evidence on the indictment reveals that conduct in respect of which that offence is charged had a terrorist connection<sup>10</sup>.

In a case in which it appears to a judge of the Crown Court that evidence on an indictment reveals a case of fraud of seriousness or complexity<sup>11</sup>:

- 2097 (i) the judge may make an order for a preparatory hearing under these provisions<sup>12</sup> only if he is required to do so under the provisions<sup>13</sup> relating to terrorism<sup>14</sup>;
- 2098 (ii) before making such an order he must determine whether to make an order for a preparatory hearing under alternative<sup>15</sup> provisions<sup>16</sup>;
- 2099 (iii) he is not required by the provisions relating to terrorism<sup>17</sup> to make an order under these provisions<sup>18</sup> if he determines that an order for a preparatory hearing should be made under alternative<sup>19</sup> provisions<sup>20</sup>, and, in a case where an order is made under alternative provisions<sup>21</sup>, requirements imposed under these provisions<sup>22</sup> apply only if that order ceases to have effect<sup>23</sup>.

An order that a preparatory hearing must be held may be made on the application of the prosecutor, on the application of the defendant (or if there is more than one of them, any of them), or of the judge's own motion<sup>24</sup>.

Where a judge orders a preparatory hearing and decides that any order which could be made at the hearing under specified provisions<sup>25</sup> should be made before the hearing, he may make any such order before the hearing, or at the hearing<sup>26</sup>.

1 The reference to the time when the jury is sworn includes the time when the jury would be sworn but for the making of an order under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 7 (ss 43-50) (not yet fully in force; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1284 post): see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(5) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 65, 66(1), (3)).

2 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 309, Sch 36 para 66(2)). As from a day to be appointed this provision has effect as if the grounds on which a judge of the Crown Court may make an order included the ground that an application under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 17 (not yet in force) (see PARA 1285 post) has been made: s 18(3) (not yet in force). The parties to a preparatory hearing at which an application under s 17 (not yet in force) is to be determined must be given an opportunity to make representations with respect to the application: s 18(4) (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

A judge of the Crown Court may also order that a preparatory hearing be held if an application to which the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 (application for trial without jury: see PARA 1284 post) applies is made: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(1A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45(1), (6)). At the date at which this volume states the law this provision had effect in so far as applying to applications under s 44 (see PARA 1284 post) (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 13 and Transitional Provision) Order 2006, SI 2006/1835, art 2(c)), but no further orders had been made bringing the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 into force for any remaining purposes.

When considering whether to order a preparatory hearing, the judge must give close consideration to the statutory criteria; an order cannot be made simply because the parties agree to a preliminary hearing; the judge is not limited in his consideration to the terms of the indictment, but may also consider the evidence likely to be called: A-G's Reference (No 1 of 2004), R v Edwards, R v Denton, R v Jackson, R v Hendley, R v Crowley [2004] EWCA Crim 1025, [2004] 1 WLR 2111, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 424.

A preparatory hearing cannot be ordered merely to enable points of law to be decided and then tested on interlocutory appeal; but where a judge, having considered the terms of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended), decides that the legal issue is complex and that its resolution would assist the management of the trial, he is entitled to order a preparatory hearing: R v Pennine Acute Hospitals NHS Trust [2003] EWCA Crim 3436, [2004] 1 All ER 1324, CA.

The Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt III (ss 28-39) (as amended; prospectively amended) applies in relation to an offence if the defendant is committed for trial or sent for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (prospectively amended) or s 51 (as substituted) (see PARAS 1131-1132 ante) for the offence concerned, and proceedings for the trial on the charge concerned are transferred to the Crown Court (or the defendant is sent for trial for the offence concerned) or a bill of indictment relating to the offence is preferred, under the authority of the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (see PARA 1206 ante), by direction of the Court of Appeal or by the direction or with the consent of a judge: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 28 (amended by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 119 Sch 8 para 128; prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 66(1), (6), Sch 37 Pt 4). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. Where a judge orders a preparatory hearing and he decides that any order which could be made under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(4)-(7) (see PARA 1253 post) at the hearing should be made before the hearing, he may make any such order before the hearing (or at the hearing), and the provisions of s 31(4)-(11) (see PARA 1253 post) apply accordingly: s 32.

3 See ibid s 29(2)(a). This provision is substituted so as to provide: 'identifying issues which are likely to be material to the determinations and findings which are likely to be required during the trial': see s 29(2)(a) (s 29(2)(a)-(c) substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45(1), (7)). At the date at which this volume states the law this substitution had effect in so far as applying to applications under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 44 (see PARA 1284 post) (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 13 and Transitional Provision) Order 2006, SI 2006/1835, art 2(c)), but no order had been made bringing the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 into force for any remaining purposes.

4 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(2)(b). This provision is substituted so as to provide: 'if there is to be a jury, assisting their comprehension of those issues and expediting the proceedings before them': see s 29(2)(b) (as substituted: see note 3 supra).

5 See ibid s 29(2)(c). This provision is substituted so as to provide: 'determining an application to which the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 45 (not yet fully in force) (application for trial without jury under ss 43, 44 (not yet in force): see PARA 1284 post) applies: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(2)(c) (as substituted: see note 3 supra).

6 See ibid s 29(2)(d).

7 See ibid s 29(2)(e) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 310). As from a day to be appointed the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(2) (as amended) (see the text and notes 3-6 supra) is to have effect as if the purposes there mentioned included the purpose of determining an application by the prosecution for certain counts to be tried without a jury under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 17 (not yet in force); s 18(2) (not yet in force); and PARA 1285 post. The parties to a preparatory hearing at which an application under s 17 (not yet in force) is to be determined must be given an opportunity to make representations with respect to the application: s 18(4) (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

8 See ibid s 29(1B) (added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (2)). For these purposes, 'terrorism offence' means:

- 60 (1) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2000 ss 11, 12 (offences relating to proscribed organisations: see PARAS 387-388 ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6) (a) (s 29(6) added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16));
- 61 (2) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2000 ss 15-18 (offences relating to terrorist property: see PARAS 390-393 ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(b) (as so added));
- 62 (3) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2000 s 38B (as added) (failure to disclose information about acts of terrorism: see PARA 414 ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(c) (as so added));
- 63 (4) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2000 s 54 (as amended) (weapons training: see PARA 439 ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(d) (as so added));
- 64 (5) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2000 ss 56-59 (s 57 as amended) (directing terrorism, possessing things and collecting information for the purposes of terrorism and inciting terrorism outside the United Kingdom: see PARAS 441-447, 469 ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(e) (as so added));
- 65 (6) an offence in respect of which there is jurisdiction by virtue of the Terrorism Act 2000 s 62 (extra-territorial jurisdiction in respect of certain offences committed outside the United Kingdom for the purposes of terrorism etc) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(f) (as so added));
- 66 (7) an offence under the Terrorism Act 2006 Pt 1 (ss 1-19): see PARA 383 et seq ante) (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(6)(g) (as so added));
- 67 (8) conspiring or attempting to commit a terrorism offence (s 29(6)(h) (as so added));
- 68 (9) incitement to commit a terrorism offence (s 29(6)(i) (as so added)).

9 See ibid s 29(1C)(a) (s 29(1C) added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (2)). An offence carries a maximum of at least 10 years' imprisonment if: (1) it is punishable on conviction on indictment with imprisonment; and (2) the maximum term of imprisonment that may be imposed on conviction on indictment of that offence is 10 years or more or is imprisonment for life: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(7) (added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (5)).

10 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(1C)(b) (as added: see note 9 supra). For these purposes, conduct has a terrorist connection if it is or takes place in the course of an act of terrorism or is for the purposes of terrorism: s 29(8) (added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (5)). 'Terrorism' has the same meaning as in the Terrorism Act 2000 s 1 (as amended) (see PARA 383 ante): Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(9) (added by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (5)).

11 Ie a case of such seriousness and complexity as is mentioned in the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended): see PARA 1250 ante.

12 Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended).

13 Ie ibid s 29(1B), (1C) (as added): see notes 8-10 supra.

14 See ibid s 29(3)(a) (s 29(3) substituted by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (3)). See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(1B), (1C) (as added); and the text and notes 8-10 supra.

15 Ie under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended): see PARA 1250 ante.

16 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(3)(b) (as substituted: see note 14 supra).

17 Ie by ibid s 29(1B) (as added) or s 29(1C) (as added): see the text and notes 8-10 supra.

18 Ie under ibid s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended).

19 Ie under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended): see PARA 1250 ante.

20 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(3)(c) (as substituted: see note 14 supra).

21 Ie under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended): see PARA 1250 ante.

22 Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended).

23 See ibid s 29(3) (as substituted): see note 14 supra.

24 Ibid s 29(4) (amended by the Terrorism Act 2006 s 16(1), (4)). A Crown Court judge can conduct separate preparatory hearings in respect of different defendants charged in the same indictment where he considers it necessary to do so in the interests of justice: Re Kanaris [2003] UKHL 2, [2003] 1 All ER 593, [2003] 1 WLR 443. Where the judge purports to conduct a preparatory hearing under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt III (ss 28-38) (as amended; prospectively amended) but has no jurisdiction to do so, the hearing may take effect as a statutory pre-trial hearing (see PARAS 1244-1246 ante): R v Ward, R v Parsons, R v Lee [2003] EWCA Crim 814, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 20.

25 Ie the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(4)-(7): see PARA 1253 post.

26 Ibid s 32(1), (2). In such a case s 31(4)-(11) (see PARA 1253 post) applies.

1253. Judge's powers at preparatory hearing.

At the preparatory hearing<sup>1</sup> the judge may:

- 2102 (1) adjourn the hearing from time to time<sup>2</sup>;
- 2103 (2) in a serious or complex fraud case, determine a question<sup>3</sup> relating to the relevance of external law to certain charges of conspiracy, attempt and incitement<sup>4</sup>;
- 2104 (3) determine any question as to the admissibility of evidence, any other question of law relating to the case and any question relating to the severance or joinder of charges<sup>5</sup>;
- 2105 (4) order the prosecution<sup>6</sup> to supply the court and the defendant or, if there is more than one, each of them, with a statement (a 'case statement') of certain matters<sup>7</sup>;
- 2106 (5) order the prosecution to prepare its evidence and other explanatory material in such a form as appears to him to be likely to aid comprehension by a jury and to supply it in that form to the court and to the defendant or, if there is more than one, to each of them<sup>8</sup>;
- 2107 (6) order the prosecution to give the court and the defendant or, if there is more than one, each of them, notice of documents the truth of the contents of which ought in the prosecution's view to be admitted and of any other matters which in its view ought to be agreed<sup>9</sup>;
- 2108 (7) order the prosecution to make any amendments of any case statement supplied in pursuance of an order under head (4) above that appear to the court to be appropriate, having regard to objections made by the defendant, or, if there is more than one defendant, by any of them<sup>10</sup>;
- 2109 (8) where he has ordered the prosecution to supply a case statement and the prosecution has complied with the order, order the defendant or, if there is more than one, each of them:
  - 584 60. (a) to give the court and the prosecution notice of any objections that he has to the case statement<sup>11</sup>; and
  - 61. (b) to give the court and the prosecution a notice setting out the extent to which he agrees with the prosecution as to documents and other matters to which a notice under head (6) above relates and the reason<sup>12</sup> for any disagreement<sup>13</sup>;
- 585 2110 (9) continue the hearing notwithstanding that leave to appeal<sup>14</sup> from any order or ruling under head (3) above<sup>15</sup> has been granted; but the preparatory hearing may not be concluded until after the appeal has been determined or abandoned<sup>16</sup>.

An order made under the above provisions may specify the time within which any specified requirement contained in it is to be complied with<sup>17</sup>; and any order or ruling made at or for the purposes of a preparatory hearing has effect during the trial, unless it appears to the judge, on application made to him, that the interests of justice require him to vary or discharge it<sup>18</sup>.

6     In respect of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996, 'the prosecutor' is the term employed in place of 'the prosecution' under these provisions. References to 'the prosecutor' are references to any person acting as prosecutor, whether an individual or a body: s 28(4).

7     See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(1), (4)(a); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(1), (4)(a). A case statement is a statement of: (1) the principal facts of the prosecution case; (2) the witnesses who will speak to those facts; (3) any exhibits relevant to those facts; (4) any proposition of law on which the prosecution proposes to rely; (5) the consequences in relation to any of the counts in the indictment that appear to the prosecution to flow from the matters stated in pursuance of heads (1)-(4) supra: Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(4)(a); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(5). 11    See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(1), (5)(ii); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(1), (6)(b). Criminal Procedure Rules may provide that except to the extent that disclosure is required either by rules under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 81 (expert evidence: see PARA 1492 post) or by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5(7) (see PARA 1388 post), anything required to be given by an accused in pursuance of a requirement imposed under s 31 need not disclose who will give evidence: s 33(1) (s 33(1), (2) amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 379).

12    If it appears to a judge that reasons given in pursuance of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(5)(iv) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(7) (see the text and note 13 infra) are inadequate, he must so inform the person giving them, and may require him to give further or better reasons: see the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(8); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(9).

13    See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(1), (5)(iv); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(1), (7). It is of prime importance for the purposes of a preparatory hearing under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 that the prosecution case statement be in the hands of the court and of the defendant at least seven days before the preparatory hearing, to give both the court and the defendant a proper opportunity of examining it so that they may be prepared to argue such points as are raised by the Crown at the hearing with regard to s 9(4), (5) (as amended) (see the text and notes 6-12 supra); any order made under s 9(5) (as amended) (see the text and note 11 supra) must clearly identify the documents or evidence or both which the prosecution requires the defendants' agreement upon: Re Case Statements Made Under s 9 of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 (1992) 97 Cr App Rep 417, CA.

A judge making an order under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(5) (as amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(6), (7) (as amended) (see the text and notes 11, 12 supra) must warn the defendant or, if there is more than one, all of them, of the possible consequences under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 10 (as substituted) (see PARA 1258 post) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 34 (as amended) (see PARA 1258 post) of not complying with it: Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(7) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 ss 72, 80, Sch 3 paras 1, 3(1), (2), Sch 5(12)); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(8). As to disclosure by the defence see PARA 1254 post.

14 The under Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(11) (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 35(1) (as amended; prospectively amended): see PARAS 1921-1922 post. As from a day to be appointed the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(11) (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1921 post) and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 35(1) (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1922 post) have effect as if they also provided for an appeal to the Court of Appeal to lie from the determination by a judge of an application under the Domestic Violence, Victims and Crime Act 2004 s 17 (not yet in force) for certain counts to be tried without a jury: see s 18(5) (not yet in force); and PARA 1285 post. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

15 Such an appeal includes an appeal from the refusal of an application for trial without jury in certain fraud cases or where there is a danger of jury tampering or from the making of an order for such trial in such a case: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 43-45 (not yet fully in force); and PARA 1284 post.

16 See ibid s 9(1), (13) (s 9(13) amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 para 52, 54); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 35(2) (ss 35(2), 36(2) amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 paras 69, 70). The judge may continue a preparatory hearing notwithstanding that leave to appeal has been granted under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 Pt II (ss 33-44) (as amended) (see PARA 1966 post), but the preparatory hearing may not be concluded until after the appeal has been determined or abandoned: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 36(2) (as so amended).

17 Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(9); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(10). Criminal Procedure Rules may, however, make provision as to the minimum or maximum time that may be specified for compliance: see the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(9); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 33(2) (as amended: see note 11 supra).

18 See the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9(10) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 72, Sch 3 para 3); and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31(11). A preparatory hearing must be used for a specified purpose or purposes set out in the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7(1) (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29(1) (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARAS 1250-1251 ante); the judge's jurisdiction under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 9 (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 31 (as amended) (see the text and notes 1-17 supra) is subordinated to the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended); if an application relates to a matter outside the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended), as the case may be, the judge has no jurisdiction to entertain the application within the ambit of the preparatory hearing: Re Gunawardena, Harbutt and Banks [1990] 1 WLR 703, 91 Cr App Rep 55, CA (no jurisdiction at preparatory hearing to stay trial on grounds of abuse of process); R v T [2006] All ER (D) 142 (Feb); R v Hedworth [1997] 1 Cr App Rep 421, CA (no jurisdiction to deal with motion to quash indictment); R v Jennings (1993) 98 Cr App Rep 308, CA (no jurisdiction to sever indictment). TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(2) PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS/(iv) Preparatory Hearings in Serious or Complex Fraud Cases or Serious or Long Cases or Terrorism Cases/1257. Restrictions on reporting preparatory hearings.

1257. Restrictions on reporting preparatory hearings.

Except as provided by the following provisions, no written report of a preparatory hearing<sup>1</sup>, an application for leave to appeal in relation to such a hearing<sup>2</sup>, or an appeal in relation to such a hearing, may be published in the United Kingdom<sup>3</sup>, nor may any report of any such proceedings be included in a relevant programme<sup>4</sup> for reception in the United Kingdom<sup>5</sup>. The judge dealing with a preparatory hearing may order that such restrictions do not apply, or do not apply to a specified extent, to a report of the preparatory hearing, or an application to the judge for leave to appeal to the Court of Appeal<sup>6</sup> in relation to the preparatory hearing<sup>7</sup>. The Court of Appeal may order that the restrictions do not apply, or do not apply to a specified extent, to a report of an appeal to the Court of Appeal<sup>8</sup> in relation to a preparatory hearing, an application to that court for leave to appeal to it in relation to a preparatory hearing<sup>9</sup>, or an application to that court for leave to appeal to the House of Lords<sup>10</sup> in relation to a preparatory hearing<sup>11</sup>.

The House of Lords<sup>12</sup> may order that the restrictions do not apply, or do not apply to a specified extent, to a report of an appeal<sup>13</sup> to that House in relation to a preparatory hearing, or an application to that House for leave to appeal<sup>14</sup> to it in relation to a preparatory hearing<sup>15</sup>.

Where there is only one defendant and he objects to the making of an order<sup>16</sup> for the lifting of restrictions on reporting, the judge or the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords<sup>17</sup> must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of the defendant that it is in the interests of justice to do so and; if the order is made, it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objection or representations<sup>18</sup>. Where there are two or more defendants and one or more of them objects to the making of an order<sup>19</sup>, the judge or the Court of Appeal or the House of Lords<sup>20</sup> must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of each of the defendants that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and, if the order is made, it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objection or representations<sup>21</sup>.

The reporting restrictions do not apply to the publication of a report of a preparatory hearing, the publication of a report of an appeal in relation to a preparatory hearing or of an application for leave to appeal in relation to such a hearing, the inclusion in a relevant programme of a report of a preparatory hearing, or the inclusion in a relevant programme of a report of an appeal in relation to a preparatory hearing or of an application for leave to appeal in relation to such a hearing, at the conclusion of the trial of the defendant or of the last of the defendants to be tried<sup>22</sup>. Further, those restrictions do not apply to a report which contains only one or more of the following matters: (1) the identity of the court and the name of the judge; (2) the names, ages, home addresses<sup>23</sup> and occupations of the defendants and witnesses; (3) the offence or offences, or a summary of them, with which the defendant or defendants is or are charged; (4) the names of counsel and solicitors in the proceedings; (5) where the proceedings are adjourned, the date and place to which they are adjourned; (6) any arrangements as to bail; (7) whether a right to representation funded by the Legal Services Commission as part of the Criminal Defence Service was granted to the defendant or any of the defendants<sup>24</sup>.

If a report is published or included in a relevant programme in contravention of the above provisions, each of the following persons is guilty of an offence: (a) in the case of a publication of a written report as part of a newspaper or periodical, any proprietor, editor or publisher of the newspaper or periodical; (b) in the case of a publication of a written report otherwise than as part of a newspaper or periodical, the person who publishes it; (c) in the case of the inclusion of a report in a relevant programme, any body corporate which is engaged in providing the service in which the programme is included and any person having functions in relation to the programme corresponding to those of an editor of a newspaper<sup>25</sup>. A person guilty of such an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine of an amount not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale<sup>26</sup>.

1258. Provisions relating to later stages of trial.

Any party may depart from the case he disclosed in pursuance of a requirement imposed under the provisions<sup>1</sup> relating to a preparatory hearing<sup>2</sup>.

Where a party departs from the case which he disclosed in pursuance of a requirement<sup>3</sup>, or fails to comply with such a requirement, the judge or, with the leave of the judge, any other party, may make such comment as appears to him to be appropriate and the jury (or, in the case of a trial without a jury, the judge) may draw such inference as appears proper<sup>4</sup>.

Except as so provided<sup>5</sup> (in the case of a trial with a jury) no part of a statement given<sup>6</sup>, or of any other information relating to the case for the defendant or, if there is more than one, the case for any of them, which was given at the preparatory hearing, may be disclosed at a stage in the trial after the jury has been sworn without the consent of the defendant concerned<sup>7</sup>.

1259. The procedural provisions.

In any proceedings for an offence, a court may, after hearing representations from the parties, direct that the defendant be treated as being present in the court for any particular hearing before the start of the trial<sup>1</sup> if, during that hearing:

- 2119 (1) he is held in custody in a prison or other institution<sup>2</sup>; and
- 2120 (2) whether by means of a live television link or otherwise, he is able to see and hear the court and to be seen and heard by it<sup>3</sup>.

No such direction may be given unless the court has been notified by the Secretary of State that facilities are available for enabling persons held in custody in the institution in which the defendant is or is to be so held to see and hear the court and to be seen and heard by it, and the notice has not been withdrawn<sup>4</sup>.

1260. Appearance of defendant.

If an indictment has been signed and the defendant is in custody, he is placed at the bar in the dock<sup>1</sup>. If he has been on bail, bound over to appear, he is called upon to surrender, and, if he surrenders, takes his place in the dock. A defendant who is conducting his own defence may be permitted by the trial judge to leave the dock after arraignment and take a seat at a table in the court<sup>2</sup>. A defendant corporation must appear by a representative<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> In general, unless there is danger of escape or violence, the defendant ought not to be handcuffed or otherwise restrained in the dock: see 2 Hawk PC c 28 s 1. See also R v Young [1973] Crim LR 507, CA. If the prosecution has reason to think, for reasons of security, that an defendant should be handcuffed during the trial, it should, before the jury panel is brought into court, apply to the trial judge for the defendant to remain handcuffed and call evidence in support of its application, if it is contested: see R v Vratsides [1988] Crim LR 251. Such application should be heard inter partes, except in very exceptional circumstances: R v Rollinson (1996) 161 JP 107, CA. The means adopted to counter the risk should be such as to minimise the risk of prejudice: R v Mullen [2000] 6 Archbold News 2, CA. A defendant in custody who refuses to come into court should not be compelled to do so, even if he is in the course of giving evidence; the judge should take steps to punish such a defendant for contempt, and continue the trial in his absence: R v O'Boyle (1990) 92 Cr App Rep 202, CA.

1261. Procedure when defendant does not appear.

When an indictment has been signed, although the person charged has not been committed<sup>1</sup> the Crown Court may issue a summons requiring him to appear before it, or may issue a warrant for his arrest<sup>2</sup>. If a person who has been released on bail and is under a duty to surrender into the custody of the court fails to surrender to custody at the time appointed for him to do so, the court may issue a warrant for his arrest<sup>3</sup>. A person in custody on such a warrant must be brought forthwith before either the Crown Court or a magistrates' court<sup>4</sup>. If he is brought before a magistrates' court, the court must commit him in custody or release him on bail until he can be brought or appear before the Crown Court at the time and place appointed by that court<sup>5</sup>. Where the warrant is indorsed for bail, but the person in custody is unable to satisfy the conditions indorsed, the magistrates' court may vary those conditions, if satisfied that it is proper to do so<sup>6</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(3) PROCEEDINGS BEFORE PLEA/(i) Appearance/1262. Illness or insanity of defendant.

1262. Illness or insanity of defendant.

Where the defendant is ill and unable to take his place in the dock, the trial cannot proceed. Where he was committed on bail, the practice is for a medical certificate to be sent to the court, certifying that he is unable to travel and attend court. If he has been committed or sent in custody for trial at the Crown Court, or is in custody pending a re-trial ordered by the Court of Appeal, and the Secretary of State is satisfied by reports from at least two medical practitioners<sup>1</sup> that the defendant is suffering from mental illness or severe mental impairment, and that that mental disorder is of a nature or degree which makes it appropriate for him to be detained in a hospital for medical treatment and that the defendant is in urgent need of such treatment, the Secretary of State, if he is of opinion having regard to the public interest and all the circumstances that it is expedient to do so, may direct by warrant<sup>2</sup> that the defendant be removed to and detained in the hospital specified in the direction<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> At least one must be a practitioner approved for the purposes of the Mental Health Act 1983 s 12 (as amended) by the Secretary of State as having special experience in the diagnosis or treatment of mental disorder: see s 54(1) (amended by the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 s 55, Sch 4 para 12(6)); and MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 491.

<sup>2</sup> Such a direction has the same effect as the making of a hospital order: see the Mental Health Act 1983 ss 47(3), 48(3); and MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARAS 535-536. As to hospital orders see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 332 et seq; and as to the contents of the warrant see ss 47(4), 48(3); and MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARAS 535-536. A direction ceases to have effect at the expiration of 14 days beginning with the date on which it is given unless within that period the defendant has been received into the hospital specified in the direction: ss 47(2), 48(3).

<sup>3</sup> See ibid ss 47(1), 48(1) (s 47(1) amended by the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 ss 49(3), 56(2), Sch 6). The Mental Health Act 1983 s 48 (as amended) applies to: (1) persons detained in a prison or remand centre if they are not serving a sentence of imprisonment; (2) persons remanded in custody by a magistrates' court; (3) civil prisoners; and (4) persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 or under the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 s 62 (as amended): see the Mental Health Act 1983 s 48(2) (amended by the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 s 62(10)(a); and the Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004); and MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 536. As from a day to be appointed the words 'or remand centre' are repealed: see the Mental Health Act 1983 s 48(2)(a) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 ss 74, 75, Sch 7 paras 72, 73, Sch 8). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(3) PROCEEDINGS BEFORE PLEA/(ii) Arraignment/1263. Arraignment.

(ii) Arraignment

1263. Arraignment.

When a defendant appears in the dock, he is arraigned by the clerk of the court<sup>1</sup>. The arraignment consists in calling the defendant to the bar by name, reading out each count of the indictment, or the material parts (or an abstract) of it, and asking the defendant whether he is guilty or not guilty<sup>2</sup>. On arraignment, a defendant is entitled in all cases to make a plea of not guilty in addition to any demurrer<sup>3</sup> or special plea<sup>4</sup>; he may also plead not guilty to an offence specifically alleged in the indictment but guilty of another offence of which he might be found guilty on the indictment<sup>5</sup>. If he stands mute of malice or will not answer directly to the indictment<sup>6</sup>, a plea of not guilty may be entered on his behalf and he must then be treated as having so pleaded<sup>7</sup>. Otherwise the defendant must enter a plea himself; it is not sufficient for his counsel to do so on his behalf, or to indicate that the defendant wishes to plead guilty<sup>8</sup>. Where the judge's ruling on agreed facts is sought, argument should be heard and the ruling given after arraignment<sup>9</sup>.

1 Where a defendant who has not previously surrendered to custody is arraigned he thereby surrenders to the custody of the court and from that moment the defendant's further detention lies solely within the discretion and power of the trial judge. Unless the judge grants bail he remains in custody pending and during his trial: R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Guney [1996] AC 616, [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 352, HL. For the special provisions relating to arraignment where a preparatory hearing is held under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended; prospectively amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29 (as amended; prospectively amended) see PARA 1256 ante.

2 See R v Central Criminal Court, ex p Guney [1996] AC 616 at 622, [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 352 at 357, HL, per Lord Steyn. Where there are several counts in an indictment, each should be put to the defendant separately, and he should be asked to plead to each as it is read to him: R v Boyle [1954] 2 QB 292, 38 Cr App Rep 111, CCA. As to re-arraignment after amendment of an indictment see PARA 1227 ante.

3 As to demurrer see PARA 1267 post.

4 As to special pleas see PARA 1269 et seq post.

5 Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(1)(a), (b). As to alternative verdicts see PARA 1335 et seq post.

8 R v Heyes [1951] 1 KB 29, 34 Cr App Rep 161, CCA; and see further PARA 1280 post. Except in a few special cases, such as that of a refusal to plead, if the defendant has not himself pleaded to the indictment, everything that follows must be regarded as a mistrial: R v Ellis (1973) 57 Cr App Rep 571, CA; but see R v Williams [1978] QB 373, 64 Cr App Rep 106, CA (failure to arraign the defendant does not render the trial a nullity where the proceedings have followed the course of a duly constituted trial by jury for an defendant pleading not guilty). As to a plea by a corporation see PARA 1281 post.

9 See PARA 1278 post.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(3) PROCEEDINGS BEFORE PLEA/(ii) Arraignment/1264. Defendant standing mute.

1264. Defendant standing mute.

If the defendant on being arraigned stands mute and does not answer, the issue arises as to whether he is mute of malice (that is deliberately silent) or mute by visitation of God (that is silent for reasons beyond his control). This issue cannot be determined by the judge; the judge must direct a jury to be empanelled and sworn<sup>1</sup> to try the issue whether the defendant is mute of malice or by the visitation of God<sup>2</sup>. If the defendant has counsel, his counsel may address the jury and call witnesses to the effect that he is mute by the visitation of God<sup>3</sup>. If the defendant stands mute of malice or will not answer directly to the indictment, the court may order a plea of not guilty to be entered on his behalf and he must then be treated as having pleaded not guilty<sup>4</sup>. If the jury finds that the defendant is mute by the visitation of God, the further issue then falls to be tried by the court without a jury, namely whether he is fit to be tried<sup>5</sup>. If the defendant can communicate by signs, and there is anyone who can interpret the signs to the court, or if the defendant can read and write, the jury should be directed to find that he is fit to be tried, and he may then be arraigned and may answer by signs or by means of writing<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> R v Schleter (1866) 10 Cox CC 409. See R v Holman (1994) 32 BMLR 52, CA (where a defendant was mute but had quite clearly communicated a guilty plea to the court, it was inappropriate to empanel a jury to determine whether she was mute of malice). The prosecution has the burden of proving muteness of malice beyond reasonable doubt: R v Sharp [1960] 1 QB 357n, 41 Cr App Rep 197.

<sup>3</sup> R v Roberts (1816) Car CL 57; and see R v Sharp [1960] 1 QB 357n, 41 Cr App Rep 197. The defendant has no right of challenge in respect of the jurors empanelled to determine whether he is mute of malice or by visitation of God: R v Paling (1978) 67 Cr App Rep 299, CA. As to the burden of proof in such cases see R v Podola [1960] 1 QB 325, 43 Cr App Rep 220, CCA (overruling R v Sharp supra on this point); and PARA 1265 post.

<sup>5</sup> Cf R v Steel (1787) 1 Leach 451, where the proper procedure does not seem to have been followed; and R v Pritchard (1836) 7 C & P 303; R v Berry (1876) 1 QBD 447, CCR. As to the trial of this issue see PARA 1265 post.

<sup>6</sup> R v Jones (1773) 1 Leach 102; R v Thompson (1827) 2 Lew CC 137. However, the practice has arisen of arraigning a deaf and dumb defendant through an interpreter, in cases where he has given instructions in such a manner to his legal representatives, instead of leaving the issue to be tried by a jury whether he is mute of malice or by the visitation of God. As to the right of the defence to have the general issue tried before the issue of fitness to plead see R v Roberts [1954] 2 QB 329, 37 Cr App Rep 86; and PARA 1265 post. See also R v Sharp [1960] 1 QB 357n, 41 Cr App Rep 197. As with any other aspect of fitness to be tried, the court may postpone consideration of the question until any time up to the opening of the case for the defence: see the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4(2) (as substituted); and PARA 1265 post.

1265. Unfitness to stand trial.

The issue of fitness to stand trial may be raised by the defence, the prosecution or the judge<sup>1</sup>. It is for the court without a jury<sup>2</sup> to decide on the evidence whether the defendant is capable of: (1) understanding the charge; (2) understanding the difference between a plea of guilty and not guilty and the course of the proceedings so as to make a proper defence; (3) challenging a juror to whom he might wish to object; (4) understanding the details of the evidence; and (5) giving evidence<sup>3</sup>.

Where the defendant has raised the issue of unfitness to be tried he has the persuasive burden of proving this, although he only has to satisfy the jury of his unfitness on the balance of probabilities<sup>4</sup>. However, if the issue is raised by the prosecution it must be established by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt<sup>5</sup>.

The court has a discretion to postpone the question of fitness to be tried until any time up to the opening of the case for the defence, where it considers it expedient to do so and in the interests of the defendant<sup>6</sup>. Subject to this, however, the question of fitness to be tried must generally be determined as soon as it arises<sup>7</sup>.

The court may not make a determination on the question of fitness to be tried except on the written or oral evidence of two or more registered medical practitioners, at least one of whom is duly approved by the Secretary of State<sup>8</sup>.

Where it is determined by a court that the defendant is unfit to be tried (a finding of disability), the trial must not proceed or further proceed but it must be determined by a jury:

- 2121 (a) on the evidence (if any) already given in the trial<sup>9</sup>; and
- 2122 (b) on such evidence as may be adduced or further adduced by the prosecution, or adduced by a person appointed by the court to put the case for the defence<sup>10</sup>, whether it is satisfied, as respects the count or each of the counts against the defendant, that he did the act or made the omission charged against him as the offence<sup>11</sup>. This means that the jury needs only be satisfied that the defendant committed the actus reus of the offence, and not whether he did so with the mens rea for it; it does not have to consider that issue<sup>12</sup>.

Defences which arise only on proof of actus reus and mens rea, such as diminished responsibility and provocation on murder charges, are not available when the jury considers whether the defendant did the act or made the omission charged<sup>13</sup>.

The normal criminal standard of proof (beyond reasonable doubt) applies to the question of whether the defendant did the act or made the omission charged<sup>14</sup>. If as respects that count or any of those counts the jury is satisfied as mentioned above, it must make a finding that the defendant did the act or made the omission charged against him<sup>15</sup>. If as respects that count or any of those counts the jury is not satisfied, it must return a verdict of acquittal as if on the count in question the trial had proceeded to a conclusion<sup>16</sup>.

Where the question of disability was determined after arraignment of the defendant, the determination of whether the defendant did the act or made the omission charged is to be made by the jury by whom he was being tried<sup>17</sup>.

Where there have been findings that the defendant is under a disability (that is, unfit to be tried) and that he did the act or made the omission charged against him, the judge must make in respect of the defendant: (i) a hospital order (with or without a restriction order)<sup>18</sup>; (ii) a supervision order<sup>19</sup>; or (iii) an order for his absolute discharge<sup>20</sup>.

Where the offence to which the findings relate is an offence the sentence for which is fixed by law<sup>21</sup>, and the court has power to make a hospital order, the court must make a hospital order with a restriction order (whether or not it would otherwise have power to make a restriction order)<sup>22</sup>.

An attack of hysterical amnesia rendering it impossible for the defendant to remember what happened at the time of the events in respect of which he is charged has been held not to make him unfit to stand trial: R v Podola [1960] 1 QB 325, [1959] 3 All ER 418, CCA. The mere fact that the defendant is incapable of acting in his best interests is insufficient to make him unfit to stand trial: R v Robertson [1968] 3 All ER 557, [1968] 1 WLR 1767, CA.

4 R v Podola [1960] 1 QB 325, [1959] 3 All ER 418, CCA.

6 Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4(2) (as substituted: see note 2 supra). The Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4 (as substituted and amended) applies to any disability such as, apart from the Act, would constitute a bar to the accused being tried: s 4(1) (as so substituted); R v Burles [1970] 2 QB 191 at 196, [1970] 1 All ER 642 at 645, CA. The prosecution case may be so strong, and the defendant's condition so disabling, that postponement of the trial would be wholly inexpedient; conversely, the prosecution case may be so thin that, whatever the degree of disability, it clearly would be expedient to postpone: R v Burles [1970] 2 QB 191, [1970] 1 All ER 642, CA. If there is a reasonable chance that the prosecution case will be successfully challenged, postponement will usually be in the defendant's interests: R v Webb [1969] 2 QB 278, [1969] 2 All ER 626, CA.

7 Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4(4) (as substituted: see note 2 supra). 12 R v Antoine [2001] AC 340, [2000] 2 All ER 208, HL. If 'objective' evidence raises the issue of mistake, accident, self-defence or involuntariness, the jury should not find that the defendant has done the act or made the omission charged unless it is satisfied that the prosecution has disproved that 'defence': R v Antoine supra. As recognised in R (on the application of Young) v Central Criminal Court [2002] EWHC 548 (Admin), [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 178, the actus reus itself may contain an element in which the defendant's intention is an essential ingredient. In such a case, the jury will have to consider the defendant's intentions in the relevant respect in order to decide whether or not he committed the actus reus. 15 Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4A(3) (as added: see note 9 supra). Such a finding is not a conviction: R v Antoine [2001] 1 AC 340 at 367, [2000] 2 All ER 208 at 222, HL, per Lord Hutton.

16 Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4A(4) (as added: see note 9 supra).

17 Ibid s 4A(5) (as added (see note 9 supra); and amended by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 22(1), (5)).

18 'Hospital order' and 'restriction order' have the meanings given by the Mental Health Act 1983 ss 37, 41 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 332, 333, 337): Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 5(1), (4) (s 5 substituted by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 24(1)). Before making a hospital order, the court may make an interim hospital order: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 334.

19 'Supervision order' has the meaning given by the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 Sch 1A Pt 1 (as added) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 368): s 5(4) (as substituted: see note 18 supra).

20 Ibid s 5(1), (2) (as substituted: see note 18 supra).

21 As to sentences fixed by law see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 15.

22 Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 5(1), (3) (as substituted: see note 18 supra). If before the defendant has been dealt with under s 5 (as substituted) it appears that a defendant who has been found unfit to be tried has recovered from his disability, the court is not required to follow the procedures under s 4A (as added) (see the text and notes 9-17 supra) or s 5 (as substituted), or both, provided that it provides a further hearing under s 4 (as substituted and amended) (see the text and notes 1-8 supra) at which it holds the defendant fit to stand trial: R (on the application of Hasani) v Blackfriars Crown Court [2005] EWHC 3016 (QB), [2006] 1 All ER 817, DC.

Because it cannot result in a conviction and because any order made following a finding adverse to the defendant is not punitive but is made only for the purpose of protecting the public, the above procedure for determining whether the defendant did the act or made the omission charged does not involve the determination of a criminal charge. Therefore, the procedure is not incompatible with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6 (right to a fair trial): R v H [2003] UKHL 1, [2003] 1 All ER 497, [2003] 1 WLR 411. See also R v Grant, Grant v DPP [2001] EWCA Crim 2611, [2002] QB 1030, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 528. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

These provisions only apply to trials on indictment: R v Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex p Anifowosi (1985) 149 JP 748, DC. There is no procedure expressly devised for the question of fitness to plead in relation to magistrates' courts, including youth courts: see R (on the application of P (A Juvenile)) v Barking Youth Court [2002] EWHC 734 (Admin), [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 294. However, where the defendant is suffering from mental illness or from severe mental impairment and appears unfit to plead, the magistrates may make use of their power under the Mental Health Act 1983 s 37(3) to make a hospital order without proceeding to a trial or conviction, if they are satisfied that he 'did the act or made the omission charged': see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 332.

1265 Unfitness to stand trial

NOTE 7--It is not an abuse of process for a person to stand trial where a court of higher authority has determined he is unfit to stand trial, since unfitness must be reviewed on an ongoing basis: DPP v P [2007] EWHC 946 (Admin), [2008] 1 WLR 1005.

NOTE 8--The requirement applies only to a determination that a defendant is unfit to plead, not where a late application is made at the trial itself: R v Ghulam [2009] EWCA Crim 2285, [2010] 1 WLR 891.

(iii) Motion to Quash Indictment; Demurrer

1266. Motion to quash indictment.

A motion to quash an indictment because of a defect which cannot be amended<sup>1</sup> may be made at any time before verdict, but the proper time to make the motion is before the plea is entered<sup>2</sup>. When the indictment is for treason, the court will not entertain a motion to quash an indictment before the plea is entered, but the motion may be made at the close of the case for the prosecution<sup>3</sup>; or the court may leave the defendant to his remedy by demurrer<sup>4</sup> or motion in arrest of judgment<sup>5</sup>. There is no power to quash an indictment merely because it is expected that the evidence will not support the charge<sup>6</sup>.

After verdict an objection to the indictment may be taken by motion in arrest of judgment, if the defect is one arising on the face of the record itself<sup>7</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(3) PROCEEDINGS BEFORE PLEA/ (iii) Motion to Quash Indictment; Demurrer/1267. Demurrer.

1267. Demurrer.

A defendant arraigned on indictment may object to an indictment by demurrer, that is, by alleging in writing that, admitting the matters of fact put against him to be true, the indictment is not sufficient in law<sup>1</sup>; a plea of not guilty may be combined with a demurrer<sup>2</sup>. In practice demurrers have for many years been regarded as obsolete<sup>3</sup>.

1 A demurrer is an objection to the form or substance of the indictment: R v Inner London Quarter Sessions, ex p Metropolitan Police Comr [1970] 2 QB 80, 54 Cr App Rep 49, DC. If judgment has been given for the defendant on demurrer, the indictment cannot afterwards be queried at the instance of the prosecutor: R v Smith (1838) 2 Mood & R 109.

2 Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(1)(a).

3 The wide powers to amend or quash indictments (see PARAS 1227, 1266 ante) and the powers to move in arrest of judgment (see PARA 1349 post) and to appeal on points of law arising during the trial are probably responsible for this situation. In R v Inner London Quarter Sessions, ex p Metropolitan Police Comr [1970] 2 QB 80 at 85, 54 Cr App Rep 49 at 55, DC, Lord Parker CJ expressed the hope that demurrer in criminal cases would be allowed to die naturally. There have, however, recently been instances of resort to demurrer: see Archbold Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice (2006 Edn) PARA 4-113.

Where a prosecutor or a defendant intends to apply for an order that all or part of a trial<sup>1</sup> be held in camera<sup>2</sup> for reasons of national security or for the protection of the identity of a witness or any other person, he must serve notice<sup>3</sup> in writing to that effect, not less than seven days before the date on which the trial is expected<sup>4</sup> to begin, on the Crown Court officer and the prosecutor or the defendant, as the case may be<sup>5</sup>. On receiving such notice, the court officer must forthwith cause a copy of it to be displayed<sup>6</sup> in a prominent place within the precincts of the court<sup>7</sup>.

Unless the court orders otherwise, the application must be made in camera, after the defendant has been arraigned<sup>8</sup> but before the jury has been sworn<sup>9</sup>; and, if such an order is made, the trial<sup>10</sup> must be adjourned until:

- 2123 (1) 24 hours after the making of the order, where no application for leave to appeal<sup>11</sup> from the order is made<sup>12</sup>; or

(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT

(i) Special Pleas

1269. What a defendant may plead.

An defendant is entitled to plead the following special pleas: (1) a plea to the jurisdiction<sup>1</sup>; (2) a plea of pardon<sup>2</sup>; (3) a plea of autrefois convict<sup>3</sup>; or (4) a plea of autrefois acquit<sup>3</sup>. In addition to any special plea he is entitled to make a plea of not guilty<sup>4</sup>. On an indictment for criminal libel a defendant may plead the special plea that the matter charged as libellous is true and that its publication was for the public benefit<sup>5</sup>.

The issue as to whether a special plea, except a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, is established falls to be determined by a jury. If the special plea fails, and the defendant then pleads not guilty, the same jury may try the general issue<sup>6</sup>. The taking of pleas, the trial by jury and the pronouncement of sentence on any one indictment may respectively be by or before different judges<sup>7</sup>.

Where, however, a defendant pleads autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, it is for the judge, without the presence of a jury, to decide the issue<sup>8</sup>.

1269 What a defendant may plead

NOTE 7--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1270. Plea to the jurisdiction.

1270. Plea to the jurisdiction.

A plea to the jurisdiction raises an objection to the jurisdiction of the court<sup>1</sup>. It is more usual for the defendant to raise the question of want of jurisdiction under a motion to quash the indictment<sup>2</sup> or on a plea to the general issue<sup>3</sup>. It is the duty of counsel, whether prosecuting or defending, to bring to the attention of the court on arraignment, or, if not known then, as soon as known, any query there may be as to the jurisdiction.

1 The plea should be in writing: see R v Kinloch (1746) Fost 16. For the form of plea see Archbold Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice (2006 Edn) PARA 4-112.

2 See PARA 1266 ante.

3 See R v Jameson [1896] 2 QB 425. As to pleas to the general issue see PARA 1278 et seq post.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1271. Pardon.

1271. Pardon.

A pardon other than a pardon under statute must be specially pleaded at the first opportunity the defendant has of doing so. If he has obtained such a pardon before arraignment and, instead of pleading it, pleads only the general issue, he is deemed to have waived the benefit of the pardon. If a pardon is granted after plea pleaded, advantage of it may be taken at any time, after verdict in arrest of judgment, and after judgment in arrest of execution<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Hawk PC c 37 ss 58, 59, 67; Fost 43; Coke 3 Inst 234. For the form of plea see Archbold Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice (2006 Edn) PARA 4-162; 3 Co Inst 234; Trem PC 311; 2 Hale PC 391. As to pardon see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 823 et seq.

A pardon normally only relates to offences which have already been committed and the power to pardon cannot be used to dispense with criminal responsibility for offences which have not yet been committed. Accordingly, a pardon which purports to take effect at some uncertain time in the future and which purports to pardon any offences committed in the meantime is invalid. On the other hand, if a pardon is granted subject to 'lawful conditions' the protection provided by the pardon is not conferred until the condition is complied with. Nevertheless, the grant of such a pardon is not to be treated as deferred pending compliance with the condition, since the validity of the pardon is to be judged at the time of the grant. In determining whether the grant of a pardon subject to a condition to be performed in the future, such as the laying down of arms by a specified date, is invalid because it purports to apply to offences committed in the meantime, a purposive construction is to be adopted with the aim of upholding the validity of the pardon if possible: A-G of Trinidad and Tobago v Phillips [1995] 1 AC 396, [1995] 1 All ER 93, PC.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1272. Plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit.

1272. Plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit.

Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law, the offender is, unless the contrary intention appears, liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those Acts or at common law, but is not liable to be punished more than once for the same offence<sup>1</sup>. The pleas of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit aver respectively that the defendant has been previously convicted<sup>2</sup> or acquitted on a charge for the same offence as that in respect of which he is arraigned. If shown to be well-founded, such a plea operates, subject to two statutory exceptions<sup>3</sup>, as a bar to the indictment, since a person cannot be tried for an offence of which he has been previously convicted or acquitted. The pleas of autrefois convict and autrefois acquit may be pleaded orally, but must afterwards be reduced to writing<sup>4</sup>.

Where the defendant makes such a plea, the prosecution replies or demurs. If the prosecution replies<sup>5</sup>, it is for the judge, without the presence of a jury, to decide the issue<sup>6</sup>.

1 Interpretation Act 1978 s 18; and see Wemyss v Hopkins (1875) LR 10 QB 378; Williams v Hallam (1943) 112 LJB 353, 59 TLR 287, DC; R v Thomson Holidays Ltd [1974] QB 592, 58 Cr App Rep 429, CA. Where, however, the second charge includes new facts constituting a different offence, it may validly be brought: R v Thomas [1950] 1 KB 26, 33 Cr App Rep 200, CA. The Interpretation Act 1978 s 18 'adds nothing to and detracts nothing from the common law': R v Thomas supra at 31 and 204 per Humphreys J.

2 A plea of autrefois convict can only be sustained where the offence with which the defendant stands charged has already been the subject of a complete adjudication against him by a court of competent jurisdiction comprising both the decision establishing his guilt (whether by a decision of the court or of the jury or a guilty plea) and the final disposal of the case by the court passing sentence or some other order such as an absolute discharge; the plea of autrefois convict is not available where guilt has been established but no sentence has been passed: Richards v R [1993] AC 217, 96 Cr App Rep 268, PC.

3 As to tainted acquittal see PARA 1276 post; and as to re-trial for serious offences see PARA 1937 post.

4 For an instance of a plea of autrefois acquit see R v Sheen (1827) 2 C & P 634. For the forms of pleas of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit see Archbold Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice (2006 Edn) PARAS 4-154, 4-155. See R v (on the application of A) v South Staffordshire Youth Court [2006] All ER (D) 38 (May). Where necessary, the court will assign counsel to the defendant to draw the plea in proper form: R v Chamberlain (1833) 6 C & P 93. As to the court's discretion, apart from principles of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit, to stay a subsequent indictment see Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254 at 1340, 1358, 1364, 48 Cr App Rep 183, HL; and see also R v Williams, R v Wilson [1965] NI 52, CCA; R v Beedie [1998] QB 356, [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 167, CA.

The rules governing autrefois convict or autrefois acquit are open to a civil contemnor who has previously been punished or in jeopardy for the same civil contempt (Jelson (Estates) Ltd v Harvey [1984] 1 All ER 12, [1984] 1 WLR 1401, CA; and see also El Capistrano SA v ATO Marketing Ltd [1989] 2 All ER 572, [1989] 1 WLR 471, CA), but a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit which is based on civil contempt proceedings cannot constitute a bar to subsequent criminal proceedings (R v Green (Bryan) [1993] Crim LR 46, CA). The principle does not operate where the decision to acquit was a nullity: see Re Harrington [1984] AC 473, 79 Cr App Rep 305, HL. Where two informations are laid in respect of the same offence, there is no double jeopardy where the second is laid to remedy a defect in the first: Broadbent v High (1984) 149 JP 115.

5 In R v Sheen (1827) 2 C & P 634 at 638, counsel for the prosecution replied orally. For a written form of reply see Archbold Criminal Pleading, Evidence and Practice (2006 Edn) PARAS 4-154, 4-155; R v Sheen supra.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1273. Proof of plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit.

1273. Proof of plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit.

The burden of proving the plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit is upon the defendant. He must establish that judgment of conviction or acquittal has been legally given<sup>1</sup>. If, by reason of any defect in the indictment or process, he was not legally liable on the first proceedings to suffer judgment for the offence then charged, he cannot set up such proceedings as a bar to a subsequent indictment<sup>2</sup>. A judgment of conviction which has been reversed as erroneous in law is no bar to a subsequent indictment<sup>3</sup>; nor is an acquittal before a court which had no jurisdiction to try the offence charged<sup>4</sup>. If a judgment of conviction is quashed on the facts, this will support a plea of autrefois acquit<sup>5</sup>. When two summonses are founded on the same facts, the dismissal of the lesser charge in view of a conviction on the graver cannot be pleaded in bar on an appeal by way of rehearing<sup>6</sup>. A plea of autrefois acquit does not lie where there has been no determination on the merits<sup>7</sup>. The fact that the jury was discharged without giving a verdict cannot be a bar to a subsequent indictment<sup>8</sup>. To sustain a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit the defendant has to show that on a former occasion there has been a verdict delivered by the jury to the court<sup>9</sup>. A previous acquittal before a court of competent jurisdiction in a foreign country is a bar to a subsequent indictment in England and Wales<sup>10</sup>.

See also DPP v Porthouse (1989) 89 Cr App Rep 21, DC (magistrates' court). A judgment on demurrer is not therefore a bar to a subsequent indictment: R v Richmond (1843) 1 Car & Kir 240.

It has been held in an Irish case that, where a conviction by justices was quashed by certiorari on the ground that it was bad on its face for want of jurisdiction, this did not constitute an acquittal entitling the defendant to plead autrefois acquit in subsequent proceedings; but it would seem to be otherwise if such a conviction were to be quashed on the merits eg where it was founded on insufficient evidence: Conlin v Patterson [1915] 2 IR 169.

8 R v Charlesworth (1861) 1 B & S 460, explained in R v Robinson [1975] QB 508, 60 Cr App Rep 108, CA. A dismissal by a magistrate on no evidence being offered on the trial of an information summarily (Metropolitan Police Comr v Meller (1963) 107 Sol Jo 831, [1963] Crim LR 856, DC) or the dismissal of a charge 'without prejudice' (Great Southern and Western Rly Co v Gooding [1908] 2 IR 429) operates as a bar to a subsequent indictment.

10 R v Roche (1775) 1 Leach 134; R v Hutchinson (1677) 3 Keb 785; and see Beak v Thyrwhit (1688) 3 Mod Rep 194; R v Aughet (1918) 13 Cr App Rep 101, 118 LT 658, CCA (foreign court-martial). See also the Visiting Forces Act 1952 s 4; and PARA 1064 ante. The admissibility of evidence in such a case is governed by the Evidence Act 1851 s 7: see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 899.

Where, however, a person has been convicted abroad in his absence of an offence for which extradition is not available, he cannot plead autrefois convict to substantially similar charges in England, since he was not in reach of the foreign court that tried him and there is thus no double jeopardy: R v Thomas [1985] QB 604, 79 Cr App Rep 200, CA.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1274. Plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit; evidence.

1274. Plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit; evidence.

The defendant may establish a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit by producing a certificate of conviction, or as the case may be, of acquittal<sup>1</sup>, and showing by such certificate, or by other evidence, if necessary, that he has been convicted<sup>2</sup> or acquitted of the same offence as that on which he is presently arraigned<sup>3</sup>, or by showing that he might at the former trial have been convicted of the offence on which he is now arraigned<sup>4</sup>.

The question for the judge, in deciding the issue, is whether the defendant has previously been in jeopardy in respect of the charge upon which he is now arraigned<sup>5</sup>. A necessary incident of that question is that the offence charged in the second indictment had been committed at the time of the first charge<sup>6</sup>. A plea of autrefois acquit is not established unless it is shown that the verdict of acquittal of the previous charge necessarily involves an acquittal of the subsequent charge<sup>7</sup>.

1 See the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 73 (as amended); and PARA 1347 post.

2 It is sufficient to establish a plea of autrefois convict to show that the defendant has been convicted, even though he has not been sentenced (R v Sheridan [1937] 1 KB 223, 26 Cr App Rep 1, CCA); or that he has pleaded guilty (R v Grant [1936] 2 All ER 1156, 26 Cr App Rep 8, CCA). These cases were distinguished in R v Briggs [1938] 1 All ER 529, CCA (where the defendant had not been asked whether he elected summary trial). A conviction is effective although it has not been recorded in the court register: R v Manchester Justices, ex p Lever [1937] 2 KB 96, [1937] 3 All ER 4. That case and R v Sheridan supra were applied in R v Campbell, ex p Hoy [1953] 1 QB 585, [1953] 1 All ER 684, DC. Such cases as R v Sheridan supra and R v Grant supra are now unlikely to arise in view of the magistrates' powers to commit persons to the Crown Court for sentence: see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 17. See also R v Grant [1951] 1 KB 500, 34 Cr App Rep 230, CCA.

3 R v Kendrick and Smith (1931) 23 Cr App Rep 1, 144 LT 748, CCA. Cf R v Thomson Holidays Ltd [1974] QB 592, 58 Cr App Rep 429, CA. The defendant is not restricted to a comparison between the later indictment and some previous indictment, or to the records of the court, but may prove by evidence all such questions as to the identity of persons, dates and facts as are necessary to enable him to show that he is being charged with an offence which is the same as one in respect of which he could have been convicted on an earlier effective trial. It is not sufficient that the facts under examination or the witnesses being called in the later proceedings are the same as those in some earlier proceedings: Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254 at 1280, 48 Cr App Rep 183, HL.

In R v Lester (1938) 27 Cr App Rep 8, CCA, on an indictment for larceny and receiving, the jury returned a verdict of guilty of receiving, but the trial judge refused to accept it as he had not directed the jury on the law of receiving, and ordered a new trial; it was held on appeal that the plea of autrefois convict succeeded.

The fact that an outstanding offence is taken into consideration at the request of the defendant (see PARA 1348 post) does not constitute a conviction in respect of that offence upon which a plea of autrefois convict can be sustained: R v Nicholson [1947] 2 All ER 535, 32 Cr App Rep 98, CCA (disapproving R v McMinn (1945) 30 Cr App Rep 138, CCA). It is, however, the practice not to proceed on any case already taken into consideration because of the danger of the defendant being twice punished for the same offence: see R v Nicholson supra; R v Williams and Wilson [1965] NI 52, CCA. It must of course be shown that the conviction was before a court of competent jurisdiction: Lewis v Mogan [1943] 1 KB 376, [1943] 2 All ER 272, DC. Cf R v Hogan [1960] 2 QB 513, 44 Cr App Rep 255, CCA.

4 R v Barron [1914] 2 KB 570, 10 Cr App Rep 81, CCA; R v Bird (1851) 2 Den 94, CCR; R v Thomas [1950] 1 KB 26, 33 Cr App Rep 200, CCA; Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254 at 1280, 48 Cr App Rep 183, HL. It has been held that the following could not found a plea of autrefois acquit: no evidence offered by the prosecution in respect of a charge of an either way offence where no plea has been made nor any decision as to mode of trial (R v Bradford Magistrates' Court, ex p Daniel (1997) Independent, 16 June, DC); withdrawal of a summons prior to the defendant pleading to it (R v Grays Justices, ex p Low [1990] 1 QB 54, 88 Cr App Rep 291, DC; Islington London Borough Council v Michaelides [2001] Crim LR 843, DC); dismissal of an information under the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 15 (non-appearance of the prosecutor: see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARAS 703, 712) (R v Bennett and Bond, ex p Bennett (1908) 72 JP 362; Holmes v Campbell (1998) 162 JP 655, DC; cf R (on the application of O) v Stratford Youth Court [2004] EWHC 1553 (Admin), 168 JP 469, DC (prosecution offered no evidence, after complainant absent when trial called on; justices dismissed the charge; held any further hearing into matter would inevitably give rise to bar of autrefois acquit)); dismissal of an information (on which the prosecution have offered no evidence) which was so faulty in form and content that the defendant could never have been in jeopardy under it (DPP v Porthouse (1988) 89 Cr App Rep 21, [1989] RTR 177, DC). By statute, the following do not found a plea of autrefois acquit: (1) service of a notice of discontinuance under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 s 23 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1159 ante); (2) where the statutory provisions relating to tainted acquittals and to re-trial for serious offences apply (see PARA 1937 et seq post). As to the circumstances in which a defendant who has been indicted for a particular offence may be convicted of another offence see the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6 (as amended); and PARAS 1335-1338 post.

5 Haynes v Davis [1915] 1 KB 332, DC. In Williams v DPP [1991] 3 All ER 651, 93 Cr App Rep 319, DC, it was held that a defendant had not been 'in peril' because (1) the first summons had been dismissed before he pleaded to it; and (2) a defect in the first summons meant that he could never have validly been convicted on it. Cf Halsted v Clark [1944] KB 250, [1944] 1 All ER 270, DC, where it was held that the defendant had been 'in peril' where the first summons was dismissed at the close of the prosecution case on the ground that, even if it was amended, the evidence was insufficient to support the charge. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1275. Grounds on which plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit can succeed.

1275. Grounds on which plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit can succeed.

The defendant can succeed on a plea of autrefois convict or autrefois acquit only if the charge to which he pleads is one in respect of which he could have been legally convicted on the prior occasion<sup>1</sup> or is one in respect of which, by statute, previous proceedings for the same cause are a bar to subsequent proceedings. Thus a conviction before justices for an assault is a bar to a subsequent indictment in respect of the same incident for wounding with intent<sup>2</sup>; but, if the person assaulted dies after the conviction, the conviction is no bar to an indictment for murder or manslaughter<sup>3</sup>. A conviction for a common assault is no bar to an indictment for rape<sup>4</sup>. An acquittal on an indictment for murder is a bar to an indictment for manslaughter in respect of the same incident; and an acquittal or conviction for manslaughter is a bar to an indictment for murder in respect of the same incident<sup>5</sup>.

An acquittal on an indictment for murder (and, it seems, also for manslaughter) is a bar to a subsequent indictment for an assault, if there is only one act alleged in the first indictment; but, if there are several distinct and independent assaults, and some or any of them did not in any way conduce to the death of the person killed, then an acquittal on an indictment for murder is no bar to an indictment for the distinct and independent assaults which did not conduce to the death<sup>6</sup>. Where a conviction for murder is quashed on appeal, a plea of autrefois acquit is not available in subsequent proceedings for robbery<sup>7</sup>.

An acquittal on a charge of conspiracy is not a bar to a subsequent charge of aiding and abetting<sup>8</sup>. An acquittal of rape is no bar to a charge of common assault<sup>9</sup> or to a charge of sexual activity with a child<sup>10</sup>.

1 The principle that a person who has been convicted of an offence cannot subsequently be charged with the same offence in an aggravated form in relation to the same facts is confined to courts of competent jurisdiction: R v Hogan [1960] 2 QB 513, 44 Cr App Rep 255, CCA. See Lloyd v Roberts (1965) 109 Sol Jo 850, DC (plea of autrefois acquit did not lie where the defendant had not been in peril of lawful conviction).

2 R v Walker (1843) 2 Mood & R 446; R v Elrington (1861) 1 B & S 688 (justices' certificate of dismissal of charge of unlawful wounding barred subsequent indictment alleging aggravated assault). TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1276. Acquittals tainted by intimidation etc.

1276. Acquittals tainted by intimidation etc.

The following provisions apply where a person has been acquitted of an offence, and a person has been convicted of an administration of justice offence<sup>1</sup> involving interference with or intimidation of a juror or a witness (or potential witness) in any proceedings which led to the acquittal<sup>2</sup>. Where it appears to the court before which the person was convicted of the administration of justice offence that: (1) there is a real possibility that, but for the interference or intimidation, the acquitted person would not have been acquitted; and (2) it is not a case where, because of lapse of time or for any other reason, it would be contrary to the interests of justice to take proceedings against the acquitted person for the offence of which he was acquitted, the court must certify that it so appears<sup>3</sup>. Where a court so certifies, an application may be made to the High Court for an order quashing the acquittal, and the High Court must make the order if (but must not do so unless) the four conditions specified below are satisfied<sup>4</sup>. Where such an order is made, proceedings may be taken against the acquitted person for the offence of which he was acquitted<sup>5</sup>.

The four conditions for making an order are that: (a) it appears to the High Court likely that, but for the interference or intimidation, the acquitted person would not have been acquitted; (b) it does not appear to the court that, because of lapse of time or for any other reason, it would be contrary to the interests of justice to take proceedings against the acquitted person for the offence of which he was acquitted; (c) it appears to the court that the acquitted person has been given a reasonable opportunity to make written representations to the court; (d) it appears to the court that the conviction for the administration of justice offence will stand<sup>6</sup>. In applying those conditions, the court must take into account all the information before it, but must ignore the possibility of new factors coming to light<sup>7</sup> and, accordingly, the fourth condition has the effect that the court must not make an order if (for instance) it appears to it that any time allowed for giving notice of appeal has not expired or that an appeal is pending<sup>8</sup>.

Where: (i) an order is made<sup>9</sup> quashing an acquittal; (ii) it is proposed to take proceedings<sup>10</sup> against the acquitted person for the offence of which he was acquitted; and (iii) the effect of an enactment would otherwise be that the proceedings must be commenced before a specified period calculated by reference to the commission of the offence, in relation to the proceedings the enactment has effect as if the period were instead one calculated by reference to the time the order quashing the acquittal is made<sup>11</sup>.

The Criminal Procedure Rules make provision in connection with the certification of tainted acquittals<sup>12</sup>.

1 For these purposes, the following offences are administration of justice offences: (1) the common law offence of perverting the course of justice (see PARA 731 ante), (2) the offence under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 51(1) (as amended) (intimidation etc of witnesses, jurors and others: see PARA 837 ante), (3) an offence of aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring, suborning or inciting another person to commit an offence under the Perjury Act 1911 s 1 (as amended) (see PARAS 712-715 ante): Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 54(6).

2 Ibid s 54(1). These provisions apply in relation to acquittals in respect of offences alleged to be committed on or after 15 April 1997: s 54(7), (8); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (Appointed Day No 4) Order 1997, SI 1997/1019. Where an offence is alleged to be committed over a period of more than one day, or at some time during a period of more than one day, it must be taken to be alleged to be committed on the last of the days in the period: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 75(2).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(i) Special Pleas/1277. Issue estoppel.

1277. Issue estoppel.

Unlike the position in civil proceedings, issue estoppel does not operate in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup>. However, when in the first of two trials a defendant has been acquitted, the prosecution in the second trial is precluded from challenging the correctness of that verdict if that would put the defendant in double jeopardy for one and the same incident<sup>2</sup>.

1 DPP v Humphrys [1977] AC 1, 63 Cr App Rep 95, HL (overruling R v Hogan [1974] QB 398, 59 Cr App Rep 174 (where Lawson J had adjudged that issue estoppel did apply in criminal proceedings so as to estop the defendant in a murder trial from denying that he had caused the deceased grievous bodily harm with intent when in an earlier trial he had admitted causing such harm with intent but had alleged unsuccessfully that he had done so in self-defence); and disapproving of obiter dicta in Connelly v DPP [1964] AC 1254 at 1280, 48 Cr App Rep 183, HL, that issue estoppel could be applicable on appropriate facts).

2 Sambasivam v Public Prosecutor, Federation of Malaya [1950] AC 458, PC; followed in R v Hay (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 70, CA; qualified in R v Z [2000] 2 AC 483, [2000] 2 Cr App 281, HL. Where there is no risk of double jeopardy, it is open to the prosecution to argue that a defendant was in fact guilty of an earlier offence of which he has previously been acquitted (eg for the purpose of demonstrating that he is a serial offender). See R v Ollis [1900] 2 QB 756, CCA; R v Z supra; R v Colman [2004] EWCA Crim 3252, [2004] All ER (D) 345 (Dec). Although R v Hay supra was not expressly overruled in R v Z supra, much of the reasoning of the court in R v Hay supra is plainly inconsistent with the rationale of the decision of the House of Lords in R v Z supra: R v Colman supra at [41] per Auld LJ. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(ii) The General Issue/1278. Pleading generally.

(ii) The General Issue

1278. Pleading generally.

If no special plea is pleaded, or if a special plea has been made and the issue has been determined against the defendant<sup>1</sup>, he is called upon to plead to the indictment. He may plead either guilty or not guilty. He may also plead not guilty of the offence charged in the indictment but guilty of another offence of which he might be found guilty on the indictment<sup>2</sup>. If the indictment contains more than one count, each count should be put to the defendant separately and he should be asked to plead to each as it is put<sup>3</sup>.

The defendant must plead himself; it is not sufficient for his counsel (or anyone else) to do so on his behalf, or to indicate that the defendant wishes to plead guilty<sup>4</sup>.

Where it is intended to seek the trial judge's ruling upon agreed facts, as a basis for determining the defendant's plea, the proper course is for the defendant to enter a plea of not guilty; after any argument has been heard and the ruling given, then, if the circumstances require it, the defendant may change his plea to one of guilty<sup>5</sup>.

Although counsel have freedom of access to the judge in his chambers both before and during trial, when there are matters calling for communications or discussions of such a nature that counsel cannot in the interests of his client mention them in open court, such communications should never take place unless there is no alternative<sup>6</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(ii) The General Issue/1279. Plea of not guilty.

1279. Plea of not guilty.

Where the defendant pleads not guilty, he must be given in charge of the jury and may then be convicted or acquitted only by the verdict of the jury<sup>1</sup>. Even where he changes his plea to guilty during the course of the trial, a formal verdict of guilty must still be taken from the jury<sup>2</sup>.

A defendant may plead not guilty of the offence specifically charged in the indictment but guilty of another offence of which he might be found guilty on that indictment<sup>3</sup>. If there is nothing contained in the committal documents or documents served on the defendant after being sent for trial which can be said to reduce the charge alleged in the indictment to some lesser offence for which a verdict may be returned, counsel for the prosecution ought not to accept the plea of guilty of that lesser offence<sup>4</sup>; even where counsel for the prosecution proposes to accept, the trial judge has a discretion whether to approve the acceptance of the plea or not<sup>5</sup>. If a plea of not guilty to the offence charged, but guilty of another offence not charged, is not accepted, it is deemed to be withdrawn and to be a nullity, so that the defendant may not be sentenced upon it if he is acquitted by the jury of the offence charged in the indictment<sup>6</sup>.

Where prosecuting counsel accepts a plea of not guilty, he should invite the trial judge to order that a verdict of not guilty be recorded<sup>7</sup>. The court may, if it thinks fit, order that such a verdict be recorded without any further steps being taken in the proceedings; it has the same effect as if the defendant had been tried and acquitted on the verdict of the jury or a court<sup>8</sup>.

1 Certain fraud cases may be tried without a jury and trials may be conducted without a jury where there is a danger of jury tampering: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 43, 44 (not yet fully in force); and PARA 1284 post. See also the text and notes 7, 8 infra.

3 See the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(1)(b); and PARAS 1212 ante, 1335-1338 post. Each count of a multi-count indictment is treated as a separate indictment: see s 6(7). If the defendant's plea of guilty of that other offence is accepted, his conviction for it constitutes an acquittal of the offence of which he has pleaded not guilty, whether or not the two offences are separately charged in distinct counts: see s 6(5); and PARA 1280 post.

If the trial judge approves the acceptance of the plea of guilty to a lesser charge, it is not a material irregularity if the judge changes his mind, when he hears the background to the charges, and directs the trial to proceed: R v Emmanuel (1982) 74 Cr App Rep 135, CA; Richards v R [1993] AC 217, 96 Cr App Rep 268, PC. As to the course which should be adopted by prosecuting counsel in the event of disagreement with the prosecuting authority regarding whether or not to accept a plea to a lesser charge see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 1222; and as to the determination by the trial judge of the circumstances of offence after a plea of guilty see PARAS 1353-1355 post.

It is, however, open to the prosecution to lead evidence in the course of the trial that the defendant pleaded guilty of the lesser charge and, if the defendant raises a defence inconsistent with that plea, he may be cross-examined on that point: R v Hazeltine supra at 862 and 356.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(4) PLEADING TO THE INDICTMENT/(ii) The General Issue/1280. Plea of guilty.

1280. Plea of guilty.

A defendant must have a free choice of plea; if at the time that he pleaded guilty the defendant was subject to such pressure that he did not have a free choice between pleading 'guilty' or 'not guilty' his plea is a nullity<sup>1</sup>. He is not to be taken to admit an offence unless he pleads guilty to it in unmistakable terms with appreciation of the essential elements of the offence<sup>2</sup>. A defendant must himself plead; it is not sufficient for his counsel (or anyone else) to plead on his behalf or to indicate that the defendant wishes to plead guilty<sup>3</sup>. In the case of an unrepresented defendant, care must be taken to ensure that he fully understands the elements of the offence to which he is pleading guilty, and this is particularly the case where a possible defence is disclosed in the evidence<sup>4</sup>. A plea of guilty by one of several defendants is in no sense to be regarded as evidence against a co-defendant<sup>5</sup>.

Where a defendant pleads guilty to part of a count upon which he is arraigned but, the prosecution having refused to accept the plea, the trial proceeds on the whole count, his plea of guilty is impliedly withdrawn; thus, in the event of his acquittal on the count, he cannot be sentenced in respect of that part of the count to which he had originally pleaded guilty<sup>6</sup>. Where the defendant pleads not guilty of an offence specifically charged in the indictment but guilty of some other offence of which he might be found guilty on that charge, and he is convicted upon that plea of guilty without trial for the offence charged, his conviction of the one offence is an acquittal of the other; and this is so whether or not the two offences are charged in separate counts<sup>7</sup>.

Where a defendant pleads guilty but disputes the prosecution account of the facts, a judge can order a hearing to ascertain the truth about those disputed facts<sup>8</sup>.

If, during the course of a trial, it appears that a plea of guilty has been entered in error, it must be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty entered<sup>9</sup>; an unequivocal plea of guilty may, with the leave of the trial judge, be withdrawn at any time before sentence in the interests of justice<sup>10</sup>, but not after<sup>11</sup>.

The public has a right to know the circumstances of the commission of an offence and upon a plea of guilty the prosecution should state the facts in open court before sentence is imposed<sup>12</sup>.

1 See eg R v Inns (1974) 60 Cr App Rep 231, CA; R v Brook [1970] Crim LR 600, CA; R v Smith, R v Beaney [1999] 6 Archbold News 1, CA.

It is the duty of the defendant's counsel to advise him on the strengths of his case and, if appropriate, the possible advantages in terms of sentence which may be gained from pleading guilty: R v Herbert (1991) 94 Cr App Rep 230, CA. Even if the advice is given forcefully, this will not in itself render a subsequent guilty plea a nullity (R v Peace [1976] Crim LR 119, CA), but it will do so if it is so forceful as to deprive the defendant of his freedom of choice (R v Inns supra).

There is an obvious danger that discussions between counsel and the trial judge with regard to sentencing may put undue pressure on the defendant to plead guilty. For this reason the guidance about advance indications of sentence by a judge in the Crown Court given in R v Goodyear [2005] EWCA Crim 888, [2005] 3 All ER 117, [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 281, is of great importance. The guidance is set out below.

The guidance given in relation to the judge is as follows. The judge should not give an advance indication of sentence unless one has been sought by the defendant. That indication should normally be confined to the maximum sentence if a plea of guilty were tendered at the stage at which the indication is sought. The judge is entitled in an appropriate case to remind the defence advocate that the defendant is entitled to seek an advance indication of sentence. The judge retains an unfettered discretion to refuse to give such an indication.

The judge can also reserve his position until such time as he feels able to give an indication. The judge may or may not give reasons. In many cases involving an outright refusal, he would probably conclude that it would be inappropriate to give reasons. Once an indication has been given, it is and remains binding on the judge who has given it, and it also binds any other judge who becomes responsible for the case. If, after a reasonable opportunity to consider his position, the defendant does not plead guilty, the indication ceases to have effect. An indication should not be sought on a basis of hypothetical facts. Where appropriate, there must be an agreed, written basis of plea. Unless there is, the judge should refuse to give an indication.

The guidance given in relation to the defence is as follows. The process of seeking an indication should normally be started by the defence. The defendant's advocate should not seek an indication without written authority, signed by his client, that he, the client, wishes to seek an indication. The defendant's advocate is personally responsible for ensuring that his client fully appreciates that:

- 69 (1) he should plead not guilty unless he was guilty;
- 70 (2) any indication given remains subject to the entitlement of the Attorney General, where it arises, to refer an unduly lenient sentence to the Court of Appeal;
- 71 (3) any indication given reflects the situation at the time when it was given and, if a guilty plea was not then tendered, it ceases to have effect; and
- 72 (4) any indication relates only to the matters about which an indication has been sought.

An indication should not be sought while there is any uncertainty between the prosecution and the defence about an acceptable plea to the indictment or any factual basis relating to the plea. Any agreed basis should be reduced into writing before an indication is sought. Where there is a dispute about a particular fact which defence counsel believes to be immaterial to the sentencing decision, the difference should be recorded, so that the judge can make up his own mind. The judge should never be invited to give an indication on the basis of what would appear to be a plea bargain. The judge is not to be asked to indicate levels of sentence depending on possible different pleas. If the defendant is unrepresented, he is entitled to seek a sentence indication on his own initiative.

The guidance given in relation to the prosecution is as follows. If there is no final agreement about the plea to the indictment, or the basis of plea, and the defence nevertheless proceeds to seek an indication, prosecuting counsel should remind him that normally an indication should not be given until the basis of the plea has been agreed, or the judge has concluded that he could properly deal with the case without the need for a hearing on the facts: see R v Newton (1982) 77 Cr App Rep 13. If an indication is sought, the prosecution should normally inquire whether the judge is in possession of all the evidence relied on by the prosecution, including any victim impact statement, as well as any relevant previous convictions of the defendant. Prosecuting counsel should draw the judge's attention to any minimum or mandatory statutory sentencing requirements and, where he would be expected to offer assistance with relevant guideline cases or the Sentencing Guideline Council's views, invite the judge to allow him to do so, and, where it applied, remind the judge that the position of the Attorney General to refer any eventual sentencing decision as unduly lenient was not affected. Prosecuting counsel should not say anything which might create the impression that the sentence indication had the support or approval of the Crown.

The guidance given in relation to process is as follows. Any sentence indication will normally be sought at the plea and case management hearing (see PARA 1242 ante) but a defendant may seek an indication at a later stage, or even, in rare cases, during the trial itself. In complicated or difficult cases, no less than seven days notice in writing of an intention to seek an indication should normally be given in writing to the prosecution and the court. The hearing should normally take place in open court, with a full recording of the entire proceedings, and both sides represented, in the defendant's presence. Any reference to a request for a sentence indication is inadmissible in any subsequent trial. Reporting restrictions should normally be imposed, to be lifted if and when the defendant pleads or is found guilty. It is only in wholly exceptional circumstances that counsel should see the judge in private to discuss pleas or sentence; an example would be where the defendant is unaware that he is dying of cancer: A-G's Reference (No 44 of 2000) (R v Peverett) [2001] 1 Cr App Rep 416, CA. As to private meetings between counsel and the judge see PARA 1278 ante.

See also the Attorney General's Guidelines on the Acceptance of Pleas [2001] 1 Cr App Rep 425:

- 73 (a) Justice, save in the most exceptional circumstances, is conducted in public. This includes the acceptance of pleas by the prosecution and sentencing.
- 74 (b) The Code for Crown Prosecutors sets out the circumstances in which pleas to a reduced number of charges, or less serious charges, can be accepted. Where this is done the prosecution should be prepared to explain the reasons in open court.

- 75 (c) Only in the most exceptional circumstances should plea and sentence be discussed in chambers. Where there is such a discussion, the prosecution advocate should at the outset, if necessary, remind the judge of the principle that an independent record must be kept. The prosecution counsel should make a full note of such an event, recording all decisions and comments. This note should be made available to the prosecuting authority.
- 76 (d) Where there is to be a discussion on plea and sentence and the prosecution counsel takes the view that the circumstances are not exceptional, then it is his duty to remind the judge of the relevant decisions of the Court of Appeal (see R v Goodyear supra) and disassociate himself from involvement in any discussion on sentence. Counsel should not do or say anything which could be construed as expressly or impliedly agreeing to a particular sentence. If the offence is one to which the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 35 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 55 et seq) applies counsel should make it clear that the Attorney General may refer the case for review under s 36 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 55 et seq).
- 77 (e) When a case is listed for trial and the prosecution forms the view that the appropriate course is to accept a plea before the proceedings commence or continue, or to offer no evidence, the prosecution should whenever practicable, speak with the victim or the victim's family, so that the position can be explained and their views and interests can be taken into account as part of the decision making process. The victim or victim's family should then be kept informed and decisions explained once made at court.

Examples of cases where the discretion to permit withdrawal of an unequivocal plea might be exercised are where a defendant has been misinformed about the nature of the charge or the availability of a defence, or where he has been put under pressure to plead guilty in circumstances where he is not truly admitting guilt. A corporation may, on arraignment, enter in writing by its representative<sup>1</sup> a plea of guilty or not guilty<sup>2</sup>. If the corporation does not appear by a representative or, though it does so appear, fails to enter any plea, the court must order a plea of not guilty to be entered and the trial proceeds as though the corporation had duly entered a plea of not guilty<sup>3</sup>.

1282. Commencement of trial.

Except with his consent and that of the prosecution, the trial of a person committed by a magistrates' court must not begin<sup>1</sup> until the expiration of 14 days beginning with the date when the defendant is committed for trial<sup>2</sup>; and, unless the Crown Court has ordered otherwise, the trial must begin not later than the expiration of eight weeks beginning with the date of committal when the defendant is sent for trial<sup>3</sup>.

An application for postponement may be made at the instance of the prosecution or defence, and is usually made before a plea is taken<sup>4</sup>.

It is not usual to order the defendant to pay the costs of the prosecution on postponement, if the application is by the defendant, or to order the prosecution to pay the defendant's costs, if the application is by the prosecution<sup>5</sup>.

1 A trial is deemed to begin when a jury is sworn and the defendant is arraigned and put in charge of the jury: see the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 77(3); and R v Tonner, R v Evans [1985] 1 All ER 807, 80 Cr App Rep 170, CA; Ex p Guardian Newspapers Ltd [1999] 1 WLR 2130, [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 284, CA. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/(5) THE JURY/(i) The Need for a Jury/1285. Trial by jury of sample counts only.

(5) THE JURY

(i) The Need for a Jury

1285. Trial by jury of sample counts only.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions apply<sup>1</sup>. The prosecution may apply to a judge of the Crown Court for a trial on indictment to take place on the basis that the trial of some, but not all, of the counts included in the indictment may be conducted without a jury<sup>2</sup>. If such an application is made and the judge is satisfied that the following three conditions are fulfilled, he may make an order for the trial to take place on the basis that the trial of some, but not all<sup>3</sup>, of the counts included in the indictment may be conducted without a jury<sup>4</sup>. The three conditions are that:

- 2126 (1) the number of counts included in the indictment is likely to mean that a trial by jury involving all of those counts would be impracticable<sup>5</sup>;
- 2127 (2) if such an order were made, each count or group of counts which would accordingly be tried with a jury can be regarded as a sample of counts which could accordingly be tried without a jury<sup>6</sup>; and
- 2128 (3) it is in the interests of justice for such an order to be made<sup>7</sup>.

In deciding whether or not to make such an order, the judge must have regard to any steps which might reasonably<sup>8</sup> be taken to facilitate a trial by jury<sup>9</sup>.

The effect of an order for counts to be tried without a jury is that where, in the course of the proceedings to which the order relates, a defendant is found guilty by a jury on a count which can be regarded as a sample of other counts to be tried in those proceedings, those other counts may be tried without a jury in those proceedings<sup>10</sup>.

Where the trial of a count is conducted without a jury because of such an order, the court is to have all the powers, authorities and jurisdiction which the court would have had if the trial of that count had been conducted with a jury (including power to determine any question and to make any finding which would be required to be determined or made by a jury)<sup>11</sup>.

Where the trial of a count is conducted without a jury because of such an order and the court convicts the defendant of that count: (a) the court must give a judgment which states the reasons for the conviction at, or as soon as reasonably practicable after, the time of the conviction; and (b) the requirement<sup>12</sup> for notice of appeal or of application for leave to appeal to be given within 28 days from date of conviction is to be read as a reference to the date of the judgment mentioned in head (a) above<sup>13</sup>.

Where, in the case of proceedings in respect of which such an order has been made, a jury convicts a defendant of a count, time does not begin to run<sup>14</sup> in relation to an appeal against that conviction until the date on which the proceedings end<sup>15</sup>.

2 Ibid s 17(1) (not yet in force). Such an application must be determined at a preparatory hearing (within the meaning of the Criminal Justice Act 1987 or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt III (ss 28-38) (as amended) (see PARAS 1253, 1257 ante)): Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 18(1), (6) (not yet in force). The parties to a preparatory hearing at which such an application is to be determined must be given an opportunity to make representations with respect to the application: s 18(4) (not yet in force). For the purposes of ss 17-20 (see the text and notes 13-15 infra), a count may not be regarded as a sample of other counts unless the defendant in respect of each count is the same person: s 17(9) (not yet in force).

3 An order must specify the counts which may be tried without a jury: ibid s 17(8) (not yet in force).

4 Ibid s 17(2) (not yet in force).

5 Ibid s 17(3) (not yet in force).

6 Ibid s 17(4) (not yet in force).

7 Ibid s 17(5) (not yet in force).

8 A step is not to be regarded as reasonable if it could lead to the possibility of a defendant in the trial receiving a lesser sentence than would be the case if that step were not taken: ibid s 17(7) (not yet in force).

9 Ibid s 17(6) (not yet in force).

10 Ibid s 19(1) (not yet in force).

11 Ibid s 19(2) (not yet in force). Except where the context otherwise requires, any reference in an enactment to a jury, the verdict of a jury or the finding of a jury is to be read, in relation to the trial of a count conducted without a jury because of an order under s 17(2) (see the text and notes 3, 4 supra), as a reference to the court, the verdict of the court or the finding of the court: s 19(3) (not yet in force).

12 See the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 18(2); and PARA 1863 post.

13 Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 19(4) (not yet in force).

14 Ie under the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 18(2): see PARA 1863 post.

15 Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 19(5) (not yet in force). In determining for these purposes the date on which proceedings end, any part of those proceedings which takes place after the time when matters relating to sentencing begin to be dealt with is to be disregarded: s 19(6) (not yet in force).

Nothing in ss 17-20 (not yet in force) affects the requirement under the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4A (as added and amended) (see PARA 1265 ante) that any question, finding or verdict mentioned in that provision be determined, made or returned by a jury: Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 19(7) (not yet in force).

Rules of court may make such provision as appears to the authority making them to be necessary or expedient for the purposes of ss 17-19 (not yet in force): s 20(1) (not yet in force). Without limiting s 20(1) (not yet in force), rules of court may in particular make provision for time limits within which applications under s 17 (not yet in force) (see the text and notes 1-9 supra) must be made or within which other things in connection with s 17 (not yet in force) or s 18 (not yet in force) or s 19 (not yet in force) (see the text and notes 2, 10-14 supra) must be done: s 20(2) (not yet in force). Nothing in s 20 (not yet in force) is to be taken as affecting the generality of any enactment conferring powers to make rules of court: s 20(3) (not yet in force).

Material relating to this paragraph has been revised and published under the title JURIES vol 61 (2010).

1298. Giving the defendant in charge to the jury.

When a full jury has been sworn, it is a common practice for the clerk of the court to state the effect of the indictment, or that part of it on which the defendant has been arraigned, to the jury, and to give the defendant in charge to the jury<sup>1</sup> by saying 'to this indictment he has pleaded not guilty and it is your charge to say, having heard the evidence, whether he be guilty or not'.

<sup>1</sup> Giving a defendant in charge to the jury is not legally necessary. It is not an essential part of the trial; and failure to do so does not render the trial a nullity: see R v Desai [1973] Crim LR 36, CA. As to giving in charge see also JURIES vol 61 (2010) PARA 836.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1300. Admission of the public.

(6) THE HEARING

(i) In general

1300. Admission of the public.

In general, all persons except children have a right to be present in court<sup>1</sup>, provided there is sufficient accommodation and no disturbance of the proceedings; there is, however, an inherent jurisdiction in the court to exclude the public if it becomes necessary to do so for the due administration of justice<sup>2</sup>. Except during such time as his presence is required as a witness or otherwise for the purpose of justice<sup>3</sup> or while the court consents to his presence, no child under 14 years of age (other than an infant in arms) may be present during the trial of any other person charged with an offence, or during any preliminary proceedings; and, if he is so present, he must be ordered to be removed<sup>4</sup>.

When a person who in the opinion of the court is a child under 14 years of age or a young person<sup>5</sup> is called as a witness in any proceedings in relation to an offence against, or any conduct contrary, to decency or morality, the court may order the public<sup>6</sup> to be excluded from the court during the taking of his evidence<sup>7</sup>. On a trial under the Official Secrets Acts<sup>8</sup>, the court, on the application of the prosecution, may order all, or any section, of the public to be excluded during any part of the hearing if the publication of any evidence to be given or statement to be made would be prejudicial to the national safety<sup>9</sup>. The sentence must, however, be passed in public<sup>10</sup>.

Although, as a general rule, it is not right to distinguish between excluding the press and other members of the public<sup>11</sup>, the interests of justice<sup>12</sup> may sometimes be served by excluding the general public but allowing the press to remain<sup>13</sup>, or by permitting an individual to be anonymous or by protecting his identity in some other way<sup>14</sup>.

1 In addition, the defendant is entitled to a public hearing: see the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6(1) (the right to a fair trial). The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1301. Restrictions on reporting of proceedings.

1301. Restrictions on reporting of proceedings.

Where the trial is held in public<sup>1</sup>, there is a general right to publish a fair and accurate report of the proceedings, contemporaneously and in good faith<sup>2</sup>. There is no inherent jurisdiction to prohibit or postpone publication of proceedings<sup>3</sup>. The court may, however, order that the publication of any report of the proceedings, or any part of the proceedings, be postponed for such period as the court thinks necessary for avoiding a substantial risk of prejudice to the administration of justice in those proceedings or in any other proceedings pending or imminent<sup>4</sup>. In addition, a court may prohibit the publication of any name or other matter in connection with the proceedings which it has allowed to be withheld from the public<sup>5</sup>. A person who is in breach of any such order restricting the reporting of proceedings is in contempt of court and liable to be punished accordingly<sup>6</sup>.

Particular restrictions on reporting apply to trials on charges of most sexual offences<sup>7</sup>, to trials involving children and young persons<sup>8</sup>, to certain applications<sup>9</sup>, to preparatory hearings in cases of serious or complex fraud, or complex, serious or long cases, or terrorism cases<sup>10</sup>, and to pre-trial rulings<sup>11</sup>.

A court has power to prohibit the publication of derogatory assertions made in a speech in mitigation<sup>12</sup>.

3 R v Newtownabbey Magistrates' Court, ex p Belfast Telegraph Newspapers Ltd (1997) Times, 27 August, NI QB Crown Side. In the absence of a statutory power, a court has jurisdiction derived from the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8069) art 8 (right to respect for life) to restrict publication of proceedings for the protection of a child or young person who is not a victim, defendant or witness; where such a prohibition is sought on this basis the court must balance the right of the child under art 8 with the right to freedom of expression under art 10: Re S (A Child) (Identification: Restriction on Publication) [2004] UKHL 47, [2005] 1 AC 593, [2004] 4 All ER 683 (publication not restrained). The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq. Where there is a conflict between the Convention art 8 and art 10, an intense focus on the comparative importance of the two rights is necessary, neither article having precedence over the other: see Re S (A Child) (Identification: Restriction on Publication) supra (newspapers not to be restrained from publishing the identity of mother charged with murder of one of her children in order to protect privacy of another of her children who was not involved in the proceedings). Publication of the identity of the defendant and her victim was restrained in order to protect their children in Re W (Children) (Identification: Restrictions on Publication) [2005] EWHC 1564 (Admin), (2005) Times, 21 July.

4 Contempt of Court Act 1981 s 4(2). Orders made under s 4(2) or s 11 (see the text to note 5 infra) must be in precise terms and should always be committed to writing: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at I.3.3, CA. A person aggrieved may appeal to the Court of Appeal, with leave, against any such order or against any order restricting the publication of any report of the whole or any part of a trial on indictment or any proceedings ancillary to such a trial; and the decision of the Court of Appeal is final: Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 159(1) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 61(6)). 11 See ibid s 41; and PARA 1246 ante. Given the number of statutory reporting restrictions there are, the court has no power to create by a process of analogy, except in the most compelling circumstances, further exceptions to the general principle of open justice: Re S (A Child) (Identification: Restriction on Publication) [2004] UKHL 47, [2005] 1 AC 593, [2004] 4 All ER 683.

1301 Restrictions on reporting of proceedings

NOTES 4, 10--See Re B [2006] EWCA Crim 2692, [2007] EMLR 145 (postponement on reporting of sentencing hearing of co-conspirator in major terrorist plot until other co-conspirators tried overturned).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1302. Power to restrict reports about certain witnesses.

1302. Power to restrict reports about certain witnesses.

The following provisions apply where: (1) in any criminal proceedings in any court (other than a service court<sup>1</sup>) in England and Wales or Northern Ireland; or (2) in any proceedings (whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere) in any service court, a party to the proceedings makes an application for the court to give a reporting direction<sup>2</sup> in relation to a witness<sup>3</sup> in the proceedings (other than the defendant) who has attained the age of 18<sup>4</sup>. If, in such a case, the court determines that the witness is eligible for protection<sup>5</sup>, and that giving a reporting direction in relation to the witness is likely to improve the quality of evidence given by the witness<sup>6</sup>, or the level of co-operation given by the witness to any party to the proceedings in connection with that party's preparation of its case<sup>7</sup>, the court may give a reporting direction in relation to the witness<sup>8</sup>. A reporting direction may be revoked by the court or an appellate court<sup>9</sup>.

The court or an appellate court may by an excepting direction dispense, to any extent specified in the excepting direction, with the restrictions imposed by a reporting direction if:

- 2129 (a) it is satisfied that it is necessary in the interests of justice to do so<sup>10</sup>; or
- 2130 (b) it is satisfied that the effect of those restrictions is to impose a substantial and unreasonable restriction on the reporting of the proceedings, and that it is in the public interest<sup>11</sup> to remove or relax that restriction<sup>12</sup>, but no excepting direction may be given under head (b) above by reason only of the fact that the proceedings have been determined in any way or have been abandoned<sup>13</sup>. An excepting direction may be given at the time the reporting direction is given or subsequently; and may be varied or revoked by the court or an appellate court<sup>14</sup>.

Where proceedings in which reporting directions or excepting directions have been ordered are sent or transferred from a magistrates' court to the Crown Court, the magistrates' court officer must forward copies of all relevant directions to the Crown Court officer at the place to which the proceedings are sent or transferred<sup>15</sup>.

With the exceptions described below, no publication may include a report of:

- 2131 (i) a special measures direction<sup>16</sup> or a prohibition of cross-examination<sup>17</sup>, or an order discharging, or (in the case of a special measures direction) varying, such a direction<sup>18</sup>; or
- 2132 (ii) proceedings on an application for such a direction or order, or where the court acts of its own motion to determine whether to give or make any such direction order<sup>19</sup>.

The court dealing with such a matter may order that this restriction is not to apply, or is not to apply to a specified extent, to a report of the matter<sup>20</sup>. The restriction does not apply to the inclusion in a publication of a report of matters after the relevant proceedings are either determined (by acquittal, conviction or otherwise), or abandoned, in relation to the defendant or (if there is more than one) in relation to each of the defendants<sup>21</sup>.

If a publication<sup>22</sup> includes any matter in contravention of a direction restricting reporting<sup>23</sup>, or a report in contravention of the restriction on publication relating to a special measures direction or a prohibition of cross-examination (or of other matters under head (i) or head (ii) above), the following persons are guilty of an offence<sup>24</sup> and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale<sup>25</sup>:

- 2133 (A) where the publication is a newspaper or periodical, any proprietor, any editor and any publisher of the newspaper or periodical<sup>26</sup>;
- 2134 (B) where the publication is a relevant programme, any body corporate or Scottish partnership engaged in providing the programme service in which the programme is included, and any person having functions in relation to the programme corresponding to those of an editor of a newspaper<sup>27</sup>;
- 2135 (C) in the case of any other publication, any person publishing it<sup>28</sup>.

Where a person is charged with such an offence it is a defence to prove<sup>29</sup> that at the time of the alleged offence he was not aware, and neither suspected nor had reason to suspect, that the publication included the matter or report in question<sup>30</sup>.

Where a person is charged with such an offence, and the offence relates to the inclusion of any matter in a publication in contravention of a reporting direction<sup>31</sup>, it is a defence to prove that the person in relation to whom the direction was given had given written consent to the inclusion of that matter in the publication<sup>32</sup>. However, written consent is not a defence if it is proved that any person interfered with the peace or comfort of the person giving the consent with intent to obtain the consent<sup>33</sup>.

1 'Service court' means: (1) a court-martial constituted under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957; (2) the Courts-Martial Appeal Court; or (3) a standing civilian court: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1) (amended by the Armed Forces Act 2001 s 38, Sch 7 Pt 1).

2 'Reporting direction' in relation to a witness is a direction that no matter relating to the witness shall during the witness's lifetime be included in any publication if it is likely to lead members of the public to identify him as being a witness in the proceedings: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 46(6). The matters relating to a witness in relation to which the restrictions imposed by a reporting direction apply (if their inclusion in any publication is likely to have the result mentioned in s 46(6)) include in particular the witness's name, the witness's address, the identity of any educational establishment attended by the witness, the identity of any place of work, and any still or moving picture of the witness: s 46(7). In determining whether to give a reporting direction the court must consider whether it would be in the interests of justice to do so, and the public interest in avoiding the imposition of a substantial and unreasonable restriction on the reporting of the proceedings: s 46(8). For the procedure relating to an application for a reporting direction, and opposition to such an application see CrimPR 16.1-16.3, 16.6, 16.7. As to an application for the variation or revocation of such an order see CrimPR 16.5-16.7.

3 'Witness', in relation to any criminal proceedings, means any person called, or proposed to be called, to give evidence in the proceedings: see the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1).

4 Ibid s 46(1).

5 For the purposes of ibid s 46, a witness is eligible for protection if the court is satisfied that the quality of evidence given by the witness, or the level of co-operation given by the witness to any party to the proceedings in connection with that party's preparation of its case, is likely to be diminished by reason of fear or distress on the part of the witness in connection with being identified by members of the public as a witness in the proceedings: s 46(3).

In determining whether a witness is eligible for protection the court must take into account, in particular:

78 (1) the nature and alleged circumstances of the offence to which the proceedings relate (s 46(4)(a));

79 (2) the age of the witness (s 46(4)(b));

80 (3) such of the following matters as appear to the court to be relevant, namely the social and cultural background and ethnic origins of the witness, the domestic and employment circumstances of the witness, and any religious beliefs or political opinions of the witness (s 46(4)(c));

81 (4) any behaviour towards the witness on the part of the defendant, members of the family or associates of the defendant, or any other person who is likely to be a defendant or a witness in the proceedings (s 46(4)(d)).

In determining that question the court must in addition consider any views expressed by the witness: s 46(5).

6 References to the quality of a witness's evidence are references to its quality in terms of completeness, coherence and accuracy (and for this purpose 'coherence' refers to a witness's ability in giving evidence to give answers which address the questions put to the witness and can be understood both individually and collectively): ibid s 46(12)(b).

7 References to the preparation of the case of a party to any proceedings include, where the party is the prosecution, the carrying out of investigations into any offence at any time charged in the proceedings: ibid s 46(12)(c).

8 Ibid s 46(2).

9 Ibid s 46(10). 'Appellate court', in relation to any proceedings in a court, means a court dealing with an appeal (including an appeal by way of case stated) arising out of the proceedings or with any further appeal: s 45(11), 46(12)(a).

10 Ibid s 46(9)(a).

11 In determining whether anything is (or, as the case may be, was) in the public interest, the court must have regard, in particular, to the following matters (so far as relevant):

82 (1) the interest in each of the following: (a) the open reporting of crime; (b) the open reporting of matters relating to human health or safety; and (c) the prevention and exposure of miscarriages of justice (s 52(1), (2)(a));

83 (2) the welfare of any person in relation to whom the relevant restrictions imposed by or under Pt II Ch IV (ss 44-52) apply or would apply (or as the case may be, applied) (s 52(1), (2)(b)); and 84 (3) any views expressed by that person (see s 52(1), (2)(c)).

12 Ibid s 46(9)(b).

13 See ibid s 46(9). For the procedure relating to an application for an excepting direction, and to an application for the variation or revocation of such an order see CrimPR 16.4-16.7.

15 CrimPR 16.8.

16 See PARA 619 ante.

17 See PARA 1308 post.

18 See the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 47(1), (2)(a).

19 See ibid s 47(1), (2)(b). Nothing in s 47 affects any prohibition or restriction by virtue of any other enactment on the inclusion of matter in a publication: s 47(8).

20 Ibid s 47(3). Where there is only one defendant in the relevant proceedings, and he objects to the making of an order under s 47(3), the court must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of the defendant that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and if the order is made it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objections or representations: s 47(4).

Where there are two or more defendants in the relevant proceedings, and one or more of them objects to the making of an order under s 47(3), the court must make the order if (and only if) satisfied after hearing the representations of each of the defendants that it is in the interests of justice to do so; and if the order is made it does not apply to the extent that a report deals with any such objections or representations: s 47(5).

'The relevant proceedings' means the proceedings to which any such direction as is mentioned in s 47(2) (see the text to notes 18, 19 supra) relates or would relate: s 47(7).

21 Ibid s 47(6).

22 'Publication' includes any speech, writing, relevant programme or other communication in whatever form, which is addressed to the public at large or any section of the public (and for this purpose every relevant programme must be taken to be so addressed), but does not include an indictment or other document prepared for use in particular legal proceedings: see ibid s 63(1).

23 Ie a direction under ibid s 46(2): see the text to note 8 supra.

24 Ibid s 49(1)-(4). Proceedings for an offence under s 49 in respect of a publication falling within head (ii) in the text may not be instituted in England and Wales otherwise than by or with the consent of the Attorney General: s 49(6)(a). For the effect of this limitation see PARA 1071 ante.

If an offence under s 49 committed by a body corporate is proved to have been committed with the consent or connivance of, or to be attributable to any neglect on the part of, an officer, the officer as well as the body corporate is guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly: s 51(1). In s 51, 'officer' means a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body, or a person purporting to act in any such capacity: s 51(2). If the affairs of a body corporate are managed by its members, 'director' in s 51(2) means a member of that body: s 51(3).

Where an offence under s 49 is committed by a Scottish partnership and is proved to have been committed with the consent or connivance of a partner, he as well as the partnership is guilty of the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly: s 51(4).

25 Ibid s 49(5). As to the standard scale see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 142.

26 Ibid s 49(2).

27 Ibid s 49(3). 'Relevant programme' means a programme included in a programme service, within the meaning of the Broadcasting Act 1990 (see TELECOMMUNICATIONS AND BROADCASTING vol 45(1) (2005 Reissue) PARA 328): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1).

28 Ibid s 49(4).

29 As to whether this imposes a legal (or persuasive) burden or an evidential one, and, if the former, its compatibility with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6(2) (the presumption of innocence), see PARA 1368 et seq post. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

NOTE 18--1999 Act s 47(2)(a) amended: Police and Justice Act 2006 Sch 14 para 37(3).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1303. Trial of two or more defendants.

1303. Trial of two or more defendants.

Where two or more persons join in the commission of an offence, all or any number of them may be jointly indicted for it and tried together<sup>1</sup>. Persons who are jointly indicted should, however, be tried separately if the interests of justice seem to require that course to be taken<sup>2</sup>. Whether two persons jointly indicted should be tried together or separately is a matter for the discretion of the judge who must exercise that discretion judicially<sup>3</sup>.

Where an essential part of the defence of one defendant amounts to an attack on another, the judge is not bound to order separate trials, although he must take it into consideration in the exercise of his judicial discretion<sup>4</sup>. Where the statement made by one defendant is highly incriminating of another, this may be a good ground for ordering separate trials<sup>5</sup>.

Where two defendants concerned in an offence based on the same transaction are tried separately, the fact that the juries return an acquittal in the one case and a conviction in the other will not of itself render the verdict of guilty unsafe<sup>6</sup>.

Two defendants who are separately indicted may not be tried together<sup>7</sup>. Such a trial is a nullity even though counsel on both sides have purported to consent<sup>8</sup>.

1 2 Hale PC 173; and see PARA 1223 ante. Prima facie, where persons were engaged on a common enterprise, they should be jointly indicted and jointly tried: R v Grondkowski, R v Malinowski [1946] KB 369, 31 Cr App Rep 116, CCA. In the majority of cases it is in the public interest that jointly indicted defendants should be tried together: R v Hoggins [1967] 3 All ER 334, 51 Cr App Rep 444, CA. As to postponement of sentence on one of them who pleads guilty see PARA 1356 post.

Where two persons are jointly charged in one count of an indictment with one offence, the count, in effect, alleges against each defendant a separate offence committed on the same occasion and as part of the same transaction, the connection between the separate offences being no more than that. As against each defendant not only his own physical acts, but also the physical acts of the other defendant, may be relied upon by the prosecution as an actus reus of the offence with which he is charged. It is sufficient to show against any and each of the defendants that either he himself did a physical act which is an essential ingredient of the offence charged, or that he helped another defendant to do such an act, and that in doing that act or in helping the other defendant to do it, he himself had the required criminal intent: DPP v Merriman [1973] AC 584, 56 Cr App Rep 766, HL (approving R v Fenwick (1953) 54 SR NSW 147, NSW FC; and overruling R v Scaramanga [1963] 2 QB 807, 47 Cr App Rep 213, CCA, R v Parker [1969] 2 QB 248, 53 Cr App Rep 289, CA, and R v Holley (1969) 53 Cr App Rep 519, CA). Any number of persons may be charged in one indictment, with reference to the same theft, with having at different times or at the same time handled all or any of the stolen goods, and the persons so charged may be tried together: Theft Act 1968 s 27(1). On the trial of two or more persons indicted for jointly handling any stolen goods, the jury may find any of the defendants guilty if it is satisfied that he handled all or any of the stolen goods, whether or not he did so jointly with the other defendants or any of them: s 27(2). These provisions also apply to goods obtained by blackmail or deception: see s 24(4). Section 27 (as amended) is to be construed in accordance with s 24 (see PARA 303 ante): s 27(5).

1303 Trial of two or more defendants

NOTE 1--Where one of the defendants has become unfit after a jury has been empanelled, the jury can, in principle, proceed to consider whether that defendant has committed the actus reus while looking, in the case of other defendants, to both actus reus and mens rea: R v B [2008] EWCA Crim 1997, [2009] 3 WLR 1545.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1304. Bail during course of trial.

1304. Bail during course of trial.

Once a trial has begun, the further grant of bail<sup>1</sup>, whether during the short adjournment, or overnight, is in the discretion of the trial judge. It may be a proper exercise of this discretion to refuse bail during the short adjournment if the defendant cannot otherwise be segregated from witnesses and jurors<sup>2</sup>.

A defendant who was on bail while on remand should not be refused overnight bail during the trial, unless in the opinion of the judge there are positive reasons to justify this refusal. Such reasons are likely to be: (1) that a point has been reached where there is a real danger that the defendant will abscond, either because the case is going badly for him, or for any other reason; (2) that there is a real danger that he may interfere with witnesses or jurors<sup>3</sup>.

There is no universal rule of practice that bail must not be renewed when the summing up has begun. Each case must be decided in the light of its own circumstances, and having regard to the judge's assessment from time to time of the risks involved<sup>4</sup>.

Once the jury has returned a verdict, a further renewal of bail should be decided in the light of the gravity of the offence and the likely sentence to be passed in all the circumstances of the case<sup>5</sup>.

1305. Communication between jury and judge during course of trial.

Where the jury communicates with the judge during the course of the trial<sup>1</sup> about a matter unconnected with it (domestic or administrative matters), the judge may deal with the matter without reference to counsel<sup>2</sup>. Except in the most exceptional cases, the judge should state in open court the nature and content of a communication about a matter connected with the trial and, if he thinks it helpful to do so, seek the assistance of counsel<sup>3</sup>.

2 R v Andriamampandry [2003] EWCA Crim 1974, 147 Sol Jo LB 871. It has been stated that the judge should inform counsel about a communication (and its content) relating to such a matter but could not be faulted if he did not: see R v Conroy, R v Glover [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 285, CA; R v Brown, R v Stratton [1998] Crim LR 505, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(i) In general/1306. Determining admissibility of evidence; trial within a trial.

1306. Determining admissibility of evidence; trial within a trial.

As a general rule the evidence of witnesses at a jury trial must be given before the jury<sup>1</sup>. Where, however, it is necessary for the trial judge to ascertain preliminary facts in order to determine the question of admissibility of another piece of evidence (such as a confession by a defendant<sup>2</sup>), evidence relating to the question of admissibility is ordinarily heard by the judge in the absence of the jury<sup>3</sup>, in a procedure known as a 'trial within a trial' (or 'voir dire')<sup>4</sup>. In cases involving confessions, the judge's duty is to determine whether or not the disputed confession is admissible, and he should not ordinarily be influenced in this task by whether the confession appears to him to be true or untrue<sup>5</sup>. A judge cannot, however, be expected to try an issue of admissibility of evidence in total isolation; he neither can nor should put out of his mind the whole background of the case<sup>6</sup>. A trial within a trial may also assist the judge to determine whether the admission of legally admissible prosecution evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that it ought not to be admitted<sup>7</sup>. On completion of the voir dire and the judge's ruling, the judge should give no explanation of the outcome of the voir dire to the jury<sup>8</sup>.

1 R v Reynolds [1950] 1 KB 606, 34 Cr App Rep 60, CCA. This does not necessarily require the presence of the witness in court. Evidence of some witnesses may be played to the jury via a video recording or given via a television link.

2 See PARA 1542 et seq post. Other types of evidence that may sometimes require a trial within a trial in order to determine admissibility include res gestae statements (see PARA 1530 post) and tape recordings (R v Robson [1972] 1 WLR 651, 56 Cr App Rep 450, CA). It is unnecessary for a trial judge to hold a trial within a trial when faced with issues about the quality or probative value of identification evidence. Disputes concerning identification evidence will rarely justify the holding of a trial within a trial (R v Beveridge (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 255, CA; R v Fleming (1987) 86 Cr App Rep 32, CA; R v Davies [2004] EWCA Crim 2521, [2004] All ER (D) 433 (Oct)) although different considerations may possibly apply where there is some dispute as to whether improper identification procedures were followed, as in R v Willoughby [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 82, CA. As to the appropriate time to raise a question of admissibility see generally para 1307 post. As to the time for raising objections to the admissibility of confession evidence see R v Sat-Bhambra (1988) 88 Cr App Rep 55, 62, CA.

3 It is for the judge, having heard the views of the defence, to have the final word on whether the jury should remain in court: R v Hendry (1988) 88 Cr App Rep 187, CA; R v Davies [1990] Crim LR 860, CA. Contrast R v Anderson (1929) 21 Cr App Rep 178, CCA, and Ajodha v The State [1982] AC 204, [1981] 2 All ER 193, PC (not followed on this point in R v Hendry supra) in which it was held that the jury should be excluded 'only at the request or with the consent of the defence'. Where the members of the jury are asked to leave the court, they should be told merely that 'a point of law has arisen which does not concern them'.

4 The term 'voir dire' is a corruption of 'vrai dire' and derives from the oath or affirmation taken by witnesses who testify in the course of this procedure.

It is primarily the responsibility of defence counsel to inform the prosecution and the judge in advance and in the absence of the jury of an intended objection to the admissibility of statements of a defendant; at the appropriate time, counsel must ask the judge to request the jury to withdraw so that a matter can be raised on which the ruling of the judge is required; no discussion of an intended objection must take place in front of the jury: Mitchell v R [1998] AC 695, [1998] 2 Cr App Rep 35, PC.

5 Wong Kam-ming v R [1980] AC 247, 69 Cr App Rep 47, PC; R v Brophy [1982] AC 476, [1981] 2 All ER 705, HL.

6 R v Tyrer (1989) 90 Cr App Rep 446, CA.

7 See the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78(1); and PARA 1365 post. It will not always be appropriate for a trial within a trial to be held in cases where prosecution evidence is challenged under s 78 (as amended); in many such cases the judge will be able to resolve the issue by reading statements and listening to argument from counsel: R v Keenan [1990] 2 QB 54, [1989] 3 All ER 598, CA; R v Flemming (1987) 86 Cr App Rep 32, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1307. Opening the case for the prosecution.

(ii) Case for the Prosecution

1307. Opening the case for the prosecution.

Counsel<sup>1</sup> for the prosecution opens the case to the jury by giving an outline of the salient features of his case and the nature of the evidence<sup>2</sup> which he proposes to call in support of it<sup>3</sup>.

As a general rule, submissions on the admissibility of evidence should not be made at the outset of the trial but when the time comes for tendering the evidence in regard to which the question of admissibility arises<sup>4</sup>. There is a presumption that counsel's opening address should not address the law, save in cases of real complication and difficulty where counsel believes, and the trial judge agrees, that the jury might be assisted by a brief and well focussed submission<sup>5</sup>.

Prosecuting counsel should regard themselves as ministers of justice assisting in its administration rather than as advocates<sup>6</sup>; and accordingly should not employ language likely to inflame the jury against the defendant<sup>7</sup>.

1 See PARA 1237 ante.

2 Defence counsel is not entitled to insist that a statement, which he has drafted for the defendant on his instructions, is signed by a police officer as a witness and made part of the material to be used by prosecuting counsel in opening his case: R v Thatcher (Practice Note) [1969] 1 All ER 998n, sub nom R v Hedges (1968) 53 Cr App Rep 206, CA.

3 Counsel should acquaint himself with the contents of the indictment before opening his case: R v Peckham (1935) 25 Cr App Rep 125, 100 JP 59, CCA. It is a wrong practice for counsel to open his case on one aspect of the matter, and then later to seek to adopt an alternative approach, thus widening the scope of the prosecution's attack: R v Falconer-Atlee (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 348 at 355-357, CA.

A prosecutor in person is not permitted to address the jury: R v Brice (1819) 2 B & Ald 606; and see also R v Gurney (1869) 11 Cox CC 414.

As to the absence of a child or young person who is the victim of a specified offence see PARA 1164 ante.

4 R v Cole (1941) 28 Cr App Rep 43, 165 LT 125, CCA; R v Hammond [1941] 3 All ER 318, 28 Cr App Rep 84, CCA; R v Zielinski [1950] 2 All ER 1114n, 34 Cr App Rep 193, CCA; R v Patel [1951] 2 All ER 29, 35 Cr App Rep 62, CCA.

If there is an objection to the admissibility of any part of the evidence, the nature and extent of the objection should be intimated to the prosecution by the defence before the trial begins. Except in those cases where it is virtually impossible to open the case to the jury without adverting to the evidence objected to, prosecuting counsel should omit any reference to it in his opening. It is only where such a course is impracticable that the trial judge should be asked to rule on questions of admissibility before the case is opened. This is likely to be so when the prosecution's case cannot succeed if an alleged confession is adjudged inadmissible: see R v Hammond supra. As to determining the admissibility of evidence see PARA 1306 ante; and as to evidence generally see PARA 1359 et seq post.

5 R v Lashley [2005] EWCA Crim 2016, [2006] Crim LR 83, (2005) Times, 28 September.

6 R v Puddick (1865) 4 F & F 497 at 499. The trial court is not to be misled as to vital facts: R v Birtles [1969] 2 All ER 1131n, 53 Cr App Rep 469, CA (use of police informer).

Counsel engaged to prosecute are acting for the Crown and not for the party initiating the prosecution, and in any event owe a duty to the court for the proper conduct of the case: see R v Thursfield (1838) 8 C & P 269;

Abbott v Refuge Assurance Co Ltd [1962] 1 QB 432, [1961] 3 All ER 1074, CA. It is a long-established practice that, if counsel in charge of a prosecution at any stage is convinced that there is no evidence against the defendant, or so little evidence that it would not be safe to leave the case to the jury, it is then his duty to acquaint the court of his views and to ask for leave to withdraw the prosecution: see Abbott v Refuge Assurance Co Ltd supra at 451 and 1084-1085 per Ormrod LJ; R v Renshaw [1989] Crim LR 811, (1989) Times, 23 June, CA. As to the course which should be adopted by prosecuting counsel in the event of disagreement with the prosecuting authority as to whether or not to proceed on a particular charge or to accept a plea to a lesser charge see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 1222.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1308. Calling witnesses.

1308. Calling witnesses.

After opening his case, prosecuting counsel calls his witnesses<sup>1</sup>, and tenders any depositions or written statements<sup>2</sup>. When a witness is called, objection may be taken to his competence<sup>3</sup>; he may then be examined as to his competence before he is sworn or affirmed<sup>4</sup>.

If there is no such objection, or if it is made and rejected, each witness in turn takes the oath or affirmation<sup>5</sup>, and is examined in chief, and may be cross-examined by the defendant or his counsel; if cross-examined, he may be re-examined by counsel for the prosecution.

Where a prosecution has otherwise been properly brought and there is evidence fit to go to the jury, the judge has power neither to prevent the prosecution from calling evidence nor to direct the jury to acquit on the basis that he considers a conviction is unlikely<sup>12</sup>.

Although questioning by a trial judge during a witness's evidence should be avoided if it gives rise to the suggestion that he is taking sides, it is his duty to ask questions to clarify ambiguities in answers previously given or to identify the nature of the defence if this is unclear<sup>13</sup>.

1 As to securing the attendance of witnesses see PARA 1409 post.

2 In the following cases a deposition or written statement may be read to the jury, in which case there is no need to call the maker as a witness.

The Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 68, Sch 2 (prospectively repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 68(1), (8), Sch 37 Pt 4) provides that witness statements or depositions admitted as evidence at committal proceedings may be read as evidence at the trial. However, this does not apply if it is proved that the statement or deposition was not signed by the justice by whom it purports to have been signed or the trial court at its discretion orders that the statement be not read. In the case where a party to the proceedings objects to the statement or deposition being so read, it may not be so read unless the court of trial orders that the objection is to have no effect on the ground that it considers it in the interest of justice so to order. Any such objection must be made in writing to the prosecutor and the Crown Court within 14 days of the defendant being committed for trial unless the court permits it to be made outside that period: CrimPR 27.2(3).

A deposition taken under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 52, Sch 3 para 4 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 1140 ante) for the purposes of proceedings for an offence for which a person has been sent for trial may be read as evidence on the trial of the defendant unless it is proved that the deposition was not signed by the justice by whom it purports to have been signed, the trial court at its discretion orders that it should not be so read or a party to the proceedings objects to it being so read: see Sch 3 para 5 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 130, 332, Sch 37 Pt 6; prospectively amended by s 41, Sch 3 paras 15, 20).

Other cases where a deposition or written statement may be read as evidence without calling its maker as a witness relate to depositions taken under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 42 (as amended) (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1277) and written statements under the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 9 (as amended) (see PARA 1535 post).

3 As to the competence of witnesses see PARA 1401 et seq post.

Once the issue of competence has been raised, it is for the prosecution to prove that the person is competent to testify: R v Yacoub (1981) 72 Cr App Rep 313, CA.

4 This may be done either by examining the witness on the voir dire, or by calling other evidence: R v Whitehead (1866) LR 1 CCR 33. It is normal to take the objection when the witness is called, but there may be cases in which the incompetence of the witness appears only in the course of his evidence, and objection may be taken at that stage: R v Moore (1892) 61 LJMC 80, CCR. See also Turner v Pearte (1787) 1 Term Rep 717; Stone v Blackburn (1793) 1 Esp 37.

Evidence is admissible to show that a witness is suffering from a disease of the mind etc which affects the reliability of his evidence: Toohy v Metropolitan Police Comr [1965] AC 595, 49 Cr App Rep 148, HL.

5 As to when a witness may be cross-examined as to his choice to affirm rather than swear see R v Mehrban (Razia), R v Mehrban (Mohammed) [2001] EWCA Crim 2627, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 561, CA.

6 See notes 7-9 infra; and PARA 1502 et seq post.

7 For instances in criminal cases of the general rule in relation to leading questions on material issues see R v Rosewell (1684) 10 State Tr 147 at 190; R v Robinson (1897) 61 JP 520; R v Wilson (alias Whittingdale) (1913) 9 Cr App Rep 124, CCA. The objection to leading questions is based on the weight to be attached to the answers given to them, not on any basis of admissibility: see Moor v Moor [1954] 2 All ER 458, [1954] 1 WLR 927, CCA. It is generally undesirable to ask a witness to identify a defendant for the first time in court: see R v Cartwright (1914) 10 Cr App Rep 219, CCA; R v Hunter [1969] Crim LR 262, CA; R v Howick [1970] Crim LR 403, CA; and PARA 1146 post. Different considerations apply in summary trials, where such identification is customary and permissible: Barnes v Chief Constable of Durham [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 505, DC; Karia v DPP [2002] EWHC Admin 2175, 166 JP 753.

8 As to the rules approved by the Bar Council in regard to cross-examination see the Code of Conduct for the Bar of England and Wales (8th Edn, 2004) PARA 708; Bar Council Miscellaneous Guidance: Written Standards for the Conduct of Professional Work (General Standards) PARA 5.10(e)-(h), (Standards Applicable to Criminal Cases) PARA 12.5; and LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 66 (2009) PARA 1210. The trial judge should do his utmost to restrain unnecessarily prolonged cross-examination: see R v Kalia [1975] Crim LR 181, CA. The trial judge is not precluded from stopping cross-examination merely because there is some tenuous legal reason for conducting it: R v Flynn [1972] Crim LR 428, CA. Although time limits on evidence in chief or cross-examination are not to become a routine feature of trial management, it is proper for a judge to impose such a limit where questioning is prolix and repetitious: R v Butt [2005] EWCA Crim 805, [2006] Crim LR 54, CA.

As to cross-examination in relation to previous inconsistent statements see PARA 1437 post; as to cross-examination with regard to previous convictions see PARA 1504 post; and as to restrictions on the cross-examination of a defendant who gives evidence see PARA 1497 et seq post. As to cross-examination and contradiction of a witness by the party who calls him, if he turns out to be hostile, see the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 3; and PARA 1436 post. It is not normal to allow cross-examination or examination of the witness in the absence of the jury in order to determine the question of hostility, which should be determined as a result of his answers and demeanour in the presence of the jury: R v Darby [1989] Crim LR 817, CA. However, in exceptional circumstances only it may be appropriate to conduct a voir dire to determine whether or not a witness is hostile: R v Khan, R v Dad, R v Afsar [2002] EWCA Crim 945, [2003] Crim LR 428 (in which R v Honeyghan, R v Sayles [1999] Crim LR 221, CA, was considered). See further PARA 1436 text and note 6 post.

In exceptional circumstances, as where the witness is a child, the judge may cross-examine a prosecution witness: see R v Cameron [2001] EWCA Crim 562, [2001] Crim LR 587.

9 See The Queen's Case (1820) 2 Brod & Bing 284 at 294, HL. See also R v Beezley (1830) 4 C & P 220 (if the counsel for the prosecution calls a witness merely to allow the defence to cross-examine him, any questions put by prosecuting counsel after the cross-examination must be considered as re-examination, and accordingly may be on points touched on by the cross-examination only).

10 As to evidence of expert witnesses on matters of handwriting, fingerprints, insanity etc see PARA 1484 post.

11 See PARA 1359 post. As to the evidence of children see PARAS 1441-1442 post. As to evidence through television links see PARAS 1414, 1417 post.

There is no rule which precludes a witness from refreshing his memory before he goes into the witness box from a statement made by him at some time reasonably close to the time of the event which is the subject of the trial (R v Richardson [1971] 2 QB 484, 55 Cr App Rep 244, CA (applied in Worley v Bentley [1976] 2 All ER 449, 62 Cr App Rep 239, DC, and R v Westwell [1976] 2 All ER 812, 62 Cr App Rep 251, CA)) but it is desirable where the prosecution follows this procedure that the defence should be told, before the witness goes into the witness box, that he has refreshed his memory since it may be relevant to the weight which can be attached to the evidence (Worley v Bentley supra; R v Westwell supra). Once a witness is in the witness box, he may refresh his memory by reference to a writing made or verified by him, or from the transcript of a sound recording of an oral account given by him, if the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 139 are satisfied: see PARA 1438 post.

As to the power of the judge to recall a witness, or to call one not called by either party see PARA 1318 post. As to questions by the judge see R v Bateman (1946) 31 Cr App Rep 106, 174 LT 336, CCA; and PARA 1318 post.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1309. Witnesses out of court.

1309. Witnesses out of court.

The general rule and practice in criminal cases is that witnesses as to fact should remain out of court until they are required to give evidence<sup>1</sup>.

Professional or expert witnesses<sup>2</sup>, or witnesses as to character only, are generally permitted to remain in court.

If a witness remains in court in breach of the rule, his evidence, though open to criticism on that ground, is not rendered inadmissible<sup>3</sup>; but if a witness disobeys an order of the court and remains, it seems that he may be punished for contempt<sup>4</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1310. Prosecution duty in respect of calling or tendering witnesses.

1310. Prosecution duty in respect of calling or tendering witnesses.

Generally speaking, the prosecution must have at court all the witnesses whose statements have been served as witnesses on whom the prosecution intends to rely, if the defence wants those witnesses to attend; in deciding which statements to serve, the prosecution has an unfettered discretion, but must normally disclose<sup>1</sup> material statements not served<sup>2</sup>.

The prosecution enjoys a discretion whether to call, or tender, any witness it requires to attend, but the discretion is not unfettered because: (1) it must be exercised in the interests of justice, so as to promote a fair trial; and (2) the prosecution ought normally to call or offer to call all the witnesses who give direct evidence of the primary facts of the case, unless for good reason, in any instance, the prosecutor regards the witness's evidence as unworthy of belief. In most cases the jury should have available all that evidence as to what actually happened, which the prosecution, when serving statements, considered to be material, even if there are inconsistencies between one witness and another<sup>3</sup>.

It is for the prosecution to decide which witnesses give direct evidence of the primary facts of the case; a prosecutor may reasonably take the view that what a particular witness has to say is at best marginal. The prosecutor is also the primary judge of whether or not a witness to the material events is incredible, or unworthy of belief. A prosecutor properly exercising his discretion is not therefore obliged to proffer a witness merely in order to give the defence material with which to attack the credit of other witnesses on whom the Crown relies<sup>4</sup>.

Where it proves impossible, despite all reasonable steps being taken, to have a witness present, the trial judge may in his discretion permit the trial to proceed, provided that no injustice will be done thereby<sup>5</sup>.

3 R v Russell-Jones [1995] 3 All ER 239, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 538, CA. The defence cannot always be expected to call witnesses of the primary facts whom the prosecution has discarded. For example, the evidence they may give, albeit at variance with other evidence called by the Crown, may well be detrimental to the defence case. If what a witness of the primary facts has to say is properly regarded by the prosecution as being incapable of belief, or as some of the authorities say 'incredible', then his evidence cannot help the jury assess the overall picture of the crucial events; hence, it is not unfair that he should not be called: R v Russell-Jones supra at 545 per Kennedy LJ.

4 R v Russell-Jones [1995] 3 All ER 239, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 538, CA. There is nothing to prevent the prosecution calling a witness if it does not regard the whole of his evidence as reliable; provided that it considers that part of the evidence is credible, it is a proper exercise of its discretion to call the witness, although it may not rely on the other parts; in such a case the jury should be directed about the special need for caution in relation to the reliability of the witness: R v Cairns, R v Zaidi, R v Choudhury [2002] EWCA Crim 2838, [2003] 1 Cr App Rep 662. The prosecution is not obliged to call the makers of witness statements served on the defence as unused material: R v Richardson (1993) 98 Cr App Rep 174, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1311. Trial of person with insufficient command of English.

1311. Trial of person with insufficient command of English.

The language of the court is English<sup>1</sup>. Unless a defendant fully comprehends the charge against him, its full implications and the ways in which a defence may be raised to it, and, in addition, is able to give full instructions to his solicitor and counsel so that a court can be sure that he has pleaded with a full and understanding mind, a proper plea will not have been tendered to the court, and any 'trial' will be a nullity<sup>2</sup>. Where a person with insufficient command of the language is on trial and is not represented by counsel, the evidence must be translated to him; he cannot waive compliance with this rule<sup>3</sup>. Where he is represented by counsel, the evidence should still to be translated to him unless he or his counsel expresses a wish to dispense with the translation and the trial judge thinks fit to allow this omission; the judge should not allow such omission unless he is of opinion that, in view of what has passed before the trial, the defendant substantially understands the nature of the evidence that is going to be given against him; any substantial variation from the account originally given in a statement or deposition, or any additional evidence, should be translated to the defendant, even though he may be indifferent about the matter or may not wish it<sup>4</sup>.

1 In legal proceedings in Wales the Welsh language may be used by any party, witness or other person who desires to use it: Welsh Language Act 1993 s 22(1). As to the use of the Welsh language in courts in Wales see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.23.1-III.23.13, CA. If a defendant in a court in England asks to give or call evidence in the Welsh language the case should not be transferred to Wales. The cost of employing an interpreter is payable out of central funds and may not be treated as costs of any party to the proceedings: see the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 ss 19(3)(b), 21(5). As to payment out of central funds see PARA 2058 et seq post. See also Wei Hai Restaurant Ltd v Kingston upon Hull City Council [2001] EWHC Admin 490, 166 JP 185, DC (refusal of magistrates' court to appoint an interpreter during defence case did not render trial unfair where no prior indication of need for interpreter, and no evidence that defence case had in fact been prejudiced).

Where there is an issue as to whether the defendant has sufficient understanding of the English language to follow the trial proceedings and to appreciate the consequences of his plea, the judge has a duty to verify the need for interpretation facilities with the defendant, and to satisfy himself as to the adequacy of the arrangements made; failure to do so is a violation of the right to a fair trial under the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) art 6(1) (right to a fair trial), taken together with art 6(3)(e) (right to interpreter): Cuscani v United Kingdom (2003) 36 EHRR 11, ECtHR. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1312. Close of case for the prosecution.

1312. Close of case for the prosecution.

When counsel for the prosecution has called all his witnesses, and tendered any documentary evidence or exhibits on which he proposes to rely, he must then close the prosecution case<sup>1</sup>.

Ordinarily, no further evidence may thereafter be adduced by the prosecution<sup>2</sup> (or raised by the prosecution in cross-examination of defence witnesses<sup>3</sup>) for the purpose of proving the defendant's guilt<sup>4</sup>. This is, however, a general principle of practice, rather than an absolute rule of law<sup>5</sup>, and the trial judge has discretion to permit the reopening of the prosecution case, either in response to a submission of no case to answer or in rebuttal of evidence adduced by the defence<sup>6</sup>.

1 At this point the defence may make a submission of no case to answer (see PARA 1313 post) or proceed with the defence case but is not obliged to call any evidence. See PARA 1314 et seq post.

2 R v Frost (1839) 4 State Tr NS 85; R v Rice [1963] 1 QB 857, 867, 47 Cr App Rep 79, 85, CCA, per Winn J; R v Pilcher (1974) 60 Cr App Rep 1, CA; R v Francis [1991] 1 All ER 225, 91 Cr App Rep 271, CA.

3 R v Kane (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 270, CA. On the other hand, a statement made by one of several co-defendants can undoubtedly be used by the Crown, in cross-examining him, as a tool to extract from him in the form of evidence upon oath all that he has formerly said against any co-defendant: R v Rice [1963] 1 QB 857, 47 Cr App Rep 79, CCA.

4 A distinction may thus be drawn (but often with some difficulty) between cases in which the prosecution seeks to introduce further evidence of guilt through cross-examination of defence witnesses (as in R v Kane (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 270, CA) and cases in which cross-examination is directed solely as to credit (see R v Halford (1978) 67 Cr App Rep 318, CA).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ii) Case for the Prosecution/1313. Submission of no case to answer.

1313. Submission of no case to answer.

At the close of the case for the prosecution the defendant, or, if he is represented, his counsel, may submit that there is no case to go to the jury<sup>1</sup>. This submission of no case to answer may properly be made and upheld: (1) if there is no evidence to prove that the crime has been committed by the defendant; or (2) where there is some evidence but it is of a tenuous character and, taken at its highest, it is such that a jury properly directed could not properly convict on it<sup>2</sup>. In these circumstances it is the judge's duty, on a submission being made, to stop the case<sup>3</sup>. Where, however, the Crown's evidence is such that its strength or weakness depends on the view to be taken of a witness's reliability, or other matters which are generally speaking within the province of the jury, then the judge should allow the matter to be tried by the jury<sup>4</sup>. Borderline cases may safely be left to the discretion of the judge<sup>5</sup>.

If such a submission is upheld by the trial judge in respect of a particular count, the rule is of no effect whilst the prosecution is able to take any of the following steps: (a) to inform the court that it intends to appeal; or (b) to request an adjournment to consider whether to appeal, and after the adjournment to inform the court that it intends to appeal<sup>6</sup>. Subject to this, it is the duty of the trial judge to direct a verdict of not guilty on the relevant count<sup>7</sup>. Even though no formal verdict is taken then and there, the defendant in respect of whom such a submission has succeeded on one of several counts is to be treated during the rest of the trial as being no longer charged on that count<sup>8</sup>. A submission of no case should be made in the absence of the jury<sup>9</sup>. When, after hearing the submission, the trial judge decides that the case should proceed, he should not comment on this to the jury<sup>10</sup>. He should, however, in the absence of the jury, give brief reasons for his decision<sup>11</sup>.

If at the close of the prosecution case there is no evidence to go to the jury, but no submission to that effect is made, the jury may still convict if what was wanting in the prosecution case is supplied by evidence adduced by the defence; and this is so whether the defendant was represented or not<sup>12</sup>. If a submission of no case is wrongly rejected by the trial judge, the conviction may be quashed as unsafe; if, following the wrongful rejection of the submission, the defence calls evidence, the Court of Appeal will not look at that evidence and dismiss the appeal on the basis of it<sup>13</sup>.

If, at the conclusion of the evidence, the trial judge is of the opinion that no reasonable jury properly directed could safely convict, he should raise the matter for discussion with counsel even if no submission of no case to answer is made. If having heard submissions he is of the same opinion, he should withdraw the case from the jury<sup>14</sup>.

The jury is entitled at common law to decide at any time after the close of the prosecution case that it does not need to hear further evidence as to the indictment as a whole or one or more counts, in which case it may acquit (but not convict) the defendant forthwith on the whole indictment or one or more counts (as the case may be). The judge may remind the jury of this entitlement to stop the case, but he may not go further and invite them to do so<sup>15</sup>.

consider the issue at the end of the case for the defence, in the light of the evidence called for the defence: R v Ramsey [2000] 6 Archbold News 3, CA. See also R v Brown [2001] EWCA Crim 961, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 46, CA (judge has a duty to withdraw case from jury at any time after close of prosecution case if satisfied that there is no case to answer, whether or not a submission of no case has been made).

Where the defendant is charged in the same proceedings with an offence of murder or manslaughter and with an offence under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 (see PARA 107 ante) in respect of the same death, the question whether there is a case for the defendant to answer on the charge of murder or manslaughter is not to be considered before the close of all the evidence (or, if at some earlier time he ceases to be charged with the s 5 offence, before that earlier time): s 6(1), (4).

2 See R v Galbraith [1981] 2 All ER 1060, 73 Cr App Rep 124, CA (disapproving dicta of Lawton LJ in R v Mansfield [1978] 1 All ER 134, 65 Cr App Rep 276, CA, and preferring R v Barker (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 287, CA). Where there are alternative charges, such as counts for stealing and dishonest handling against the same defendant in respect of the same property, the proper course in almost every case will be to allow both charges to proceed and be ultimately decided by the jury: R v Plain [1967] 1 All ER 614 at 615, 51 Cr App Rep 91 at 93, CA, per Winn LJ; R v Bellman [1989] AC 836, [1989] 1 All ER 22, HL. Where no submission of no case to answer is made, when it should have been, and evidence is thereafter forthcoming of the defendant's guilt, the Court of Appeal will not regard the conviction as unsafe on the ground that, had the submission been made, it ought to have been upheld; the judge is not obliged or entitled to interfere with counsel's responsibility in the absence of improper or irregular conduct: R v Juett [1981] Crim LR 113, CA.

The practice of reminding the jury of its entitlement is very occasionally exercised and is not one which the Court of Appeal encourages on the ground that if the judge is not prepared to stop the case he should not try to cast the responsibility on to the jury: R v Falconer-Atlee supra; R v Kemp supra. Only the judge may remind the jury of its entitlement; thus counsel for the defendant has no right to do so: R v Speechley [2004] EWCA Crim 3067, [2005] Crim LR 811.

(iii) Case for the Defence

1314. Defendant as a witness.

If there is no successful submission that there is insufficient evidence to go to the jury<sup>1</sup>, it is for the defendant, if he so wishes, to give evidence. If he decides to give evidence, he must do so on oath and is liable to cross-examination<sup>2</sup>. Where a defendant is unrepresented, the trial judge must at the conclusion of the evidence and in the presence of the jury inform him in the approved way: (1) of his right to give evidence on oath (and that he is liable to be cross-examined if he does); (2) that, if he does not give evidence or, having been sworn, without good cause refuses to answer any question, the jury may draw such inferences as appear proper; (3) of his right to call witnesses in his own defence; and (4) of his right afterwards to address the jury (but not to give evidence at that stage)<sup>3</sup>.

Where the only witness to the facts of the case called by the defence is the person charged, he must be called as a witness immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution<sup>4</sup>. If, at the trial of any person for an offence, the defence intends to call two or more witnesses to the facts of the case, and those witnesses include the defendant, the defendant must be called before the other witness or witnesses unless the court in its discretion otherwise directs<sup>5</sup>.

Where counsel for the defendant, or the defendant himself if he is unrepresented by counsel, calls witnesses other than the defendant, he has a right to open his case before calling the evidence; in exercising this right he is not limited to outlining his own case, but is entitled to open fully, commenting on the prosecution evidence if he so desires<sup>6</sup>.

If there are more than one defendant, they address the jury, cross-examine witnesses and give evidence in the order in which their names appear on the indictment, or in any other order which the trial judge thinks proper<sup>7</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iii) Case for the Defence/1315. Defence witnesses.

1315. Defence witnesses.

After the defendant has given evidence<sup>1</sup>, or forthwith, if he does not himself give evidence, the witnesses for the defence are called and examined<sup>2</sup>; they may be cross-examined by counsel for the prosecution<sup>3</sup>. Where two or more defendants are being tried together, and one calls a witness whose evidence may affect another defendant, that other may cross-examine the witness<sup>4</sup>.

The defendant is entitled to have his defence, however improbable, put to the jury by his counsel, whose task may be rendered impossible if he is constantly subjected to interruptions<sup>5</sup>. Thus examination-in-chief by counsel for the defendant should not be interrupted by cross-examination from the judge<sup>6</sup>, and this applies also to cross-examination of witnesses whether called by the prosecution or by the defence<sup>7</sup>. If, by reason of the conduct of the judge<sup>8</sup>, or by reason of the frequency and nature of his interruptions<sup>9</sup>, counsel for the defence has been deprived of the opportunity of putting the defence fairly before the jury or the defendant or a witness for the defence has effectively been prevented from giving his evidence in his own way, the conviction may be quashed<sup>10</sup>. The judge should, however, do his utmost to restrain unnecessarily prolonged cross-examination<sup>11</sup> and counsel should exercise in the interests of justice as a whole a proper discretion so as not to prolong cases unnecessarily<sup>12</sup>.

1 See PARAS 1314 ante, 1443 et seq post.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iii) Case for the Defence/1316. Fresh evidence for the prosecution after close of case.

1316. Fresh evidence for the prosecution after close of case.

The general rule is that the prosecution may adduce no further evidence of the defendant's guilt after the closure of its case, either in response to a submission of no case to answer or in response to evidence adduced by the defence<sup>1</sup>; but this is not an absolute rule and the trial judge has a discretion to permit a reopening of the prosecution case where it is in the interests of justice to do so<sup>2</sup>.

There are, in particular, three well-recognised circumstances in which it may be appropriate to exercise this discretion in favour of the prosecution. The first is where what has been inadvertently omitted is a mere formality as distinct from a central issue in the case<sup>3</sup>. The second is where the defence has raised evidence or issues that could not reasonably have been anticipated by the prosecution or included in the original prosecution case<sup>4</sup>. The third<sup>5</sup> is where new evidence of guilt has become available for the first time after the closure of the prosecution case<sup>6</sup>. The discretion is nevertheless flexible and cannot be rigidly constrained within set categories<sup>7</sup>, but the earlier the application to admit the further evidence is made, the more likely it is that the discretion will be exercised in favour of the prosecution<sup>8</sup>; and no evidence for the prosecution may be called after the judge has begun his summing up<sup>9</sup>.

1 See PARAS 1312-1313 ante. As to evidence concerning only the credibility of the defendant or of other defence witnesses see R v Halford (1978) 67 Cr App Rep 318, CA; and PARA 1312 ante.

4 'The Crown . . . cannot afterwards support their case by calling fresh witnesses because they are met by certain evidence that contradicts it . . . but if any matter arises ex improviso which no human ingenuity can foresee . . . there seems to me no reason why the matter . . . may not be answered by contrary evidence on the part of the Crown . . .': R v Frost (1839) 4 State Tr NS 85 at 386 per Tindall CJ. See also R v Owen [1952] 2 QB 362, 36 Cr App Rep 16, CCA; R v Flynn (1957) 42 Cr App Rep 15, CCA; R v Milliken (1969) 53 Cr App Rep 330, CA; R v Scott (1984) 79 Cr App Rep 49, CA. Contrast R v Day [1940] 1 All ER 402, 27 Cr App Rep 168, CCA, in which there was no justification for permitting the prosecution to reopen its case given that the nature of the defence case had been entirely foreseeable. As to pre-trial disclosure obligations now imposed on the defence see PARA 1383 et seq post.

5 In R v Francis [1991] 1 All ER 225, 91 Cr App Rep 271, Lloyd LJ refers to just two 'well-established' circumstances, but the third is now also well-established.

6 R v Doran (1972) 56 Cr App Rep 429, CA; R v Patel [1992] Crim LR 739, CA. In James v South Glamorgan County Council (1994) 99 Cr App Rep 321, DC, the prosecution was permitted to reopen its case to adduce the evidence of a witness who had initially been unable to find the court building.

7 See R v Francis [1991] 1 All ER 225 at 228 per Lloyd LJ ('We refrain from defining precisely the limit of that discretion since we cannot foresee all of the circumstances in which it might fall to be exercised . . .'). It was suggested in R v Francis supra that in cases not falling within established exceptions the discretion to permit reopening of the prosecution case should be exercised only 'on the rarest of occasions', but in R v Munnery (1990) 94 Cr App Rep 164, 172, CA, it was said that this proposition 'might have been stated in less restrictive terms'. See also R v Bowles [1992] Crim LR 726, CA.

8 In particular, it is easier to justify the reopening of the prosecution case if the defence case has not yet been opened: R v Munnery (1990) 94 Cr App Rep 164; Saunders v Johns [1965] Crim LR 49, DC.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iii) Case for the Defence/1317. Closing speeches of counsel.

1317. Closing speeches of counsel.

After the close of the evidence for the defendant, or the last of several defendants, or, if rebutting evidence is permitted, after the close of that evidence, prosecuting counsel has the right to address the jury a second time, and counsel for the defendant or, if he is unrepresented, the defendant himself<sup>1</sup>, has the right of reply<sup>2</sup>. Where a defendant who is unrepresented gives evidence himself but calls no other witnesses, counsel for the prosecution is not allowed to address the jury a second time<sup>3</sup>; and a fortiori the same rule applies where such a defendant not only does not call any other witnesses, but does not give evidence himself<sup>4</sup>. When a defendant is represented by counsel but neither gives evidence himself nor calls any witnesses, prosecuting counsel may address the jury a second time but the right to do so should be used sparingly<sup>5</sup>. The fact that a co-defendant is unrepresented does not deprive prosecuting counsel of the right to make a closing speech in relation to a represented defendant; in such circumstances, however, the speech must focus on the evidence relating to the represented defendant<sup>6</sup>.

In making his closing speech, prosecuting counsel may comment on the evidence of the defendant, if he has given evidence<sup>7</sup>, or on his failure to give evidence, if he has not<sup>8</sup>; but he may not comment on the failure of the wife or husband or civil partner of the defendant to give evidence<sup>9</sup>, nor should he comment on the failure of the defendant to call other witnesses unless the circumstances are such that it might be fairly expected that those witnesses could and would be called<sup>10</sup>. Although prosecuting counsel in closing may not invite the jury to infer evidence contrary to that given by the sole prosecution witness<sup>11</sup>, he may point to any inconsistencies between a prosecution witness and other prosecution evidence or indicate matters on which a prosecution witness's evidence might be unreliable<sup>12</sup>. Prosecuting counsel may comment in his final speech to the jury on all the issues arising in the case, including the possibility of alternative verdicts<sup>13</sup>, but he should not comment on the potentially serious consequences to a police officer of his evidence being disbelieved<sup>14</sup>.

Counsel for the defendant is not restricted merely to observations on the evidence of his witnesses; whatever occurs to him as desirable to mention on the whole case, he is at liberty to say<sup>15</sup>. He may, for example, advance hypotheses, even beyond his client's version of the case, provided that there is other evidence in the case to support such hypotheses<sup>16</sup>, or comment on the fact that a co-defendant who has run a defence conflicting with his client's has not given evidence<sup>17</sup>. Defence counsel should not refer to the likely consequences of a conviction in terms of sentence<sup>18</sup>, nor should he invite the jury to add a recommendation of mercy if it returns a verdict of guilty<sup>19</sup>.

It is inadvisable for counsel to attempt to give an explanation of the rules governing the return of a majority verdict<sup>20</sup>; nor should counsel read passages from the law reports to juries<sup>21</sup>.

Where the judge has interrupted a line of questioning because it related to inadmissible evidence, the counsel concerned must not refer in his closing speech to the matter in respect of which the line of questioning was prohibited<sup>22</sup>.

Generally speaking, it is preferable for a judge not to interrupt a speech by counsel in the presence of the jury, although exceptionally it may be necessary<sup>23</sup>.

Although final speeches are not normally recorded, where it becomes apparent that important exchanges are to take place during them, the shorthand writer should be summoned so that these exchanges may be recorded<sup>24</sup>.

1 The defendant's right to make a closing address to the jury may not, however, be used to frustrate the trial and is conditional on the defendant using that right for the purpose of advancing the course of justice and for the proper conduct of the trial: R v Morley [1988] QB 601, [1988] 2 All ER 396, CA.

2 See the Criminal Procedure (Right of Reply) Act 1964 s 1. The defence always has the right of reply, ie the right to the last speech, and the position is not affected by the fact that a law officer appears for the Crown: see s 1.

It seems that a distinction is technically to be drawn between the closing speeches of counsel and the right, stemming from the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 2 (as amended), of counsel on each side to sum up their respective cases, but the practice of prosecuting counsel summing up his case at the close of his evidence has fallen into desuetude: see PARA 1315 ante.

A defendant cannot have the assistance of counsel to examine witnesses and reserve to himself the right of addressing the jury: R v White (1811) 3 Camp 98.

3 R v Pink [1971] 1 QB 508 at 510, 55 Cr App Rep 16 at 18, CA, per Megaw LJ. 5 R v Bryant, R v Oxley [1979] QB 108, 67 Cr App Rep 157, CA. See also R v Francis [1988] Crim LR 250, CA. Where all of a number of defendants are represented by counsel and none of them gives evidence, but evidence is called on behalf of one of them which may assist one or more of the other defendants, prosecuting counsel is entitled to comment in his closing speech on the cases of those other defendants: R v Bryant, R v Oxley supra (approving R v Trevelli (1882) 15 Cox CC 289).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iii) Case for the Defence/1318. Power of judge to call witness.

1318. Power of judge to call witness.

The trial judge has the power<sup>1</sup> to call a witness not called by either the prosecution or the defence, without their consent, if he considers that course is necessary in the interests of justice<sup>2</sup>; but he should not call such a witness after the evidence for the defence is closed, except in a matter arising unexpectedly<sup>3</sup>, and only where no injustice or prejudice could be caused to the defendant<sup>4</sup>. Once the summing up is concluded, no further evidence ought to be introduced to the jury<sup>5</sup> except in very exceptional circumstances in favour of the defence<sup>6</sup>.

The trial judge is entitled to ask a witness, at any stage of the proceedings, questions directed to ascertain whether he has a sense of responsibility and of the obligations imposed by an oath<sup>7</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iv) The Summing Up/1319. Judge's summing up.

(iv) The Summing Up

1319. Judge's summing up.

At the close of counsel's speeches<sup>1</sup> the trial judge sums up the case to the jury, reminding it of the case on each side and giving it directions on the matters in issue and on the points of law applicable<sup>2</sup>, and such other assistance as may help it to reach a verdict. The summing up must be neutral; it must reflect the case which has been put to the jury as a balanced whole<sup>3</sup>. Every summing up must be regarded in the light of the course and conduct of the trial and the matters raised by counsel for the prosecution and the defence respectively<sup>4</sup>. The guidelines in the specimen directions drawn up by the Judicial Studies Board have been commended by the Court of Appeal to those who have to try criminal cases<sup>5</sup>. A summing up does not follow a stereotyped pattern, nor need it contain any set form of words. Every case has its own features and the summing up must be related to its features and to its particular problems<sup>6</sup>. The specimen directions of the Judicial Studies Board often require an adaptation to the circumstances of a particular case and, above all, are not intended to offer solutions to vexed questions of law<sup>7</sup>.

In a complicated case there is no objection to the judge splitting his summing up into parts and taking verdicts in relation to each part as he proceeds, although this course is unusual<sup>8</sup>. Occasionally, in a complicated case it can be advantageous for a judge to supplement his summing up by giving the jury written directions or questions<sup>9</sup>. He should give such directions or questions to counsel for consideration in ample time before closing speeches, to enable counsel to invite the judge to correct any errors and to enable them to fashion their closing speeches with the proposed directions in mind, and he should use them as an integral part of the summing up, referring the jury to them as he deals with the points orally<sup>10</sup>.

In a lengthy and complicated case it is incumbent on the judge to deal with the evidence; conversely, however, in a case which has not occupied a great deal of time and in which the issue of guilt or innocence can be simply and clearly stated, it is not a fatal defect in the summing up that the evidence has not been discussed<sup>11</sup>.

It is the duty of the trial judge to ensure that members of the jury understand that responsibility for the verdict is theirs and not his<sup>12</sup>. Subject to that consideration, the judge is entitled to make such comments on the evidence as he thinks proper, whether in favour of the prosecution or of the defence<sup>13</sup>; but he must strike a fair balance between the prosecution case and the defence case<sup>14</sup>. The judge should not comment on the consequences of the conviction<sup>15</sup>, but if he does this will not necessarily make the conviction unsafe<sup>16</sup>.

The fact that on the evidence, including the evidence of the defendant himself, only one verdict is possible, does not justify the trial judge in directing the jury to convict; he may give the defendant an opportunity, in the absence of the jury, to change his plea; but, if the defendant maintains his plea, he is entitled to the verdict of a jury even though an acquittal would seem perverse to the judge, and the judge's language, however strong, must fall short of a direction to convict<sup>17</sup>.

When summing up in a case involving disputed identity, the judge should:

- 2136 (1) warn the jury of the special need for caution before convicting on the evidence of identification;
- 2137 (2) direct the jury to examine closely the circumstances in which the identification was made;
- 2138 (3) leave the identification evidence to the jury only where the quality of the evidence is good; where the quality is not good and there was no evidence to support the evidence of identification, the judge should withdraw the case from the jury and order an acquittal;
- 2139 (4) identify to the jury the evidence capable of supporting the evidence of identification, which need not be corroborative evidence in the strict legal sense;
- 2140 (5) explain the circumstances in which a rejected alibi could amount to support for identification evidence<sup>18</sup>.

Failure to follow these guidelines may lead to a conviction being quashed<sup>19</sup>. A direction to the effect that the fact that an alibi is false does not mean that a defendant is guilty is not an essential part of the summing up whenever an alibi is questioned<sup>20</sup>.

The judge is entitled to comment on any matter given in evidence; he is not limited to the matters argued by counsel<sup>21</sup>. Thus, for example, the judge may refer to any defence to the charge which is raised on the evidence, even though it has not been relied on by defence counsel<sup>22</sup> and even though this may affect the line of argument adopted by the defence<sup>23</sup>.

A judge should put a defence requiring proof by the defendant to the jury in the face of defence objections only in rare and exceptional circumstances<sup>24</sup>.

If he is to introduce an issue into the summing up which has not been actively canvassed in the course of the hearing, a judge should at least give ample warning of his intention so to do to counsel in the absence of the jury before addresses are begun, so that there can be discussion between the judge and counsel as to the rightness of the course to be adopted by the judge, and an opportunity given to counsel to deal with the issue in their addresses to the jury<sup>25</sup>.

Prosecuting counsel is under a duty to draw any possible errors or omissions (of fact or of law) to the judge's attention at the close of the summing up<sup>26</sup>. Defence counsel is not so obliged<sup>27</sup>, and if he remains silent and then takes the point on appeal the appeal will not necessarily be dismissed<sup>28</sup>.

When, after the retirement of the jury, counsel wishes to draw the judge's attention to an omission in the summing up, the matter should be raised and discussed and decided in open court in the presence of the shorthand writer<sup>29</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iv) The Summing Up/1320. Directions on burden and standard of proof.

1320. Directions on burden and standard of proof.

The summing up must contain an adequate direction as to the burden and standard of proof<sup>1</sup>; and this is so whether or not counsel have dealt with either matter in addressing the jury<sup>2</sup>. It is usually best to deal with the burden and standard of proof towards the start of the summing up<sup>3</sup>. No particular form of words is mandatory or sacrosanct<sup>4</sup>, and directions must where necessary be tailored to the circumstances of the case, but judges are well advised to follow where possible the form of direction suggested by the Judicial Studies Board<sup>5</sup>.

In the usual kind of case where the entire burden of proof rest upon the prosecution, the direction should state this fact and emphasise that the defendant does not have to prove his innocence<sup>6</sup>. Where the defendant relies upon an alibi, mistake or accident in order to deny the offence, or relies upon an affirmative defence (such as self-defence, provocation or duress) on which he does not incur any persuasive burden of proof, it must be emphasised to the jury that it is for the prosecution to negative or disprove such a denial or defence and not for the defendant to convince them of its truth<sup>7</sup>.

The jury should be told that the prosecution must succeed in proving the defendant's guilt so that the jury is 'sure' of it (or sure 'beyond reasonable doubt'<sup>8</sup>), and that 'nothing less than that will do'. It is rarely advisable for a judge to attempt any explanation as to what is meant by being 'sure' or what amounts to a 'reasonable doubt'<sup>9</sup>.

In cases where the defendant bears a persuasive burden of proof (for example, in respect of a defence such as insanity or diminished responsibility), a more elaborate direction will be required<sup>10</sup>. The judge must first explain the need for the prosecution to prove those facts upon which it still bears the burden of proof. The jury should then be directed that if, and only if, it is sure of those matters, it must go on to consider whether the defendant can prove his defence on all the evidence. The judge must at this point explain the lower standard of proof which applies to the defence<sup>11</sup>.

The judge should direct the jury in every case on the need for unanimity, while at the same time informing the jury in the approved formula<sup>12</sup> of the possibility of returning a majority verdict<sup>13</sup> where certain circumstances arise<sup>14</sup>.

3 See R v Yap Chuan Ching (1976) 63 Cr App Rep 7 at 9, CA. There is no particular magic in the order in which topics are covered: judges must assess the order which is most appropriate for the specific case in hand (Judicial Studies Board, Crown Court Bench Book: Specimen Directions).

5 See the Crown Court Bench Book: Specimen Direction No 2.

6 As to the inclusion within a summing up of comment on a defendant's failure to testify in his defence or call particular witnesses see PARA 1557 post.

7 'If there is any danger of the jury thinking that an alibi, because it is called a defence, raises some burden on the defence to establish it, then clearly it is the duty of the judge to give a specific direction to the jury in regard to how they should approach the alibi': R v Wood (No 2) (1967) 52 Cr App Rep 74 at 78, CCA, per Lord Parker CJ. See also R v Cameron [1973] Crim LR 520, CA; R v Abraham [1973] 3 All ER 694, [1973] 1 WLR 1270, CA; R v Williams [1987] 3 All ER 411, 78 Cr App Rep 276, CA; R v McPherson (1957) 41 Cr App Rep 213, CCA; R v Cascoe [1970] 2 All ER 833, 54 Cr App Rep 401, CA.

8 It is not usually necessary to use the phrase 'beyond reasonable doubt'. Where, however, it has already been used in the trial (eg by counsel in speeches to the jury), it is desirable to give the following direction: 'the prosecution must make you sure of guilt, which is the same as proving the case beyond reasonable doubt' (Crown Court Bench Book: Specimen Direction No 2).

9 See R v Yap Chuan Ching (1976) 63 Cr App Rep 7 at 11, CA ('If judges stopped trying to define that which is almost impossible to define there would be fewer appeals'); R v Stephens [2002] All ER (D) 34 (Jun), (2002) Times, 27 June, CA (in which the Court of Appeal advised that it was unhelpful for a judge to distinguish between being 'sure' and being 'certain'). It is apparently permissible to tell a jury that a reasonable doubt is the sort of doubt that might affect the mind of a person dealing with matters of importance in his own affairs: Walters v R [1969] 2 AC 26; R v Gray (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 177, CA; R v Stephens supra. For an alternative explanation of the criminal standard of proof see Miller v Ministry of Pensions [1947] 2 All ER 372 at 373 per Denning J.

10 As to the circumstances in which the defence bears a persuasive burden of proof see PARA 1370 post. Where issues of both insanity and automatism arise, the summing up should distinguish these issues, particularly with regard to the different burdens of proof that are involved. See R v Burns (1973) 58 Cr App Rep 364, CA.

11 A possible formula to adopt here is: 'He does not have to make you sure of it. He has to show that it is probable, which means it is more likely than not, that eg he had reasonable excuse etc for doing it. If you decide that probably he did [eg have a reasonable excuse etc for doing it], you must find him Not Guilty. If you decide that he did not, then providing that the prosecution has made you sure of what it has to prove, you must find him Guilty': Crown Court Bench Book: Specimen Direction No 2.

12 Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, CA, states: 'Before the jury retire . . . the judge should direct the jury in some such words as the following: 'As you may know, the law permits me, in certain circumstances, to accept a verdict which is not the verdict of you all. Those circumstances have not as yet arisen, so that when you retire I must ask you to reach a verdict upon which each one of you is agreed. Should, however, the time come when it is possible for me to accept a majority verdict, I will give you a further direction: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.46.1, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iv) The Summing Up/1321. Putting the defence and other possible defences.

1321. Putting the defence and other possible defences.

The summing up must fairly and adequately identify and put the defence before the jury<sup>1</sup>, and the jury must not agree on a guilty verdict before hearing what the judge has to say about the defence<sup>2</sup>.

Whatever may be the line of defence adopted by counsel, the trial judge should ordinarily put to the jury any possible defences as appear to arise on the evidence, even though they were not adduced or relied upon by counsel<sup>3</sup>. This may mean directing the jury on a partial defence, such as provocation on a charge of murder, when the defendant has denied any responsibility for or involvement in the offence<sup>4</sup>. Only in rare and exceptional cases, however, should the judge introduce before the jury an 'alternative' defence on which the defendant bears the persuasive burden of proof<sup>5</sup>.

In cases where there is a conflict between the defence statement and the defendant's evidence at trial, a specific direction must be given by the judge to the jury on how to approach that inconsistency<sup>6</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(iv) The Summing Up/1323. Summing up in case of a number of defendants.

1323. Summing up in case of a number of defendants.

In a case involving a number of defendants, the judge, in summing up, should carefully distinguish between the cases of each<sup>1</sup>. Where the jury hears a confession by a defendant which implicates a co-defendant, the judge must also impress upon the jury the fact that the statement of any one defendant not made on oath in the course of the trial is not evidence against any other and must be entirely disregarded<sup>2</sup>.

Where one defendant gives evidence at the trial which implicates another, the jury should at least be warned of the special need for caution in respect of such evidence because a co-defendant's evidence may be motivated by self-interest<sup>3</sup>.

In a long and complex case with a number of defendants the judge may sum up the case against each and allow the jury to retire to consider its verdict in respect of each separately, returning to hear the summing up in respect of the next defendants and then again retiring<sup>4</sup>. This practice should not, however, be followed where it may be unfair to one or more of the defendants<sup>5</sup>.

Many or most cases where defendants give evidence against each other would require four directions: (1) the jury should consider the case for and against each defendant separately; (2) the jury should decide the case on all the evidence, including the evidence of each defendant's co-defendant; (3) when considering the evidence of a co-defendant, the jury should bear in mind that he might have an interest to serve or, as it is often put, an axe to grind; and (4) the jury should assess the evidence of co-defendants in the same way as that of the evidence of any other witness in the case: R v Jones, R v Jenkins supra.

1325. Evidence in the absence of jury.

It should be regarded as most exceptional that any evidence should be given in a trial otherwise than in the presence of the jury<sup>1</sup>. There are exceptions to this rule, notably that the judge may order that any evidence with regard to whether a confession was properly made ought to be given in the absence of the jury, whether or not the defence consents to this<sup>2</sup>. Any question arising in legal proceedings relating to the interpretation or effect of European Community provisions is to be treated as a question of law, whether it is one or not, and therefore is for determination by the judge alone and may be heard in the absence of the jury<sup>3</sup>.

Where the trial judge wishes to commend a witness for his actions in connection with the offence being tried, or to reward a witness by ordering<sup>4</sup> a payment of money to him out of public funds, he should do so in the absence of the jury<sup>5</sup>.

Other exceptions to the rule that evidence should be given in the presence of the jury relate eg to the admissibility of identification evidence (see PARA 1457 post) or of res gestae statements (see PARA 1530 post), whether the jury should be directed that it may draw adverse inferences against a defendant who fails to give evidence (see PARA 1555 post) and the questioning by the judge of a hostile or unwilling witness (see PARA 1436 post). ### 1326. View by jury.

The jury may have a view of the locus in quo<sup>1</sup> at any time during the trial if the trial judge thinks that a view would be of service to the jury<sup>2</sup>. All participating members of the court (that is, the judge, the jury, the parties<sup>3</sup>, their counsel and the shorthand writer) should be present at a view, and the judge should be present to control proceedings, whether it is a simple view without witnesses being present or a view with witnesses present who give evidence<sup>4</sup> or a demonstration<sup>5</sup>. All members of the jury must be present; it is an irregularity for one or some jurors to attend a view<sup>6</sup>. The irregular conduct of a view or inspection may vitiate a trial<sup>7</sup>.

1 Criminal Procedure Rules may make provision as respects views by jurors; and the places to which a juror may be called on to go to view cannot be restricted to any particular county or other area: Juries Act 1974 s 14 (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 173). At the date at which this volume states the law no such provision had been made.

(vi) Adjournment of Trial

1327. Adjournment and separation of jury.

The court may adjourn the hearing of a criminal case from day to day or for part of a day<sup>1</sup>.

During such adjournments, the judge may, if he thinks fit, permit members of the jury to separate at any time<sup>2</sup>. On the first occasion when members of the jury separate, the judge should warn them not to talk about the case to anyone outside their number<sup>3</sup>.

The judge must not make public comments outside the court about the case since such comments are likely to be seen or heard by the jury<sup>4</sup>.

1 R v Castro (1874) LR 9 QB 350 at 356; R v Hardy (1794) 24 State Tr 199, 418. The hearing may be adjourned for the attendance of witnesses or the production of evidence: see R v Wenborn (1842) 6 Jur 267; R v Foster (1848) 3 Car & Kir 201; R v Fernandez (1861) 2 F & F 862n; R v Tempest (1858) 1 F & F 381; R v Jackson (1919) 83 JP 196, CCA. See, however, R v Parr (1862) 2 F & F 861; R v Robson (1864) 4 F & F 360. Refusal of an adjournment is a course to be followed with great caution where a defence witness is unavailable if the witness might have significant evidence to give and if the unavailability of the witness is due to no fault on the part of the defendant and his advisers: R v Ealing Justices, ex p Avondale [1999] Crim LR 840, DC. See also R v Bradford Justices, ex p Wilkinson [1990] 2 All ER 833, 91 Cr App Rep 390, DC; R v Bristol Magistrates' Court, ex p Rowles [1994] RTR 40, DC; R v Guildford Crown Court, ex p Flanighan [2000] 3 Archbold News 2, DC. As to bail during an adjournment see PARA 1304 ante.

Judges of the Crown Court may sit simultaneously to take any number of different cases in the same or in different places, and may adjourn cases from place to place at any time: Supreme Court Act 1981 s 78(2). As from a day to be appointed the Supreme Court Act 1981 is renamed the Senior Courts Act 1981: see the Constitutional Reform Act 2005 s 59(5), Sch 11 para 1 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

There is no rigid rule which prohibits adjournment of a criminal case so as to await a change in the law; but a qualitative judgment that the existing law is wanting in justice is not a legitimate basis for ordering an adjournment: R v Walsall Justices, ex p W (A Minor) [1990] 1 QB 253, [1989] 3 All ER 460, DC.

The power to grant an adjournment must not be exercised in a manner which undermines the statute under which the proceedings are brought or in a way which deprives a litigant of rights conferred by that statute: R v Dudley Magistrates' Court, ex p Hollis, Hollis v Dudley Metropolitan Borough Council, Probert v Dudley Metropolitan Borough Council [1998] 1 All ER 759, [1998] Env LR 354, DC.

3 R v Prime (1973) 57 Cr App Rep 632, CA. Contact between a juror and an outsider during an adjournment does not affect the validity of a trial unless it is shown by acceptable evidence that an attempt has been made to tamper with the juror: R v Prime supra (distinguishing R v Crippen [1911] 1 KB 149, 5 Cr App Rep 255, CCA).

(vii) Discharge of Jury During Trial

1328. Power to discharge jury.

The trial judge may discharge the jury at any stage of the trial<sup>1</sup> if he should deem it proper on grounds of evident necessity<sup>2</sup>, and may swear a fresh jury and start the case again<sup>3</sup>. Whether or not to discharge the jury is a matter for the judge's discretion<sup>4</sup> on the particular facts of the case. If a judge decides not to discharge a jury when the issue arises, the Court of Appeal will not lightly interfere with the exercise of that discretion on an appeal against conviction<sup>5</sup>, nor may the judge's decision be challenged by judicial review<sup>6</sup>. Where the judge decides to discharge the jury, that decision is not open to review by the Court of Appeal<sup>7</sup> or on an application for judicial review<sup>8</sup>.

Even where the judge wrongly exercises his discretion, that fact is no bar to the defendant being tried again before another jury<sup>9</sup>.

1 Where a jury has to consider more than one verdict, the judge may discharge a juror even after the jury has delivered one or more of its verdicts; the remaining jurors may thereafter return valid verdicts: R v Wood, R v Furey [1997] Crim LR 229, CA.

UPDATE

1328 Power to discharge jury

NOTE 6--Appointed day is 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(vii) Discharge of Jury During Trial/1329. Reasons for discharge during trial.

1329. Reasons for discharge during trial.

A jury may be discharged if any juror is guilty of misconduct<sup>1</sup>, and, in particular, if the jurors separate without the leave of the court<sup>2</sup>, eat or drink before the verdict at the expense of one of the parties<sup>3</sup>, hold communication with any person or receive evidence, oral or documentary, out of court<sup>4</sup>, determine their verdict by lot<sup>5</sup> or if a stranger was with them for a substantial time<sup>6</sup>.

It seems that it might be a good reason for discharging the jury<sup>7</sup> if undue pressure has been used to keep witnesses out of the way, or to influence them in giving or withholding their evidence or where witnesses are prevented from giving evidence by sudden accidents<sup>8</sup>. It is not a good ground for discharging a jury, however, that evidence for the Crown is not forthcoming or that a material witness for the Crown refuses to give evidence<sup>9</sup>; nor is it a sufficient ground for discharging a jury that a material adult witness is not sufficiently acquainted with the nature and obligation of an oath<sup>10</sup>.

The inadvertent admission of prejudicial evidence may result in the discharge of the jury<sup>11</sup>.

If counsel fails to apply for the jury to be discharged, that is not necessarily fatal to an appeal founded on improper admission of evidence, though it may bear on the question whether the defendant was really prejudiced; but it is not a proper use of counsel's discretion to raise no objection at the time in order to preserve a ground of objection for a possible appeal<sup>12</sup>.

1 Trial judges should ensure that the jury is alerted to the need to bring any concerns about the behaviour of fellow jurors or of others affecting the jurors at the time and not to wait until the case is concluded: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [1992] 3 All ER 904, [1992] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.42.6-IV.42.9, CA; Practice Direction (Crown Court: Guidance to Jurors) [2004] 1 WLR 665, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 3 at IV.42.6-IV.42.9, CA. If there is an indication of an irregularity caused by extraneous influences (eg contact with other persons who may have passed on information which should not have been before the jury) which raises a reasonable suspicion, the judge must investigate the matter: see R v Blackwell, R v Farley, R v Adams [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 625, CA; R v Oke [1997] Crim LR 898, CA.

Where it is apparent that there is friction between members of a jury, so that the inference could be drawn that certain members of the jury might not be able to perform their duty, the whole jury should be questioned in open court as to their capacity, as a body, to continue: R v Orgles [1993] 4 All ER 533, 98 Cr App Rep 185, CA. Circumstances that give rise to such a situation would be internal to the jury and are to be distinguished from external circumstances that might make it appropriate to question an individual juror: R v Orgles supra. The Contempt of Court Act 1981 s 8(1) (see CONTEMPT OF COURT vol 9(1) (Reissue) PARA 451) does not preclude the judge from conducting an investigation into matters such as bias or irregularity in the jury room (R v Connor, R v Mirza [2004] UKHL 2, [2004] 1 AC 1118, [2004] 1 All ER 925), but as a general rule it is contrary to common law for the judge to ask the jury questions, or receive evidence, about anything said in the course of the jury's deliberations while it is considering its verdict (R v Smith, R v Mercieca [2005] UKHL 12, [2005] 2 All ER 29, [2005] 1 WLR 704). An exception to this rule may exist if an allegation is made which tends to show that the jury as a whole declined to deliberate at all, but decided the case by other means such as drawing lots or tossing a coin. Such conduct would be a negation of the function of a jury and a trial whose result was determined in such a manner would not be a trial at all: see R v Connor, R v Mirza supra at [123] per Lord Hope of Craighead. Where an investigation is impermissible, the judge has the choice of either discharging the jury or giving it a further direction. However, it is incumbent on the judge to ensure that the further direction is apposite, clear, and as emphatic as the situation requires: R v Smith, R v Mercieca supra.

room); R v Goodson [1975] 1 All ER 760, [1975] 1 WLR 549, CA (conviction quashed because a juror had left the jury room to make a telephone call after the jury had retired). Jurors may now separate after retirement with the leave of the court (see PARA 1332 post) and the authorities should be read in the light of the fact that the long-standing rule against separation after retirement has been relaxed.

3 Jurors are now at the court's discretion allowed reasonable refreshment at their own expense: see PARA 1331 post.

1330. Effect of discharge during trial.

Except in very rare cases where the circumstances demand the reinstatement of the jury<sup>1</sup>, once the judge has discharged the jury<sup>2</sup>, it may not be recalled for the purpose of continuing the trial<sup>3</sup>.

The discharge of the jury does not amount to a verdict of acquittal and the defendant may therefore be remanded either on bail or in custody pending a fresh trial<sup>4</sup>; nor may the discharge of the jury found a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict since no formal verdict has been delivered<sup>5</sup>.

(viii) Verdict

1331. Retirement of jury.

At the conclusion of the summing up the members of the jury consider their verdict<sup>1</sup>.

The members of the jury may confer together then and there, but it is usual for a bailiff to be sworn and for the members of the jury to be conducted to their retiring room to consider their verdict<sup>2</sup>. The judge must direct the jury not to continue their deliberations outside the jury room<sup>3</sup>.

Although there is nothing to prevent the trial judge from exhorting the jury to reach a verdict<sup>4</sup>, it is a cardinal principle of the criminal law that, since the verdict of a jury involves the liberty of the subject, the jury must deliberate in complete and uninhibited freedom, uninfluenced by any extraneous consideration whatsoever<sup>5</sup>. The judge must avoid any hint of pressure on a jury to reach a verdict<sup>6</sup>.

1 The jury must have the benefit of the whole of the summing up before returning a verdict except where it is one of acquittal: R v Young [1964] 2 All ER 480, 48 Cr App Rep 292, CCA (premature verdict).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1332. Consideration of verdict.

1332. Consideration of verdict.

If he thinks fit, the judge may at any time after the jury has retired to consider its verdict, permit the jury to separate<sup>1</sup>.

The jury may not, when it has retired to consider its verdict, be given any additional evidence, any additional matter or material to assist it<sup>2</sup>. There is likewise a prohibition on the use of information, potentially relevant to the outcome of the case, privately obtained out of court by a juror<sup>3</sup>.

If the jury ask for exhibits not already in the jury room, the matter should be dealt with in open court; counsel should be given the opportunity to ensure that the exhibits can properly be seen by the jury<sup>4</sup>.

The jury may not be provided with equipment with which to conduct experiments<sup>5</sup>, but it may be provided with equipment which a person might normally have in his pocket when called to serve on a jury and which would not normally raise the possibility of use for experiments<sup>6</sup>.

A video recording of an interview with a child complainant or child witness may, at the judge's discretion, be replayed in open court after the jury's retirement, provided that a warning is given that other evidence cannot be replayed and that the jury is reminded of what the child said in cross-examination and re-examination<sup>7</sup>.

No one, other than the bailiff in whose custody they are, may visit the members of the jury in the jury room<sup>8</sup>. They must not be given further assistance or information except in open court from the trial judge in the presence of the defendant<sup>9</sup>.

1 See the Juries Act 1974 s 13 (substituted by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 43(1)). For guidance on the direction to be given to the jury when it is allowed to separate during consideration of its verdict see R v Oliver [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 514, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1333. Communications between judge and jury after summing up.

1333. Communications between judge and jury after summing up.

The jury is entitled after the conclusion of the summing up, whether before or after retiring, to seek further assistance from the trial judge either on matters of law or in relation to the evidence given in the course of the trial, provided that no further evidence is introduced<sup>1</sup>.

A written communication from the jury which raises something unconnected with the trial may be dealt with without reference to counsel and without bringing the jury back to court<sup>2</sup>. In almost every other case the judge should state in open court the nature and content of the communication which he has received and, if he considers it helpful to do so, should seek the assistance of counsel before the jury is asked to return to court<sup>3</sup>. When the members of the jury return, the judge should deal with their communication; but, where this contains information which need not and should not have been imparted, such as details of the jury's voting figures, the judge should not disclose such information, but should in all other respects deal with the communication in the normal way<sup>4</sup>.

If no evidence on the point raised by the jury has been given, it is the duty of the judge to tell the jury so; but, if the question relates to a matter on which evidence has been given, it is proper for the judge to remind the jury of it and to instruct the jury accordingly<sup>5</sup>. If, after retirement, the members of the jury show by a question that they appear to be assuming facts or drawing inferences for which there is no supporting evidence, further direction by the judge is called for, and they should be reminded how far the relevant evidence went<sup>6</sup>. Where a question shows that the members of the jury have forgotten or misunderstood the judge's direction on an important point, the judge must correct this<sup>7</sup>.

Where the jury indicates that it is in difficulty, whether or not as to law or as to fact, the judge must assist the jury<sup>8</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1334. Permissible verdicts.

1334. Permissible verdicts.

The verdict of the jury may be either a general verdict of guilty or not guilty on the whole charge, or a verdict of guilty on one part of the charge and not guilty on another part, or a special verdict<sup>1</sup>. Where several counts are joined in one indictment, a verdict must be taken separately on each count<sup>2</sup>. Where an indictment contains alternative counts, if the jury convicts on one count, it should be discharged from giving a verdict on the other<sup>3</sup>.

A verdict may be either unanimous or by a majority. It must be unanimous unless the trial judge, in accordance with statute<sup>4</sup>, has directed the jury that he will accept a majority verdict<sup>5</sup>.

Where the prosecution has put its case on the basis that the defendant might have committed the actus reus in one of two or more ways, it may be necessary to direct the members of the jury that, in order to convict, they must be unanimous (where a unanimous verdict is required) not only as to their verdict but also as to the basis for it<sup>6</sup>. Where, however, the prosecution alleges that on the evidence the defendant must have committed the offence in one of two ways (A and B), it will suffice if the members of the jury are agreed that this must have been the case, although some of them believe that it was mode A (and, if not, mode B) and the rest believe that it was mode B (and, if not, mode A)<sup>7</sup>. If the members of the jury are agreed that the defendant committed a number of acts with the relevant mens rea, and that one of them resulted in the offence, it is irrelevant that they are not sure which of those acts was the material one<sup>8</sup>.

If several defendants are tried together, unless there is some rule of law to the contrary, the jury may find one or more defendants guilty and another or others not guilty<sup>9</sup>, or it may agree on a verdict about one or more of them, returning such verdict in respect of these, and disagree about another or others, being discharged without giving a verdict in respect of those<sup>10</sup>. The jury is not entitled to disregard the judge's direction for a partial verdict and return only a general verdict<sup>11</sup>.

6 R v Brown (1983) 79 Cr App Rep 115, CA; R v Mitchell [1994] Crim LR 66, CA. Such a direction will only be necessary comparatively rarely, the appropriate case being where there is a realistic danger of some of the members of the jury finding one mode of commission proved and others another mode: R v Mitchell supra. Such a direction should be given where the evidence alleges that the offence might have been committed in a number of ways, comprising completely different acts at different times: R v Bateman, R v Byrne, R v Byrne [2000] 1 All ER 307, [2000] 2 Cr App Rep 17, CA. The rule established in R v Brown supra does not have any application where a verdict of manslaughter is returned as an alternative to murder; provided that a jury is unanimously agreed that a defendant is guilty of manslaughter in that they are sure that he committed an unlawful act which caused the death of the deceased, there is no need for unanimity as to the basis of that verdict: R v Jones (1999) Times 17 February, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1335. General power to convict of an offence other than that charged.

1335. General power to convict of an offence other than that charged.

At common law a jury could not convict a defendant of an offence of an entirely different character from that alleged in the indictment<sup>1</sup>, but might convict of a cognate offence of the same character but of a less aggravated nature if the words of the indictment were wide enough to cover such an offence<sup>2</sup>. By statute<sup>3</sup>, where, on a trial for any offence except treason or murder<sup>4</sup>, the jury finds the defendant not guilty<sup>5</sup> of the offence specifically charged in the indictment, but the allegations in the indictment amount to or include<sup>6</sup> (expressly or by implication) an allegation of another offence<sup>7</sup> falling within the jurisdiction of the court of trial, the jury may find him guilty of that other offence or of an offence of which he could be found guilty on an indictment specifically charging that other offence<sup>8</sup>. If the averments which have not been proved are struck out of the count of the indictment, and those particulars which remain disclose another offence within the jurisdiction of the court of trial, then that offence is considered to be expressly included in the offence charged in the indictment<sup>9</sup>. A count for an offence may impliedly include an alternative offence even though the commission of the latter offence is not a necessary step towards the commission of the offence charged<sup>10</sup>.

Under the above statutory provisions it has been held that, where burglary is alleged, with intent to steal, the jury may convict of theft<sup>11</sup>, but a defendant cannot be convicted of dishonest handling on a single-count indictment alleging theft<sup>12</sup>. A defendant may be convicted of the offence of attempting to cause grievous bodily harm with intent on an indictment alleging attempted murder<sup>13</sup>, or of inflicting grievous bodily harm on an indictment alleging causing grievous bodily harm with intent, because the latter offence is wide enough to include any actions that could amount to the infliction of grievous bodily harm<sup>14</sup>. Likewise, a defendant may be convicted of the offence of assault occasioning actual bodily harm on an indictment alleging the infliction of grievous bodily harm, including grievous bodily harm in the course of a burglary, since the infliction of grievous bodily harm often, though not necessarily always, involves an assault and necessarily includes actual bodily harm<sup>15</sup>, and the same is true on an indictment alleging unlawful wounding<sup>16</sup>.

4 As to alternative verdicts on an indictment for murder see PARA 1336 post.

5 Where a jury has been discharged from returning verdicts, after a successful application to stay proceedings on grounds of abuse of process, or because the jury is unable to reach a verdict, it cannot then proceed to return an alternative verdict under a statutory provision providing that an alternative verdict can be returned if the defendant has been found not guilty of the offence for which he was tried: R v Khela, R v Smith [2005] EWCA Crim 3446, (2005) Times, 6 December.

6 The words 'amount to or include' are to be read disjunctively: Metropolitan Police Comr v Wilson, R v Jenkins [1984] AC 242, 77 Cr App Rep 319, HL (overruling R v Springfield (1969) 53 Cr App Rep 608, CA).

7 For these purposes, any allegation of an offence is to be taken as including an allegation of attempting to commit that offence; and, where a person is charged on indictment with attempting to commit an offence or with any assault or other act preliminary to an offence, but not with the completed offence, then (subject to the discretion of the trial judge to discharge the jury (or otherwise act) with a view to the preferment of an indictment for the completed offence) he may be convicted of the offence charged notwithstanding that he is shown to be guilty of the completed offence: see the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(4) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 para 41).

8 See the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3). Section 6(3) applies to an indictment containing more than one count as if each count were a separate indictment: s 6(7). The judge has a discretion whether to ask the jury to consider if the other offence has been proved (see R v Woods [1969] 1 QB 447, 53 Cr App Rep 30, CA; R v Lyttle [1969] Crim LR 213, CA); but the defendant ought to be protected against any unexpected disadvantage or risk of injustice (R v Powell [2006] EWCA Crim 685, [2006] All ER (D) 146 (Jan); R v Lillis [1972] 2 QB 236, 56 Cr App Rep 432, CA; Metropolitan Police Comr v Wilson, R v Jenkins [1984] AC 242, 77 Cr App Rep 319, HL). See also R v Whiting (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 78, CA. If the possibility that the defendant is guilty only of the alternative offence has fairly arisen on the evidence and if directing the jury about it will not unnecessarily complicate the case, the judge should leave the alternative to the jury: R v Fairbanks [1986] 1 WLR 1202, 83 Cr App Rep 251; approved in R v Maxwell [1990] 1 All ER 801, 91 Cr App Rep 61, HL. See also R v Coutts [2006] UKHL 39, [2006] 1 WLR 2154, [2006] All ER (D) 253 (Jul). A verdict cannot be returned under the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3) unless the jury has found the defendant not guilty of the offence specifically charged; where the jury is agreed regarding the alternative, an alternative count for the alternative may be added to the indictment: R v Collison (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 249, CA.

For the purposes of the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3), an offence falls within the jurisdiction of the court of trial if it is an offence to which the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 40 (as amended; prospectively amended) applies (see PARA 148 ante), even if a count charging the offence is not included in the indictment: Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3A) (s 6(3A), (3B) added by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 11). A person convicted of an offence by virtue of the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3A) (as added) may only be dealt with for it in a manner in which a magistrates' court could have dealt with him: s 6(3B) (as so added).

As from a day to be appointed the committal of a person under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 41 (as amended; prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1358 post) in respect of an offence to which s 40 (as amended; prospectively amended) applies does not prevent him being found guilty of that offence under the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3); but where he is convicted under s 6(3) of such an offence, the functions of the Crown Court under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 41 (as amended; prospectively repealed) in relation to that offence cease: see s 41(4A) (prospectively added by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 58(1), Sch 10 para 28). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

9 R v Lillis [1972] 2 QB 236, 56 Cr App Rep 432, CA (the so-called 'red pencil test').

10 Metropolitan Police Comr v Wilson, R v Jenkins [1984] AC 242, 77 Cr App Rep 319, HL (disapproving R v Springfield (1969) 53 Cr App Rep 608, CA). Thus where the commission of the offence charged may involve the commission of another offence, an allegation of the other offence is impliedly included in the count, even though the offence charged could in law be committed without the commission of the other offence.

11 R v Lillis [1972] 2 QB 236, 56 Cr App Rep 432, CA (where the 'red pencil test' applied: see the text and note 9 supra). A person charged with an offence under the Theft Act 1968 s 9(1)(b) may be convicted of an offence under s 9(1)(a) since the allegation in the former offence impliedly includes an allegation of the latter: R v Whiting (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 78, CA. As to burglary see PARA 294 ante.

12 R v Woods [1969] 1 QB 447, 53 Cr App Rep 30, CA (the wording of the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3) (see the text and note 8 supra) did not alter the rule which previously applied, namely that the defendant may not be convicted of 'receiving' in the absence of a count expressly charging him with that offence).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1336. Alternative verdicts on indictments for murder, manslaughter or infanticide.

1336. Alternative verdicts on indictments for murder, manslaughter or infanticide.

On an indictment for murder a person found not guilty of murder<sup>1</sup> may be found guilty:

- 2141 (1) of manslaughter, or of causing grievous bodily harm with intent to do so; or
- 2142 (2) of any offence of which he may be found guilty under an enactment specifically so providing<sup>3</sup>, or of assisting an offender<sup>4</sup>; or
- 2143 (3) of an attempt to commit murder, or of an attempt to commit any other offence of which he might be found guilty, but he may not be found guilty of any other offence not included in heads (1) to (3) above<sup>5</sup>.

If on the trial of an indictment for murder or manslaughter it is proved that the defendant aided, abetted, counselled or procured the suicide of the person in question, the jury may find him guilty of that offence<sup>6</sup>. Where, upon the trial of a woman for the murder of her child, being a child under the age of 12 months, the jury is of the opinion that she by any wilful act or omission caused its death, but that at the time of the act or omission the balance of her mind was disturbed by reason of her not having fully recovered from the effect of giving birth to the child or by reason of the effect of lactation consequent upon the birth of the child, the jury may convict her of infanticide<sup>7</sup>. Upon the trial of any person for the murder or manslaughter of any child, or for infanticide, the jury may find that person guilty of child destruction<sup>8</sup>.

1 Where the members of the jury cannot agree on a murder charge and are discharged from giving a verdict on that charge, but desire to return a verdict of manslaughter, the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(2) (see the text and notes 3-5 infra) does not apply; under the common law they may properly return a verdict of manslaughter in these circumstances: R v Saunders [1988] AC 148, [1987] 2 All ER 973, HL.

2 See R v Rumping [1964] AC 814, [1962] 2 All ER 233, CCA; affd on other grounds sub nom Rumping v DPP [1964] AC 814 at 822, 46 Cr App Rep 398, HL. In that case the Court of Criminal Appeal stated that, where the accepted evidence showed that murder had been committed, the judge need not leave the possibility of a verdict of manslaughter open to the jury. See, however, DPP v Daley [1980] AC 237, 69 Cr App Rep 39, PC.

4 Ie under the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 4(2) (as amended): see PARA 1337 post.

5 Ibid s 6(2). Section 6(2) applies to an indictment containing more than one count as if each count were a separate indictment: s 6(7). The public interest in the administration of justice is best served if in any trial on indictment the trial judge leaves to the jury, subject to any appropriate caution or warning, but irrespective of the wishes of trial counsel, any obvious alternative offence which there was evidence to support, although it is fundamental that the duty to leave lesser verdicts to the jury should not be exercised so as to infringe a defendant's right to a fair trial: R v Coutts [2006] UKHL 39, [2006] 1 WLR 2154, [2006] All ER (D) 253 (Jul). The judge should not leave manslaughter, as an alternative to murder, when this is inconsistent with the defence case: R v Kearney (1989) 88 Cr App Rep 380, CA; Fazal Mohammed v The State (Trinidad and Tobago) [1990] 2 AC 320, 91 Cr App Rep 256, PC. See also R v Coutts supra (possible basis for manslaughter verdict wholly inconsistent with prosecution case; judge right not to leave manslaughter as an alternative to murder).

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1337. Verdict of assisting an offender.

1337. Verdict of assisting an offender.

If on the trial of an indictment for a relevant offence<sup>1</sup> the jury is satisfied that the offence charged (or some other offence of which the defendant might on that charge be found guilty) was committed, but finds the defendant not guilty of it, it may find him guilty of doing an act with intent to impede the offender's apprehension or prosecution<sup>2</sup>.

1 For these purposes, 'relevant offence' means: (1) an offence for which the sentence is fixed by law; (2) an offence for which a person of 18 years or over (not previously convicted) may be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of five years or might be so sentenced but for the restrictions imposed by the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 33 (as amended) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 661); Criminal Law Act 1967 s 4(1A) (added by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 119(1), Sch 6 para 17; and substituted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005 s 111, Sch 7 para 40(1), (2)(b)).

1338. Miscellaneous alternative verdicts.

By statute<sup>1</sup>, upon the trial of any person for an offence of administering drugs or using an instrument to procure an abortion<sup>2</sup>, the jury may find him guilty of child destruction<sup>3</sup>; on the trial of any person for child destruction, the jury may find him guilty of administering drugs or using an instrument to procure an abortion<sup>4</sup>; on the trial of a person for maliciously administering poison etc so as to endanger life or inflict grievous bodily harm<sup>5</sup>, the jury may find him guilty of the offence of administering poison with intent to injure, aggrieve or annoy<sup>6</sup>; on an indictment for a corrupt practice at an election the defendant may be found guilty of an illegal practice<sup>7</sup>; on an indictment for theft or aggravated vehicle-taking the jury may find the defendant guilty of taking a conveyance without authority<sup>8</sup>; on an indictment for violent disorder or affray the jury may find the defendant guilty of using threatening words or behaviour<sup>9</sup>; and on an indictment for unauthorised access to computer material with intent to commit or facilitate a further offence or for unauthorised modification of computer material the jury may find the defendant guilty of unauthorised access to computer material<sup>10</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1339. Special verdict.

1339. Special verdict.

Special verdicts<sup>1</sup> ought to be found only in the most exceptional cases<sup>2</sup>. Where a special verdict is returned, it is for the court to act upon it and to direct a verdict of guilty or not guilty to be entered<sup>3</sup>. The judge may not ask the members of the jury whether they believe the evidence for the prosecution and, on their saying that they do, enter a verdict of guilty<sup>4</sup>. If, after the jury has given a special verdict, the court enters a general verdict of guilty, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal<sup>5</sup>. If the finding of the jury is ambiguous or inconsistent, and a verdict of guilty has been entered on it, the conviction will be quashed<sup>6</sup>.

1 The verdicts which find the facts and reserve the legal inference to be drawn from them for the judgment of the court: see 3 Bl Com (14th Edn) 377 ('The jury state the naked facts, as they find them to be proved, and pray the advice of the court thereon'); R v Dudley, R v Stephens (1884) 14 QBD 273, 560, CCR; R v Staines Local Board (1888) 52 JP 215. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1340. Majority verdict.

1340. Majority verdict.

The verdict of a jury need not be unanimous; a verdict may be valid and effective if, where there are not less than eleven jurors, ten of them agree on the verdict, or, where there are ten jurors, nine of them agree on the verdict<sup>1</sup>. A majority verdict may not be accepted unless the jury has had at least two hours<sup>2</sup> for deliberation or such longer period as is reasonable having regard to the nature and complexity of the particular case<sup>3</sup>. A verdict of guilty by a majority is not valid unless the foreman of the jury states in open court the number of jurors who respectively agreed to and dissented from the majority verdict<sup>4</sup>.

1 See the Juries Act 1974 s 17(1); and JURIES vol 61 (2010) PARA 850. The normal number of jurors is 12; but as to the position when the jury falls below that number see PARA 1299 ante.

2 The minimum two-hour period is mandatory: R v Barry (1975) 61 Cr App Rep 172, CA. In computing the statutory period any time during which the jury returns to court to ask a question of the judge should be included: R v Adams [1968] 3 All ER 437, 52 Cr App Rep 588, CA. At least two hours and ten minutes should elapse between the time when the last member of the jury has left the jury box to go to the jury room and the time when the jury is invited to deliver a majority verdict: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.46.2, IV.46.3, CA. If a majority verdict direction is given before this time has elapsed the judge has a discretion to discharge the error or to correct the error and, if necessary, repeal the direction at an appropriate time: R v Shields [1997] Crim LR 758, CA.

If the Juries Act 1974 s 17(3) is not complied with, it is permissible, despite the discharge of the jury, to reconvene the court with the jury immediately the error is appreciated and then to rectify the error: R v Maloney supra. The position would be different if the jury had to deliberate further or, perhaps, if the verdict was being altered from not guilty to guilty: R v Maloney supra. As to the procedure on majority verdict see PARA 1342 post.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1341. Delivery of verdict.

1341. Delivery of verdict.

When the members of the jury, having intimated that they wish to return to court, are brought from their retiring room, or when, after conferring in the jury box, they appear to have made up their minds, the clerk of the court asks the foreman of the jury whether they have reached a verdict on which they are all agreed, and calls upon him to answer 'yes' or 'no'. If the answer is in the affirmative, the verdict is taken<sup>1</sup>.

Where an indictment contains a number of counts, and the foreman indicates that the jurors have reached a unanimous verdict on some but not on others, it is good practice to take the verdict on those counts on which the jurors have agreed before sending them out again to consider the remaining counts.

The verdict of the jury is not complete until it has dealt with all possible verdicts open to it on the indictment<sup>2</sup>.

A jury sometimes asks the trial judge whether it may add a rider to its verdict and, on the judge being satisfied that the rider is a proper one, leave may be given<sup>3</sup>.

1 Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.46.2, CA. As to the position where members of the jury are not agreed upon a unanimous verdict see PARA 1342 post. The trial judge is not bound to accept the first verdict returned: see PARA 1343 post. As to correction of the verdict to accord with the intention of the jury see PARA 1344 post. In general the assent of all the jurors to the verdict pronounced by the foreman in their presence and hearing will be conclusively inferred; but not when it is uncertain whether they all heard the verdict: R v Wooller (1817) 2 Stark 111. See also Ellis v Deheer [1922] 2 KB 113, CA; Nanan v The State [1986] AC 860, 83 Cr App Rep 292, PC; R v Hart [1998] Crim LR 417, CA; R v Millward [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 61, CA; R v Austin [2002] EWCA Crim 1796, [2003] Crim LR 426. If a verdict is pronounced and a juror is so drunk or otherwise incapable that he cannot or does not assent, a conviction in such a case would, it seems, be bad: see Ex p Morris (1907) 72 JP 5. Evidence by a juror that he did not understand English sufficiently well to follow the proceedings is inadmissible: R v Thomas [1933] 2 KB 489, 24 Cr App Rep 91, CCA. This decision was adversely criticised in Ras Behari Lal v R (1933) 102 LJPC 144.

2 As to permissible verdicts see PARA 1334 ante. If the trial judge discharges the defendant before the jury has completed its verdict, the discharge is a nullity: R v Carter, R v Canavan [1964] 2 QB 1, 48 Cr App Rep 122, CCA.

1341 Delivery of verdict

NOTE 1--Following a trial, a juror should not be interviewed without leave first being obtained from the Court of Appeal: R v Adams [2007] EWCA Crim 1, [2007] All ER (D) 25 (Jan). If the clerk makes a mistake when taking the vote of the jury, counsel should interrupt and ask him to start again: R v Stringfellow (2008) Times, 14 November, CA.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1342. Procedure on majority verdict.

1342. Procedure on majority verdict.

If the jury returns before the statutory two hours and ten minutes<sup>1</sup>, or such longer time as the judge thinks reasonable, since the last member of the jury left the jury box to go to the jury room on initial retirement, and intimates that its members have not reached a verdict on which they are all agreed, the jury should be sent out again for further deliberation with a further direction to arrive if possible at a unanimous verdict<sup>2</sup>.

Should the jury return (whether for the first or second time) or be sent for after the two hours and ten minutes or longer period has elapsed<sup>3</sup>, the jury should be asked again whether its members have reached a verdict on which they are all agreed, and, if they are unanimous, the verdict is accordingly taken; if it appears that they are not unanimous, the jury should be asked to retire once more and told that its members should continue to endeavour to reach a unanimous verdict, but that, if they cannot do so, the judge will accept, in a case where there are not less than eleven jurors, the verdict of ten of them, and in a case where there are ten jurors, the verdict of nine of them<sup>4</sup>. Where there are several counts (or alternative verdicts) left to the jury, and the jury returns to court at a time when a majority verdict could be given, the jury should normally first be asked in respect of each count (or alternative verdict) whether its members have reached a decision on which they are all agreed; if so, any unanimous verdict should be taken and the majority verdict direction should then be given as to the remaining counts (or alternative verdicts)<sup>5</sup>. However, if a judge has clear reasons for acting differently he is permitted to do so<sup>6</sup>.

When the jury finally returns, its members should be asked whether at least ten (or nine as the case may be) of them are agreed upon their verdict. If the answer is in the affirmative, the foreman is asked to declare the verdict by the words 'guilty' or 'not guilty'. If the verdict is one of not guilty, it must be accepted without more ado<sup>7</sup>; if the verdict is one of guilty, the foreman must be asked whether that verdict is unanimous or by a majority. If the answer to that question is that the verdict is by a majority<sup>8</sup>, the foreman must be asked how many jurors agreed to the verdict and how many dissented<sup>9</sup>.

At whatever stage the jury returns, the period that has elapsed since it left the jury box (ie since the last member of the jury left the jury box) to consider its verdict and its return to the jury box is to be stated in open court, for each period when the jury was out of court for the purpose of considering its verdict, by the senior officer of the court present before the jury is asked to return a verdict; the total of such periods is also to be so stated: see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.46.5, CA.

The trial judge is not bound to accept at once the first verdict which members of the jury bring in, but may direct them to reconsider it, if it is ambiguous, inconsistent or one which the jury cannot lawfully return on the indictment<sup>1</sup>. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1344. Correction of verdict.

1344. Correction of verdict.

If a verdict is pronounced by the foreman which is not in accordance with the intention of the jury, the jury may, at the judge's discretion, correct the mistake and enter a verdict entered in accordance with its intention<sup>1</sup>. A fresh verdict cannot be entered if there is any question of it being altered as a result of anything seen or heard by the jury after returning the initial verdict<sup>2</sup> or as a result of further deliberation and a resultant change of mind by the jury<sup>3</sup>.

In exercising the discretion the judge takes into account all the circumstances of the case; in particular, important considerations will be the length of time from the original verdict; the probable reason for the initial mistake, and the necessity for justice to be done not only to the defendant but also to the prosecution. The fact that the defendant has been discharged is one factor but not necessarily fatal to the discretion to alter a verdict to guilty: R v Andrews supra.

See also R v Bills [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 643, CA (jury's original not guilty verdict was plain and unequivocal, and changed only after it had heard material which it would not have been entitled to hear in the course of the trial; jury therefore should not have been allowed to change its original verdict).

1345. Verdict of not guilty and special verdict.

If the verdict is one of not guilty, the defendant must be immediately discharged, unless there is another indictment against him on which it is proposed to proceed<sup>1</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(viii) Verdict/1346. Discharge if jury cannot agree.

1346. Discharge if jury cannot agree.

If members of the jury cannot agree upon either a unanimous or a majority verdict, they may, at the discretion of the judge, be discharged without giving a verdict, but such a discharge does not amount to an acquittal, and the defendant may be tried again<sup>1</sup>. The jurors must agree honestly; a loose acquiescence by a minority for the sake of conformity and avoiding inconvenience is wrong<sup>2</sup>. The judge may direct the jury as to the desirability of its reaching agreement, either during the summing up<sup>3</sup> or after the jury has had time to consider the majority direction<sup>4</sup>; but there is usually no need to do so<sup>5</sup>. The judge must not pressurise the jury into agreeing<sup>6</sup>. Any communication between the judge and jury about the chances of a verdict being reached should take place in open court<sup>7</sup>.

If a verdict is so insufficiently expressed or so ambiguous that a judgment cannot be founded upon it, it seems that the judge may discharge the jury and try the case again: see R v Murphy (1869) LR 2 PC 535 at 548; and cf R v Woodfall (1770) 20 State Tr 895 at 903, 917. As to where the jury acquits on a more serious charge, and cannot agree on a lesser alternative charge, see R v Shipton, ex p DPP [1957] 1 All ER 206n, 40 Cr App Rep 197, DC; and as to where the jury disagrees regarding the offence alleged but is agreed regarding the alternative see R v Collison (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 249, CA. The general rule is that a jury, having been discharged, is functus officio and accordingly any subsequent proceedings are a nullity: R v Russell (1984) 148 JP 765, CA. See also PARA 1330 ante.

If the second jury is also unable to agree, the prosecution does not in practice, but not by rule of law, seek a third trial but instead formally offers no evidence: Charles v State [2000] 1 WLR 384 at 387, PC; R v Byrne [2002] EWCA Crim 632, [2002] Crim LR 487, CA.

5 R v Watson [1988] QB 690, 87 Cr App Rep 1, CA (disapproving R v Walhein (1952) 36 Cr App Rep 167, CA). It is a matter for the judge's discretion as to whether the following direction is given: 'Each of you has taken an oath to return a true verdict according to the evidence. No one must be false to that oath, but you have a duty not only as individuals but collectively. That is the strength of the jury system. Each of you takes into the jury box with you your individual experience and wisdom. Your task is to pool that experience and wisdom. You do that by giving your views and listening to the views of the others. There must necessarily be discussion, argument and give and take within the scope of your oath. That is the way in which agreement is reached. If unhappily, [ten of] you cannot reach agreement, you must say so': R v Watson supra.

If, however, the direction is given, individual variations which alter its sense should be avoided: R v Watson supra. An 'R v Watson direction', where appropriate, must never be combined with a majority direction and must adhere to the precise wording, and no more, given in that case: R v Buono (1992) 95 Cr App Rep 338, CA. See also R v Morgan [1997] Crim LR 593, CA (judge departed from terms of R v Watson supra, but there was nothing to suggest the jury was placed under improper pressure; conviction not unsafe). An 'R v Watson direction' must make it clear that any 'give and take' should be within the scope of the juror's oath: R v Atlan [2004] EWCA Crim 1798, [2005] Crim LR 63, CA.

1347. Proof of previous convictions.

In the Crown Court the police will provide brief details of the circumstances of the last three similar convictions and/or of convictions likely to be of interest to the court, the latter being judged on a case by case basis; this information should be provided separately and attached to the antecedents<sup>1</sup>. However, if any of the previous convictions are not admitted, they are proved by producing a certificate of the conviction signed by the proper officer<sup>2</sup> of the court where the conviction took place, and by proving that the person named in the certificate is the same person as the defendant<sup>3</sup>. The defendant must be proved beyond reasonable doubt to be the person named in the certificate<sup>4</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 73(1), (2) (s 73(2) amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 Sch 13 paras 125, 128). At common law it was necessary to produce the record or an examined copy: R v Smith (1828) 8 B & C 341; Hartley v Hindmarsh (1866) LR 1 CP 553. This method of proof is still available: see CIVIL PROCEDURE VOL 11 (2009) PARA 936.

Evidence of previous convictions is not affected by the provisions of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974: see PARA 1515 post. However, see also PARA 1515 text to note 4 post.

<sup>4</sup> Pattison v DPP [2005] EWHC 2938 (Admin), [2006] 2 All ER 317. Although three ways in which this can be proved are proof by an admission by or on behalf of the defendant, proof by the evidence of finger prints, and proof by someone who was present in court at the time the person was convicted being present to give evidence, it can be proved by any admissible means. In the absence of any evidence contradicting evidence showing a prima facie case that the defendant is the person named in the certificate, that evidence is sufficient for the court to convict: Pattison v DPP supra.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/19. TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ix) Proceedings after Verdict/1348. Outstanding charges.

1348. Outstanding charges.

If there are outstanding charges against the defendant, he should be told what the offences are and asked whether he admits them and wishes them to be taken into consideration<sup>1</sup>. The details of each offence need not in every case be put to him, but he should be asked whether he has received the list<sup>2</sup> of outstanding offences and signed it, so that, if need be, he may have the opportunity of correcting it himself by saying that he does not admit the offences or that he admits some of them only<sup>3</sup>. It is essential in a case of doubt or controversy that the judge should satisfy himself by explicit inquiry that the defendant admits his guilt and there must be neither pressure nor appearance of pressure upon him to do so<sup>4</sup>.

1 As to taking other offences into consideration in passing sentence see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 630. Offences cannot be taken into consideration without the defendant's consent: see eg R v Miles [2006] EWCA Crim 256. Consent to offences being taken into consideration should be given by the defendant personally and not through his counsel: R v Davis [1943] KB 274, 29 Cr App Rep 35, CCA.

2 The police prepare a list of outstanding offences and serve the list upon the defendant. He signs for the receipt of the list, not as an admission of guilt.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(ix) Proceedings after Verdict/1349. Motion in arrest of judgment.

1349. Motion in arrest of judgment.

At any time between conviction and judgment (that is, sentence), the defendant may, by himself or his counsel<sup>1</sup>, move the court in arrest of judgment. The grounds of this motion may be an objection appearing on the face of the record, such as want of certainty in the indictment or omission or insufficient statement of some material allegation, where the defect is more than formal and has not been amended<sup>2</sup>. The granting of a pardon after the arraignment is also a ground for moving in arrest of judgment<sup>3</sup>. In practice, objections to the form of the indictment should be taken on arraignment, not after verdict<sup>4</sup>.

Except as otherwise provided, no judgment after verdict may be stayed or reversed by reason: (1) that the statutory provisions regarding the summoning or impanelling of jurors, or the selection of jurors by ballot<sup>5</sup>, have not been complied with<sup>6</sup>; or (2) that a juror was not qualified<sup>7</sup> or was misnamed or misdescribed or unfit to serve<sup>8</sup>. Head (1) above does not, however, apply if objection to an irregularity is taken at or as soon as practicable after the time it occurs and the irregularity is not corrected<sup>9</sup>. Nothing in head (1) or head (2) above applies to any objection to a verdict on the ground of personation<sup>10</sup>.

The court may itself without motion arrest judgment, if it is of opinion that no offence in law is disclosed in the indictment<sup>11</sup>.

If judgment is arrested, the proceedings are set aside and the defendant is entitled to be discharged, unless there is another indictment against him, but this is no bar to a fresh indictment<sup>12</sup>.

In R v Laming (1989) 90 Cr App Rep 450, CA, the Court of Appeal stated that if, between conviction and sentence, a point arises as to the validity of the indictment it should be investigated by the Court of Appeal and not by the Crown Court. The propriety of the procedure of moving in arrest of judgment in such a case had not, however, been the subject of argument before the Court of Appeal.

If judgment is not arrested<sup>1</sup>, then, except in the case of a conviction for an offence the sentence for which is fixed by law<sup>2</sup>, judgment may be respited on good grounds<sup>3</sup> and the passing of sentence may be postponed<sup>4</sup>. If judgment is respited, the defendant may be bound over to come up for judgment if called upon and meanwhile to be of good behaviour<sup>5</sup>. Except where the trial judge has no discretion as to the sentence to be passed<sup>1</sup>, before judgment is given, the court may hear evidence from the prosecution or the defence on the question what punishment should be imposed<sup>2</sup>; defence counsel or the defendant, if unrepresented, may address the court in mitigation of sentence<sup>3</sup>; and the court considers any pre-sentence reports<sup>4</sup> on the case.

In the case of murder, where the judge has no discretion as to the sentence to be imposed, namely imprisonment (or detention) for life, he is required to set a minimum term to be served before the offender is eligible for consideration for release by the Parole Board, unless the judge determines that a 'whole life sentence' is required, and in this respect the judge should take into account aggravating and mitigating factors relevant to the seriousness of the offence, or a combination of the offence and any associated offences<sup>5</sup>.

An application for a court to hear a plea in mitigation in camera should be made in camera but the court should announce in public its decision on that application<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> As to evidence regarding the defendant's antecedents see PARAS 1347 ante; SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 617. As to the duty of counsel to know the relevant sentencing powers of the court and any relevant sentencing guidelines, and, where appropriate, to direct the judge's attention to them, see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 15.

The opinions of the victim or surviving members of his family about the appropriate level of sentence do not provide a sound basis for assessing a sentence: R v Nunn [1996] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 136, CA; A-G's Reference (No 2 of 1995) [1996] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 274, CA; R v Perks [2001] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 66, CA. However, the damaging and distressing effects of a crime on them, including anguish and emotional suffering, represent an important factor in the sentencing decision: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.28.1, III.28.2, CA; R v Nunn [1996] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 136, CA; R v Hurd [1998] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 241, CA; R v O'Brien [2001] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 22, CA; and see also R v Matthew [2002] EWCA Crim 1484, [2003] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 109 (appellant convicted of constructive manslaughter after killing brother; sentence reduced because of increase in grief and anxiety caused to family); R v Roche [1999] 2 Cr App Rep (S) 105, CA (appellant convicted of killing cousin by careless driving under influence of drink; sentence reduced because length of sentence delaying time for family to grieve, and otherwise having adverse effect on family). As to the principles that determine the penalty imposed see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 615 et seq.

(x) Proceedings after Plea of Guilty

1353. Determination of disputed issues of fact before sentence.

Where the defendant has pleaded guilty<sup>1</sup>, he is ordinarily<sup>2</sup> sentenced on the basis of the summary of the facts presented by the prosecution<sup>3</sup>. However, there may be disputed issues of fact relevant to sentence which must be determined by the trial judge before he may pass sentence<sup>4</sup>. In these circumstances the trial judge may:

- 2144 (1) obtain an answer to the issues from a jury by adding a new count, if possible, to the indictment<sup>5</sup>; or
- 2145 (2) himself hear evidence (the so-called 'Newton hearing') and come to his own conclusions<sup>6</sup>; or
- 2146 (3) hear no evidence and listen to the submissions of counsel<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to a plea of guilty see PARA 1280 ante.

2 Unless the plea is the subject of a written statement of the basis of the plea which the prosecution accepts.

3 To enable the press and the public to know the circumstances of each offence to which a defendant has pleaded guilty, the prosecution must state the facts in open court before sentence is imposed: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.26.1, CA.

4 See R v Brown (1981) 3 Cr App Rep (S) 250, CA; R v Tolera [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 29, CA; followed in R v Anderson [2002] EWCA Crim 1850, [2003] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 4211, CA. The responsibility for taking any initiative and alerting the prosecutor to the areas of dispute about material facts rests with the defence; if the Crown accepts and agrees the defendant's account of the disputed facts, the agreement should be reduced into writing and signed by both advocates and made available to the judge before the start of the Crown's opening and, if possible, before he is invited to approve the acceptance of any pleas(s); if the agreed basis of plea is not signed by the advocates for both sides, the judge is entitled to ignore it; if the Crown rejects the defendant's version, the areas of dispute should be identified in writing and the document should focus the court's attention on the precise fact(s) in dispute; where an issue raised by the defence is outside the knowledge of the prosecution, that does not mean that the truth of those matters should be agreed; the Crown should not normally agree the defendant's account unless it is supported by other material: R v Underwood [2004] EWCA Crim 2256, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 478.

5 In R v Eubank [2001] EWCA Crim 891, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 11, for example, the defendant pleaded guilty to robbery but there was an issue as to whether he had been carrying a firearm at the material time; the Court of Appeal held that the fact that although the 'Newton hearing' conducted by the judge (see head (2) in the text) might have been a more expeditious resolution of the issue it was preferable where such a serious offence was concerned to have the verdict of a jury on the issue; there should have been a separate count in the indictment. See also R v Underwood [2004] EWCA Crim 2256, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 478.

6 See PARA 1354 post. Exceptionally a trial of the facts by the judge may take place by virtue of a decision of the judge, even though the prosecution and defence are agreed on the facts (as where the defendant has agreed to plead guilty on the basis of particular facts, and the prosecution is prepared to accept this or feels that it cannot challenge it): R v McNulty [1994] Crim LR 385, CA (papers before court showing agreed facts in stark conflict with evidence); R v Beswick [1996] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 343, CA. The prosecution should not lend itself to any agreement with the defendant based on an unreal set of facts; if it does, the judge may hold a hearing with the facts: R v Beswick supra. If the judge does not accept the agreed version of the facts, he should make his views known and give the defendant the chance to convince the judge of the truth of his story: R v Tolera [1999] 1 Cr App Rep 29, CA; R v Underwood [2004] EWCA Crim 2256, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 478.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(x) Proceedings after Plea of Guilty/1354. Trial of disputed issues of fact by the judge: Newton hearing.

1354. Trial of disputed issues of fact by the judge: Newton hearing.

Counsel are under a duty to make it clear when a trial of disputed issues of fact by the judge is appropriate<sup>1</sup>. Where there is a substantial conflict between the versions of facts put forward by the prosecution and the defence after a plea of guilty, and the trial judge is not prepared to pass sentence on the basis of the defence version, he must hear evidence on the question regardless of whether counsel for the prosecution or for the defence wishes such a hearing to take place<sup>2</sup>. Evidence should be called in the normal way and the judge must direct himself according to the normal criminal burden and standard of proof<sup>3</sup> and explain his conclusions in a judgment<sup>4</sup>. Where, after a hearing of disputed issues of fact, the judge decides the issue against the defendant, the defendant may lose some of the mitigation he would otherwise receive for a guilty plea<sup>5</sup>.

The trial judge is not, however, obliged to hear evidence in this way:

- 2147 (1) where the facts in dispute are immaterial to sentence, or their impact on the sentencing decision is minimal<sup>6</sup>;
- 2148 (2) where the version of the facts put forward by the defence is manifestly false or wholly implausible<sup>7</sup>; or
- 2149 (3) where the matters put forward by the defence are relevant in mitigation but do not amount to a contradiction of the prosecution case<sup>8</sup>.

The prosecuting advocate should assist the judge by calling any appropriate evidence; and, in particular, where the issue arises from facts within the exclusive knowledge of the defendant and the defendant is willing to give evidence in support of his case, he should be called; if he is not, and subject to any explanation that may be proffered, the judge may draw such inferences as he thinks fit from that fact; he may reject evidence called by the prosecution and may equally reject assertions advanced by the defendant, or his witnesses, even if the Crown does not offer positive contradictory evidence: R v Underwood [2004] EWCA Crim 2256, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep (S) 478.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(xi) Judgment/1356. Delivery of judgment.

1356. Delivery of judgment.

Judgment must be pronounced orally in open court by the trial judge<sup>1</sup>. It is the practice for the defendant to be present to hear judgment and sentence unless there is a good reason for his absence<sup>2</sup>. In cases of treason he must be present when judgment is given<sup>3</sup>.

If there has been a verdict of guilty on more counts than one, the proper course is to deliver and enter up a separate judgment on each count<sup>4</sup>. Where a defendant is sentenced to imprisonment on more than one count, it should be expressly stated in his presence whether the sentences are to be concurrent or consecutive<sup>5</sup>.

In general, where several defendants are charged jointly, sentence on any who plead guilty should normally be postponed until those who pleaded not guilty have been tried, when all who are guilty should be sentenced together, because the court will then be able to assess the degree of guilt of each<sup>6</sup>. Where, however, a defendant who has pleaded guilty is to give evidence for the prosecution against his co-defendant(s), the question of whether he should be sentenced before or after he has given evidence is a matter subject to the discretion of the judge<sup>7</sup>, but the normal practice is for the judge to postpone sentencing that defendant until verdicts have been returned in respect of all the defendants<sup>8</sup>. Evidence given in the trials of co-defendants may be taken into account by the judge when assessing the culpability of a defendant who has pleaded guilty, but the judge must remember that self-serving statements are likely to be untrue and that the defence has been unable to cross-examine; the defendant should be given the opportunity to give evidence of his understanding of the facts<sup>9</sup>.

A defendant who is sentenced before giving evidence may be brought back to have his sentence increased or decreased at the end of the trial, but his sentence may not be increased on the basis that the evidence he gives differs from that raised by way of mitigation in his own trial<sup>10</sup>.

The judge must give his reasons for, and explain the effect of, the sentence<sup>11</sup>. Although, when passing sentence, a judge can express his views about the defendant's evidence in trenchant terms, if he knows that he is likely to have to conduct a fact-finding exercise, such as confiscation proceedings, he must not express himself in a way which might be perceived as indicating that he is biased against the defendant and unlikely to believe anything that the defendant might tell him<sup>12</sup>.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(xi) Judgment/1357. Entry of judgment, variation and rescission.

1357. Entry of judgment, variation and rescission.

After the judgment has been pronounced, a minute of the judgment is entered on the record sheet attached to the indictment<sup>1</sup>.

A sentence imposed, or other order made, by the Crown Court when dealing with an offender may be varied or rescinded by the Crown Court<sup>2</sup>: (1) in the case of two or more persons jointly tried on an indictment, not later than the period of 28 days beginning with the date of the conclusion of the joint trial<sup>3</sup>, or the period of 56 days beginning with the day on which the sentence or other order was imposed or made, whichever period is the shorter<sup>4</sup>; and (2) except in such case, within the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the sentence or other order was imposed or made<sup>5</sup>. After that it may not be altered, but it may be reversed or amended by the Court of Appeal<sup>6</sup>. Any subsequent alteration of sentence should be made in open court<sup>7</sup> in the presence of the offender unless he has waived this right, expressly or by implication<sup>8</sup>.

1 At the Central Criminal Court it is also entered in the book kept for that purpose by the clerk of the court.

2 Under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155 (as amended) (see the text and notes 3-5 infra) the court has power to vary not only the terms of the original sentence or order but also to substitute a sentence or order of a different nature from the original sentence or order (R v Sodhi (1978) 66 Cr App Rep 260, CA) or to add an order (R v Reilly [1982] QB 1208, 75 Cr App Rep 266, CA). The court's power under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155 (as amended) includes a power to extend the length of a custodial sentence in appropriate circumstances: see R v Newsome [1970] 2 QB 711, 54 Cr App Rep 485, CA; R v Hart (1983) 5 Cr App Rep (S) 25, CA; R v McLean (1988) 10 Cr App Rep (S) 18, CA; R v Hadley (1995) 16 Cr App Rep (S) 358, CA. The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155 (as amended) should not, however, be used for a change of mind, or to convert a sentence because of some event which has taken place after the original sentence has been passed: R v Nodjoumi (1985) 7 Cr App Rep (S) 183, CA; R v Powell (1985) 7 Cr App Rep (S) 247, CA. Contrast the following cases where a sentence was held to be properly varied: R v Hart (1983) 5 Cr App Rep (S) 25, CA (offender had given false information highly relevant to sentence); R v Iqbal (1985) 81 Cr App Rep 145, CA (mistake as to sentencing powers); R v Sodhi (1978) 66 Cr App Rep 260, CA (receipt of further information relevant to sentence).

The variation or rescission must be made by the court constituted as it was when the original sentence or order was imposed or made, or, where that court comprised one or more justices of the peace, a court so constituted except for the omission of any one or more of those justices: Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155(4). A forfeiture order made under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 s 27 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 480) or alternatively a deprivation order under the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 143 (as amended) (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 481) is a 'sentence imposed or other order made' for these purposes: R v Menocal [1980] AC 598, sub nom Customs and Excise Comrs v Menocal (1979) 66 Cr App Rep 148, HL. As to variation of confiscation orders made under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 Pt 5 (ss 240-316) (as amended) see PARA 2147 et seq post.

3 For these purposes, the joint trial is concluded on the latest of the following dates, that is, any date on which any of the persons jointly tried is sentenced, or is acquitted, or on which a special verdict is brought in: Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155(3).

4 Ibid s 155(2). The time limits in s 155 (as amended) must be strictly observed; a court is not permitted to add an order to a sentence after the expiry of the relevant time limit: R v Menocal [1980] AC 598, sub nom Customs and Excise Comrs v Menocal (1979) 66 Cr App Rep 148, HL; R v Hart (1983) 5 Cr App Rep (S) 25, CA. If a sentence is rescinded within the time limit, and a new sentence imposed after its expiry, the rescission will be valid but the new sentence will not be: R v Stillwell, R v Jewell (1992) 13 Cr App Rep (S) 253, CA. However, a mere technical defect can be corrected under the Crown Court's inherent jurisdiction to remedy mistakes in its record after the expiry of the relevant statutory time limit: R v Saville [1981] QB 12, 70 Cr App Rep 204, CA.

5 Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155(1). Criminal Procedure Rules may: (1) as respects cases where two or more persons are tried separately on the same or related facts alleged in one or more indictments, provide for extending the period prescribed in the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 s 155(1); and (2) subject to the provisions of s 155(1)-(6) (see the text and notes 1-4 supra), prescribe the cases and circumstances in which, and the time within which, any order or other decision made by the court may be varied or rescinded: s 155(7) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2004, SI 2004/2035, art 3, Schedule paras 39, 43). At the date at which this volume states the law no such rules had been made.

TRIAL OF INDICTMENTS/ (6) THE HEARING/(xii) Trial of Summary Offence after Conviction on Indictment/1358. Power of Crown Court to deal with summary offence where defendant committed for offence triable either way or sent for trial.

(xii) Trial of Summary Offence after Conviction on Indictment

1358. Power of Crown Court to deal with summary offence where defendant committed for offence triable either way or sent for trial.

Until a day to be appointed<sup>1</sup>, where a magistrates' court has committed a person for trial<sup>2</sup> on indictment for an offence triable either way<sup>3</sup> and has also committed him for trial for a summary offence in accordance with the statutory provisions<sup>4</sup>, and he is convicted on the indictment, the Crown Court must consider whether the statutory conditions<sup>5</sup> have been satisfied<sup>6</sup>. If the court considers that those conditions were so satisfied, it must state to him the substance of the summary offence and ask him whether he pleads<sup>7</sup> guilty or not guilty<sup>8</sup>. If he pleads guilty, the court must convict him of the summary offence, but may deal with him in respect of that offence only in a manner in which a magistrates' court could have dealt with him; if he pleads not guilty, the Crown Court may try him for the offence, but may deal with him only in a manner in which a magistrates' court could have dealt with him<sup>9</sup>. The court must inform the designated officer for the magistrates' court of the outcome of any proceedings under the above provisions<sup>10</sup>.

The following provisions apply where a magistrates' court has sent a person for trial<sup>11</sup> for offences which include a summary offence<sup>12</sup>. If the person is convicted on the indictment, the Crown Court must consider whether the summary offence is related to the offence that is triable only on indictment or, as the case may be, any of the offences that are so triable<sup>13</sup>. If it considers that a summary offence is so related, the court must state to the person the substance of the offence and ask him whether he pleads guilty or not guilty<sup>14</sup>. If the person pleads guilty, the Crown Court must convict him but may deal with him in respect of the summary offence only in a manner in which a magistrates' court could have dealt with him<sup>15</sup>. If he does not plead guilty the powers of the Crown Court cease in respect of the summary offence<sup>16</sup> except that if the prosecution informs the court that it would not desire to submit evidence on the charge relating to the summary offence, the court must dismiss it<sup>17</sup>. The Crown Court must inform the designated officer for the magistrates' court of the outcome of any such proceedings<sup>18</sup>.

Where the Court of Appeal allows an appeal against conviction of an indictable only offence<sup>19</sup> which is related to a summary offence of which the appellant was convicted under these provisions:

- 2150 (1) it must set aside his conviction of the summary offence and give the clerk of the magistrates' court notice that it has done so; and
- 2151 (2) it may direct that no further proceedings in relation to the offence are to be undertaken, and the proceedings before the Crown Court in relation to the offence must thereafter be disregarded for all purposes<sup>20</sup>.

1 As from a day to be appointed the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 41 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see the text and notes 2-10 infra) is repealed: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 41, 332, Sch 3 para 60(1), (8), Sch 37 Pt 4 (not yet in force). 3 For the meaning of 'offence triable either way' see PARA 1102 note 4 ante; and as to offences triable either way see PARA 1103 ante.

4 Ie in accordance with the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 41(1)-(4) (prospectively repealed) (see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 660).

5 Ie the conditions specified in ibid s 41(1) (prospectively repealed).

6 Ibid s 41(5).

7 As to pleading to the general issue see PARA 1278 et seq ante.

8 See the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 41(6).

9 See ibid s 41(7), (8) (s 41(8) substituted by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 303(1), (2)). As from a day to be appointed the committal of a person under these provisions in respect of an offence to which the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 40 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 148 ante) applies, does not prevent him being found guilty of that offence under the Criminal Law Act 1967 s 6(3) (alternative verdicts on trial on indictment: see PARA 1335 ante); but where he is convicted under that provision of such an offence, the functions of the Crown Court under these provisions in relation to the offence cease: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41(4A) (prospectively added by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 58(1), Sch 10 para 28). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

10 See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41(10) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 303(1), (4)). As to the power of the Court of Appeal to set aside a conviction for a summary offence under these provisions see PARA 1885 post.

11 Ie under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (prospectively amended) or s 51 (as substituted) (see PARAS 1131-1132 ante) or s 51A (prospectively added) (see PARA 1133 ante): see Sch 3 para 6(1) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 Pt 1 paras 15, 20). At the date at which this volume states the law no day had been appointed for the commencement of these prospective amendments.

12 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 6(1).

Where the Crown Court has to determine whether an offence which is listed in the first column of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 Sch 2 (offences for which the value involved is relevant to the mode of trial) is a summary offence, the following provisions apply. The court must have regard to any representations made by the prosecutor or the defendant: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 14(2). If it appears clear to the court that the value involved does not exceed the relevant sum, it must treat the offence as a summary offence: Sch 3 para 14(3). If it appears clear to the court that the value involved exceeds the relevant sum it must treat the offence as an indictable offence: Sch 3 para 14(4). If it appears to the court for any reason not clear whether the value involved does or does not exceed the relevant sum, the court must ask the defendant whether he wishes the offence to be treated as a summary offence: Sch 3 para 14(5). Where Sch 3 para 14(5) applies: (1) if the defendant indicates that he wishes the offence to be treated as a summary offence, the court must so treat it; (2) if the defendant does not give such an indication, the court must treat the offence as an indictable offence: Sch 3 para 14(6). For these purposes, 'the value involved' and 'the relevant sum' have the same meanings as in the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 22 (see PARAS 299, 1114 post): Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 14(7).

Where the Crown Court proceeds in the defendant's absence in accordance with Sch 3 para 15(1) (see PARA 1141 ante) and it appears to the court for any reason not clear whether the value involved does or does not exceed the relevant sum, the provisions of Sch 3 paras 14(5), (6) do not apply and: (a) the court must ask the defendant's legal representative whether the defendant wishes the offence to be treated as a summary offence; (b) if the legal representative indicates that the defendant wishes the offence to be treated as a summary offence, the court must so treat it; (c) if the legal representative does not give such an indication, the court must treat the offence as an indictable offence: Sch 3 para 15(5).

13 Ibid Sch 3 para 6(2). As from a day to be appointed the Crown Court must consider whether the summary offence is related to the indictable offence for which he has been sent for trial or as the case may be, any of the indictable offences for which he was so sent: Sch 3 para 6(2) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 15, 20). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

17 Ibid Sch 3 para 6(6). If the offence is one to which the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 40 (as amended; prospectively amended) (see PARA 148 ante) applies, the Crown Court may exercise in relation to the offence the power conferred by s 40 (as amended; prospectively amended); but where the person is tried on indictment for such an offence the functions of the Crown Court under these provisions in relation to the offence cease: Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 6(8).

18 Ibid Sch 3 para 6(7) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 61).

19 Or, as from a day to be appointed, an indictable offence: see the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 6(9) (prospectively amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 3 paras 15, 20). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

20 Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 6(9). A notice under Sch 3 para 6(9) must include particulars of any direction given under head (2) in the text in relation to that offence: Sch 3 para 6(10).

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1359. Function and classification of rules of evidence.

20. EVIDENCE

(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES

1359. Function and classification of rules of evidence.

Evidence is the usual means of proving or disproving a fact in issue<sup>1</sup>. It may take the form of testimony from witnesses, documentary evidence (including audio or video recordings) or the production of exhibits for inspection. The law of evidence determines what matters may properly be adduced by the prosecution or defence, that is to say what evidence is relevant and admissible<sup>2</sup>, and it more broadly regulates the manner or circumstances in which such evidence may be adduced. Further, it allocates burdens of proof, and the standard of proof which must be attained<sup>3</sup>.

The rules of evidence in criminal cases are generally the same whether the evidence is tendered by the prosecution or by the defence, although several significant differences exist, particularly in respect of the court's discretion to exclude admissible but unfairly prejudicial evidence<sup>4</sup>.

The admissibility of evidence is a question of law to be determined by the trial judge<sup>5</sup> (as is any question concerning the allocation of a burden of proof or the competence or compellability of a witness), while the weight or credibility of any evidence or testimony, if a case is left to the jury<sup>6</sup>, is a question for the jury alone to determine<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to formal admissions rendering proof unnecessary see PARA 1538 post; as to the doctrine of judicial notice of facts see PARA 1378 et seq post; and as to the operation of conclusive or irrebuttable presumptions precluding proof see PARA 1375 post.

2 As to the link between relevance and admissibility see PARA 1364 post.

3 As to the burden of proof in criminal cases see PARA 1368 et seq post; as to the standard of proof in criminal cases see PARA 1372 post.

4 A court or judge generally has no discretion to exclude admissible defence evidence, either at common law or under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 (as amended); but see PARA 1365 post.

5 Ajodha v The State [1982] AC 204, [1981] 2 All ER 193, PC. As to the power of the judge to conduct a trial within a trial in order to determine issues of admissibility see PARA 1306 ante. As to the power of a judge to decide issues of admissibility at a preparatory hearing under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 ss 28-38 (as amended), see R v Claydon [2001] EWCA Crim 1359, [2004] 1 WLR 1575, [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 474, CA; and PARA 1253 ante.

6 It is for the judge to rule (as a matter of law) whether the prosecution or defence has discharged any evidential burden of proof: see PARA 1313 ante.

UPDATE

1359 Function and classification of rules of evidence

NOTE 6--It is the responsibility of the judge to consider whether evidential inconsistencies are such that no jury, even if properly directed as to the significance of the inconsistencies, could safely convict: R v R [2006] EWCA Crim 2754, [2005] All ER (D) 339 (Dec).

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1360. Evidence in criminal and civil cases.

1360. Evidence in criminal and civil cases.

The rules of evidence in criminal cases were at one time broadly similar to those which applied in civil actions<sup>1</sup>. Various points of distinction have long existed, notably in the higher standard of proof imposed on the prosecution in criminal cases<sup>2</sup>, and in a range of common law and statutory rules designed to prevent the introduction of unfair or prejudicial prosecution evidence<sup>3</sup>, but the enactment of the Criminal Evidence Act 1965<sup>4</sup> and in particular the Civil Evidence Act 1968<sup>5</sup> marked the beginning of a major divergence between the civil and criminal branches of the law of evidence. A series of legislative reforms followed, in the course of which many of the shared common law rules of evidence have been replaced by statutory provisions unique to either the civil or the criminal law systems<sup>6</sup>. Some rules of evidence remain more or less equally applicable to both civil and criminal trials<sup>7</sup>, but the differences are now widespread and fundamental.

1 As to the rules of evidence in civil cases see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 749 et seq.

2 As to the standard of proof in criminal cases see PARA 1372 post; and as to the standard applicable in civil proceedings see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 775. See also Hornal v Neuberger Products Ltd [1957] 1 QB 247, [1956] 3 All ER 970, CA.

3 Thus, whilst much of the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 was equally applicable to civil cases, the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 introduced rules unique to criminal trials. 'The principles of the laws of evidence are the same whether applied at civil or criminal trials, but they are not enforced with the same rigidity against a person accused of a criminal offence as against a party to a civil action. There are exceptions to the law regulating the admissibility of evidence which apply only to criminal trials, and which have acquired their force by the constant and invariable practice of judges when presiding at criminal trials': R v Christie [1914] AC 545 at 564, sub nom DPP v Christie (1914) 10 Cr App Rep 141 at 164, HL, per Lord Reading (referring to the common law).

4 The Criminal Evidence Act 1965 (repealed by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 119, Sch 7 Pt III) made significant changes to the rules governing documentary hearsay evidence in criminal cases. As to the circumstances in which hearsay evidence may be adduced in criminal cases see PARA 1519 et seq post.

5 The Civil Evidence Act 1968 provided, inter alia, a comprehensive regime for the admissibility of hearsay evidence in most (but not all) civil cases. See also the Civil Evidence Act 1972 and the Civil Evidence Act 1995; and CIVIL PROCEDURE.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1361. Facts in issue.

1361. Facts in issue.

In criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> the facts in issue are generally: (1) those which it is necessary for the prosecution to establish in order to prove the actus reus and mens rea of the offence charged<sup>2</sup>; and (2) any further facts which the defendant alleges in denial of the offence<sup>3</sup> or in support of a specific legal defence<sup>4</sup>.

A defendant who pleads not guilty ordinarily puts all the facts alleged by the prosecution in issue<sup>5</sup>. However, either party may formally admit facts<sup>6</sup>, thus narrowing or reducing the range of issues which must be proved<sup>7</sup>.

A defendant who pleads guilty admits the offence charged, but does not necessarily admit that all the facts related in the depositions or statements tendered in support of the charge are true<sup>8</sup>.

1 As to the facts in issue generally see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARAS 1065-1066. As to the admissibility of facts relevant to the facts in issue (ie circumstantial evidence) see PARA 1366 post.

2 As to the standard of proof to be reached see PARA 1372 post. As to actus reus and mens rea see PARAS 5, 8 et seq ante.

3 Eg where the defendant relies on an alibi defence (see PARA 1371 post).

4 As to the allocation of the burden of proof in relation to defences and the standard of proof required see PARAS 1369-1372 post; and as to the special pleas which may be raised to an indictment see PARA 1269 et seq ante.

5 'Wherever there is a plea of not guilty, everything is in issue, and the prosecution have to prove the whole of their case, including the identity of the defendant, the nature of the act, and the existence of any necessary knowledge or intent': R v Sims [1946] KB 531 at 539, 31 Cr App Rep 158 at 167, 168, CCA, per Lord Goddard CJ.

6 As to formal admissions see PARA 1538 post.

7 In a case that is to be tried on indictment the defendant is now required to give a 'defence statement' to the court and the prosecutor (and where directed to do so, to any co-defendant) before the trial, which must indicate the matters on which he takes issue with the prosecution: see PARA 1384 post. This does not operate as a formal admission and does not prevent the defendant from later contesting matters previously admitted, but a court or jury may draw such inferences as may appear proper where, inter alia, the defendant puts forward a defence which was not mentioned in his defence statement or is different from any defences set out in that statement: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5 (as amended), s 6A (as added), s 11 (as amended); and PARA 1388 post. Such a statement may also be given voluntarily in respect of a case that is to be tried summarily: see s 6 (as amended); and PARA 1388 post.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1362. Secondary or collateral issues.

1362. Secondary or collateral issues.

Questions of fact may also arise for determination regarding matters which are not directly relevant to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and evidence may need to be adduced in relation to such secondary issues<sup>1</sup>. In a criminal trial, for example, it is frequently necessary to inquire into: (1) the admissibility of evidence; and (2) the competence<sup>2</sup> or credibility<sup>3</sup> of witnesses in the proceedings.

At a trial on indictment, questions concerning the admissibility of evidence or the competence or compellability of witnesses are for the judge to determine as and when such issues arise<sup>4</sup>. Where necessary, a trial within a trial may have to be held to determine the truth of any relevant facts that are in dispute<sup>5</sup>.

1 Such evidence must ordinarily conform to the general rules of admissibility and of burden and standard of proof: see PARA 1373 post.

2 As to the rules regarding the competence of witnesses see PARA 1401 post.

3 As to the rules regarding the impeachment of the credit of witnesses see PARA 1433 post.

4 In a summary trial, such issues must be decided by the trial court as they arise.

5 See PARA 1306 ante.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1363. Questions of fact and questions of law.

1363. Questions of fact and questions of law.

At a trial on indictment, questions of law are determined by the judge as they arise and questions of fact (other than questions of foreign law) are determined by the jury at the conclusion of the trial<sup>1</sup>. Questions of law include the interpretation of statutes, statutory instruments and case law<sup>2</sup> and questions concerning the admissibility of evidence or the competence or compellability of witnesses<sup>3</sup>. The judge may take judicial notice of the rules of English law, and does not need to hear evidence concerning that law, although counsel may make submissions in respect of it<sup>4</sup>.

Questions of fact include all those matters which are not perceived as questions of law. Thus the credibility of a witness is a question of fact, whether he is dealing in facts or opinions. So too is the reasonableness of a person's behaviour or the foreseeability of a particular consequence<sup>5</sup>.

The legal construction or interpretation of documents, such as deeds, wills, articles of association and contracts, is a question of law<sup>6</sup>. In criminal cases, however, the court will rarely be concerned with the strict legal or contractual effect of the document. Issues of criminal liability will more frequently turn on issues such as authorship, intent, deception and causation, which are questions of fact<sup>7</sup>.

Where a rule of foreign law<sup>8</sup> needs to be ascertained<sup>9</sup>, expert evidence must be heard and determined by the judge alone<sup>10</sup>. Although the interpretation or construction of a statute is a question of law for the judge, the meaning of ordinary words used in a statute is a question of fact for the jury, unless such words have acquired a technical legal meaning<sup>11</sup>.

1 Similarly, at a summary trial, the court must decide issues of law as they arise. As to questions of foreign law see the text and notes 8-10 infra.

2 Brutus v Cozens [1973] AC 854 at 861, [1972] 2 All ER 1297 at 1299, HL, per Lord Reid.

3 Where disputed facts need to be established in order to determine the admissibility of evidence, a judge may hold a trial within a trial for that purpose, at which he may hear evidence; see PARA 1306 ante. As to the procedure for determining the competence of a witness see PARA 1401 et seq post.

4 As to the taking of judicial notice see PARA 1378 post.

5 In the context of theft or related offences, it may be necessary to decide whether D was under a legal obligation to act in a certain way, or whether title in property had passed between one person and another as a result of a particular action or event. The occurrence of the action or event (if disputed) will be a question of fact, but the question whether such an act would, if established, give rise to rights or obligations is clearly one of law, and must accordingly be decided by the judge: R v Mainwaring (1981) 74 Cr App Rep 99, CA; R v Dubar [1995] 1 All ER 781, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 280, C-MAC; R v Clowes (No 2) [1994] 2 All ER 316, CA.

See also R v Spens [1991] 4 All ER 421, [1991] 1 WLR 624, CA, in which it was held that the proper interpretation of the City Code on Take-overs and Mergers was a question of law for the judge, that document being very like a statute in many respects.

8 The laws of all other jurisdictions, including Scotland, Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, British overseas territories, Commonwealth countries and foreign states are ordinarily regarded as 'foreign law', but see PARA 1382 post.

9 In civil cases, foreign law may be presumed (in the absence of evidence to the contrary) to be similar to English law (Bumper Development Corpn v Metropolitan Police Comr [1991] 4 All ER 638 at 644, [1991] 1 WLR 1362 at 1368, CA, per Purchas LJ), but this is not ordinarily true in criminal cases (R v Ofori and Tackie (No 2) (1993) 99 Cr App Rep 223, [1994] Crim LR 822, CA). In some cases, however, legislation allows such a presumption to be made until and unless the issue is raised: see eg the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 72; and PARA 243 ante.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1364. Relevance and admissibility.

1364. Relevance and admissibility.

Any evidence which is sought to be admitted must always be relevant to some issue in the case<sup>1</sup>. Evidence that is of no logical relevance clearly fails this test, but evidence may also be excluded if its relevance is so slight as to be marginal, especially if its admission would give rise to a plethora of subsidiary issues that would prolong the trial and distract the court or jury from the primary issue<sup>2</sup>. Evidence is relevant if it is logically probative or disprobative of some matter which requires proof<sup>3</sup>.

It does not follow that evidence which is relevant must necessarily be admissible, for, while relevance is a condition precedent to admissibility, further rules of exclusion exist which may serve to exclude evidence which would generally be considered to be relevant<sup>4</sup>. Thus evidence must be: (1) relevant; and (2) admissible according to the rules of exclusion.

1 This may be either a primary or collateral issue; but evidence will be irrelevant if it relates only to some fact which is admitted or which need not be proved (such as proof of knowledge or intent in respect of a strict liability offence that does not require it): see R v Sandhu [1997] Crim LR 288, CA; R v Byrne [2002] EWCA Crim 632, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 311, CA.

2 R v Berry (1986) 83 Cr App Rep 7, CA; A-G v Hitchcock (1847) 1 Exch 91 at 105 per Rolfe B; R v Patel [1951] 2 All ER 29 at 30, 35 Cr App Rep 62 at 65, CCA, per Byrne J. The requirement of relevance applies equally to prosecution and defence (see eg R v Blastland [1986] AC 41, [1985] 2 All ER 1095, HL, where evidence of the state of mind of a third party alleged by the defence to have committed the murder with which the defendant was charged was rejected as lacking in sufficient relevance) but prosecution evidence that is more prejudicial than probative may be excluded, either at common law or under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 (as amended), in circumstances where comparable defence evidence might have to be admitted (see PARA 1365 post).

3 DPP v Kilbourne [1973] AC 729 at 756, 57 Cr App Rep 381 at 417, HL, per Lord Simon of Glaisdale. What is or is not logically probative may, however, be a matter of dispute. Thus in R v Kearley [1992] 2 AC 228, 95 Cr App Rep 88, HL, it was clear that several persons had called at the defendant's address because they believed he could provide them with drugs. A majority the House of Lords ruled that this was logically irrelevant to the issue of whether the defendant was indeed a drug dealer, but a minority, dissenting, held that this evidence was highly relevant.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1365. Discretion to exclude admissible evidence.

1365. Discretion to exclude admissible evidence.

In any proceedings<sup>1</sup> the court may refuse to allow evidence on which the prosecution proposes to rely to be given if it appears to the court that, having regard to all the circumstances, including the circumstances in which the evidence was obtained, the admission of the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that the court ought not to admit it<sup>2</sup>.

This principal statutory discretion to exclude admissible prosecution evidence exists alongside other statutory and common law powers and duties<sup>3</sup>, but in most respects appears to be significantly wider than any exclusionary power at common law<sup>4</sup>. At common law, courts and judges retain a limited discretion to exclude prosecution evidence the prejudicial effect of which outweighs its probative value<sup>5</sup>, and to exclude self-incriminatory evidence unfairly obtained from the defendant after the commission of the alleged offence<sup>6</sup>, but there is no wider discretion at common law to exclude relevant admissible evidence on the ground that it was obtained by improper, unlawful or unfair means<sup>7</sup>.

In exercising the statutory discretion, a court or judge may need to take a number of considerations into account. It is not enough to ask whether admission of the evidence in question would in some way be unfair to the defendant. The question is whether admission of that evidence would have such an unfair effect as to require its exclusion<sup>8</sup>. That may in turn require the court to balance the interests of the defendant against wider and potentially conflicting interests, including the need for the public to be protected against dangerous offenders<sup>9</sup>.

A court or judge ordinarily has no power to exclude or restrict the use of legally admissible evidence by or on behalf of a defendant, even if that evidence is unfairly prejudicial to a co-defendant and has been, or would have been excluded as prosecution evidence<sup>10</sup>. In respect of hearsay evidence, however, either prosecution or defence evidence may be excluded where, taking account of the danger that to admit it would result in undue waste of time, the case for exclusion outweighs the case for admitting it<sup>11</sup>.

1 For these purposes, 'proceedings' means criminal proceedings, including (1) proceedings in the United Kingdom or elsewhere before a court-martial constituted under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957; (2) proceedings in the United Kingdom or elsewhere before the Courts-Martial Appeal Court (a) on an appeal from a court-martial so constituted; or (b) on a reference under the Courts-Martial (Appeals) Act 1968 s 34; and (3) proceedings before a Standing Civilian Court: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 82(1) (definition amended by the Armed Forces Act 1996 ss 5, 35(2), Sch 1 para 107(a), (b), Sch 7 Pt I). As from a day to be appointed the definition is amended so that the reference to the court-martial being constituted under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957 is removed: see the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 82(1) (definition prospectively amended by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 ss 67(3), 68(3)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78(1). 'The width of section 78(1) is of critical importance. Although it is formally cast in the form of a discretion ('the court may') the objective criterion whether 'the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings' in truth imports a judgment whether in the light of the statutory criterion of fairness the court ought to admit the evidence': R v Z [2005] UKHL 22 at [53], [2005] 2 AC 467 at [53] per Lord Steyn.

An appellate court nevertheless may interfere with a ruling under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 (as amended) only where it appears that the court below reached a decision that was perverse or unreasonable, or failed to consider relevant issues (R v Pettman (2 May 1985) Lexis, CA; R v Burke (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 156, CA; R v Mason [1987] 3 All ER 481, 86 Cr App Rep 349, CA; R v Hawkins [2005] All ER (D) 163 (Jun), CA).

Examples of the s 78 discretion in operation may be found in relation to confession evidence (see PARA 1545 post), evidence of identification obtained in breach of the Code D: Code of Practice for the Identification of Persons by Police Officers (see PARA 1456 post), evidence of the conviction of a person other than the defendant tendered in order to establish his guilt of the offence for which he was convicted under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 74(1) (see PARA 1498 post) and evidence obtained as a result of entrapment, although in cases of unfair entrapment the court's power to stay proceedings as an abuse of process may often be more appropriate (see R v Looseley; A-G's Reference (No 3 of 2000) [2001] UKHL 53, [2001] 4 All ER 897, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 360; and PARA 55 ante).

3 Nothing in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 prejudices any rule of law requiring a court to exclude evidence (s 78(2)) and nothing in that Act prejudices any power of a court to exclude evidence, whether by preventing questions from being put or otherwise, at its discretion (s 82(3)). Where, however, the Serious Fraud Office has the conduct of any prosecution of an offence which does not relate to inland revenue, the court may not prevent the prosecution from relying on any evidence under s 78 by reason only of the fact that the information concerned was disclosed by Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs for the purposes of any prosecution of an offence relating to a former inland revenue matter: Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 3(2) (amended by the Commissioners for Revenue and Customs Act 2005 s 50(6), Sch 4 para 35(1)(b)). See further PARA 1094 ante.

4 It was said on a few occasions after its enactment that the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 merely restates the common law power to exclude evidence (see eg R v Mason [1987] 3 All ER 481 at 484, 86 Cr App Rep 349 at 354, CA, per Watkins LJ). It is now clear that the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 goes much further than this, in particular because it significantly widens the discretion to exclude evidence that has been unfairly or unlawfully obtained: see R v Gill and Ranuana [1989] Crim LR 358, CA, per Lord Lane CJ, disapproving dicta in R v Harwood [1989] Crim LR 285, CA; R v Smurthwaite, R v Gill [1994] 1 All ER 898, 98 Cr App Rep 437, CA; A-G's Reference (No 3 of 1999) [2001] 2 AC 91, [2001] 1 All ER 577, HL; R v Looseley; A-G's Reference (No 3 of 2000) [2001] UKHL 53, [2001] 4 All ER 897, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 360.

There is one context in which the courts' common law powers are more extensive than those under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78, and that is where the evidence in question has already been adduced. Section 78 is of no assistance in that context, but if it appears that the evidence ought not to have been admitted the court or judge may at common law take whatever action may be necessary to prevent an injustice, whether by directing the jury to ignore the offending evidence or, if this is not sufficient, by discharging the jury: see R v Sat-Bhambra (1988) 88 Cr App Rep 55, CA.

5 Selvey v DPP [1970] AC 304, 52 Cr App Rep 443, HL; R v Sang [1980] AC 402, 69 Cr App Rep 282, HL. The discretion is linked to, and is probably an aspect of, the discretion to exclude evidence to ensure a fair trial: R v Sang supra at 434 and at 288, at 438 and at 292, at 451 and at 303 per Lord Diplock, Viscount Dilhorne and Lord Scarman respectively. At common law evidence obtained by entrapment could not be excluded by exercise of the court's discretion (R v Sang supra) but it is now recognised that entrapment may in some cases justify a court in ordering a stay of the proceedings in order to prevent an abuse of process (R v Looseley; A-G's Reference (No 3 of 2000) [2001] UKHL 53, [2001] 4 All ER 897, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 360; see PARA 55 ante).

8 R v Walsh (1989) 91 Cr App Rep 161, CA. In so deciding, the court or judge must now take account of any relevant principles established under the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969): see A-G's Reference (No 3 of 1999) [2001] 2 AC 91, [2001] 1 All ER 577, HL; R v Allan [2004] EWCA Crim 2236, [2005] Crim LR 716 (following Allan v United Kingdom (2002) 13 BHRC 652, ECtHR). Indeed, the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 serves a very similar purpose to Art 6 of the Convention: R v Highton, R v Van Nguyen, R v Carp [2005] EWCA Crim 1985, [2005] 1 WLR 3472, [2006] 1 Cr App Rep 125. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

9 'The competing public requirements must be considered and weighed against each other. On the one hand there is the public need to bring to conviction those who commit criminal offences. On the other hand there is the public interest in the protection of the individual from unlawful and unfair treatment. Convictions obtained by the aid of unlawful or unfair acts may be obtained at too high a price. Hence the judicial discretion': A-G's Reference (No 3 of 1999) [2001] 2 AC 91 at 124, 125, [2001] 1 All ER 577 at 590, HL, per Lord Hutton, citing R v Ireland (1970) 126 CLR 321 at 335, Aust HC, per Barwick CJ.

1365 Discretion to exclude admissible evidence

NOTE 1--Definition of 'proceedings' further amended, definition of 'service proceedings' added: Armed Forces Act 2006 Sch 16 para 104(2).

NOTE 2--To ensure fairness the court may exclude evidence of substantial probative value where a defendant manipulates procedural rules so as to prevent his co-defendant from responding to an allegation of bad character: R v Musone [2007] EWCA Crim 1237, [2007] 1 WLR 2467.

NOTE 7--The fact that a person has been arrested unlawfully does not automatically invalidate medical procedures subsequently carried out to obtain evidence from him: DPP v Wilson [2009] EWHC 1988 (Admin), [2009] RTR 29.

NOTE 8--See R v Ibrahim [2008] EWCA Crim 880, [2008] 4 All ER 208 (evidence obtained in 'safety interviews' under Terrorism Act 2000 admissible at trial, subject to ordinary principles as to a fair trial and over-arching provisions in 1984 Act s 78); R v Malicki [2009] EWCA Crim 365, [2009] All ER (D) 309 (Mar) (exclusion of evidence of five-year-old complainant who had just watched her video evidence given 14 months previously).

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1366. Relevant facts and circumstantial evidence.

1366. Relevant facts and circumstantial evidence.

As a general rule the evidence which may be adduced is restricted to evidence of matters tending directly or indirectly to prove or disprove the facts in issue<sup>1</sup>. In a criminal trial the prosecution must prove that the offence alleged has been committed<sup>2</sup>, and that the defendant was responsible<sup>3</sup>. In so doing, it may be relevant to go beyond proof of the unlawful act itself and to show other conduct or surrounding circumstances which are so connected with the offence as to make them part of the same transaction<sup>4</sup>. All the details of the alleged transaction may become relevant so as to be admissible as part of the prosecution's case.

Since many crimes are committed in secrecy, it is inevitable that, in a criminal trial, direct proof of guilt is often lacking and a great deal of the evidence is indirect or circumstantial<sup>5</sup>.

Circumstantial evidence is evidence of one or more facts (such as motive, opportunity, or fingerprints left at or near the scene of the crime) from which other facts (which may be the facts in issue, or secondary or collateral facts) may then be inferred or deduced<sup>6</sup>.

A single strand of circumstantial evidence may carry little weight, but when combined with other such evidence the cumulative effect may become very strong<sup>7</sup>. In the absence of evidence directly proving the facts in issue, the defendant may even be convicted solely on circumstantial evidence: in a case of murder, for example, there may be a conviction notwithstanding that the body is never found, provided that there is sufficient circumstantial evidence to convince the jury that the facts cannot be accounted for on any rational hypothesis other than murder<sup>8</sup>.

In seeking to connect the defendant with the offence, facts which tend to show motive for, means of, or opportunity of, committing the offence, or which show that the defendant had made preparations with the offence in view, or had threatened to do the act complained of, are also relevant<sup>9</sup>. Where the acts constituting the offence reveal any special knowledge, technique or attribute, the possession or non-possession of such special knowledge, skill or attribute is relevant<sup>10</sup>, and the non-possession of it may be decisive proof of innocence.

The subsequent conduct of the defendant may furnish evidence of guilt, for example evidence of flight, or of the fabrication or suppression of evidence, or of the telling of lies<sup>11</sup>. Possession of recently stolen property may, if unexplained, give rise to an inference that the person in possession is the thief or handler of the property<sup>12</sup>.

Where a particular intent is of the essence of the offence, that intent must be proved, either by direct evidence or, more likely, by inference on the ground that the particular injury or damage was the natural and probable consequence of the act done by the defendant<sup>13</sup>. In determining whether a person has committed an offence, a court or jury is not, however, bound in law to infer that he intended or foresaw a result of his actions by reason only of its being a natural and probable consequence of those actions; it must decide whether the defendant did intend or foresee that result by reference to all the evidence, drawing such inferences from it as appear proper in all the circumstances<sup>14</sup>.

2 See 2 Hale PC 290; R v Burdett (1820) 4 B & Ald 95 at 162; R v Sims [1946] KB 531 at 539, 31 Cr App Rep 158. As to a defendant being found guilty of an offence other than that with which he is charged see PARA 1335 et seq ante.

3 As to evidence of identification see PARA 1455 et seq post.

4 See Ratten v R [1972] AC 378 at 388, 56 Cr App Rep 18 at 25, PC, per Lord Wilberforce, explaining that it may be 'arbitrary and artificial' to confine the inquiry to an act, such as a stabbing or shooting, without knowing in a broader sense what was done. This aspect of the doctrine of relevance is sometimes unhelpfully referred to as the res gestae, which phrase in the modern law of criminal evidence is more commonly used to denote that exception to the hearsay rule whereby a hearsay statement may be given in evidence if it is an immediate and spontaneous reaction to the events in issue: see PARA 1525 post. As to the proof of facts connected with the offence so as to be part of the transaction see R v Lord George Gordon (1781) 21 State Tr 485 at 535; R v Damaree (1710) 15 State Tr 521; R v Black (1922) 16 Cr App Rep 118, CCA. Evidence must generally be confined to those facts which constitute, or are connected with, the offence charged, and evidence cannot be given of other, unrelated, facts: R v Butler (1846) 2 Car & Kir 221; R v Ollis [1900] 2 QB 758 at 781, CCR per Channell J; R v Peckham (1935) 100 JP 59, CCA. If, however, the further facts are so inextricably bound up with the facts in issue as to constitute in effect one transaction, evidence may be given of the further facts: R v Whiley (1804) 2 Leach 983 at 985 per Lord Ellenborough CJ; R v Voke (1823) Russ & Ry 531, CCR; R v Ellis (1826) 6 B & C 145; R v Winkworth (1830) 4 C & P 444; R v Mansfield (1841) Car & M 140; R v Long (1833) 6 C & P 179; R v Bleasdale (1848) 2 Car & Kir 765; R v Cobden (1862) 3 F & F 833; R v Firth (1869) LR 1 CCR 172; Ex p Burnby [1901] 2 KB 458; R v Welman (1853) Dears CC 188; O'Leary v R (1946) 73 CLR 566, Aust HC; R v Sims [1946] KB 531, 31 Cr App Rep 158, CCA.

Circumstantial evidence which is itself of little weight may, taken together with other evidence, satisfy the onus of proof on the prosecution: see eg R v Lydon (Sean) (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 221, CA (piece of paper bearing defendant's first name found near scene of crime close to articles likely to have been used in the commission of the offence; taken together with other evidence, sufficient proof of identity).

Other examples of the use of circumstantial evidence as the only proof of an offence may be found: see eg Noon v Smith [1964] 3 All ER 895, 49 Cr App Rep 55, DC.

9 As to motive see R v Clewes (1830) 4 C & P 221; R v Buckley (1873) 13 Cox CC 293. 'In an ordinary prosecution for murder you can prove previous acts or words of the defendant to show that he entertained feelings of enmity towards the deceased, and this is evidence not merely of the malicious mind with which he killed the deceased, but of the fact that he killed him. . . . It is more probable that men are killed by those who have some motive for killing them than by those who have not': R v Ball [1911] AC 47 at 68, HL, per Lord Atkinson (affd in R v Williams (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 299, CA; and R v Phillips [2003] EWCA Crim 1379, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 528, CA).

However, such evidence should now be considered in the light of DPP v Boardman [1975] AC 421 at 435, sub nom Boardman v DPP (1974) 60 Cr App Rep 165, HL, and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 11 Ch 1 (ss 98-113) (see PARA 1502 et seq post). See also R v Hodges (1957) 41 Cr App Rep 218, CCA (evidence of invitation to help break into building admissible to rebut defence of lawful excuse for possession of housebreaking implements).

Evidence that the defendant had no motive to commit the offence, or had a motive not to commit it, is admissible for the defence: R v Grant (1865) 4 F & F 322. This may involve the suggestion that a co-defendant had a motive or disposition which the defendant lacked: Lowery v R [1974] AC 85, [1973] 3 All ER 662, PC.

11 R v Onufrejczyk [1955] 1 QB 388, 39 Cr App Rep 1, CCA. The fact that the defendant seeks to induce another to give false evidence on his behalf is admissible against him: R v Watt (1905) 20 Cox CC 852. As to a defendant's failure to provide intimate samples for analysis, or testify at trial, or explain certain facts or disclose his defence prior to the trial, see PARA 1550 et seq post.

12 This is sometimes called the 'doctrine of recent possession' but is merely a matter of drawing possible inferences from circumstantial evidence. See generally R v Partridge (1836) 7 C & P 551; R v Crowhurst (1844) 1 Car & Kir 370; R v Poolman (1909) 3 Cr App Rep 36, CCA; R v Schama, R v Abramovitch (1914) 84 LJKB 396, 11 Cr App Rep 45, CCA; R v Seymour [1954] 1 All ER 1006, 38 Cr App Rep 68, CCA; R v Ball [1983] 2 All ER 1089, 77 Cr App Rep 131, CA.

EVIDENCE/(1) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES/1367. The best evidence and primary evidence rules.

1367. The best evidence and primary evidence rules.

There are some references, mostly in old cases, to a 'best evidence rule' by which at common law only the best available evidence of a fact in issue was said to be admissible<sup>1</sup>; but whatever status this rule may once have enjoyed, there is now very little modern authority for its continued survival and some express assertions of its demise<sup>2</sup>. The general rule now appears to be that whether a given item of evidence is the best available evidence or not goes only to its weight, not its admissibility<sup>3</sup>.

Closely related to the best evidence rule, the 'primary evidence rule' formerly provided that in the case of documentary evidence, only the original document or an 'enrolled' copy of that document was admissible to prove its contents and authenticity, but the old rule has effectively been discarded by the courts<sup>4</sup>, and any surviving remnants of this rule are further limited in criminal proceedings by legislation (which now generally permits the use of authenticated copies)<sup>5</sup>.

3 R v Governor of Pentonville Prison, ex p Osman [1989] 3 All ER 701, 90 Cr App Rep 281, DC. There is a reference to evidence being inadmissible as 'not the best evidence' in R v Quinn [1962] 2 QB 245 at 257, [1961] 3 All ER 88 at 93, CCA, per Ashworth J, but the evidence in this case was a self-serving filmed reconstruction of an allegedly obscene stage performance (akin to a self-serving pre-trial statement), and arguably inadmissible on that ground alone. In contrast, a self-incriminating reconstruction of an alleged offence, if made in circumstances in which an oral or written confession would have been admissible, will be admissible on the same basis as such a confession (Li Shu Ling v R [1989] AC 270, 88 Cr App Rep 82, PC).

4 Springsteen v Masquerade Music Ltd [2001] EWCA Civ 563, [2001] EMLR 654. The primary evidence rule was in any event inapplicable to recordings on film or tape, which may be proved by copies at common law (Kajala v Noble (1982) 75 Cr App Rep 149, DC; R v Wayte (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 110, CA) and if lost or destroyed their contents may be proved by oral evidence from persons who have previously viewed or heard them (Taylor v Chief Constable of Cheshire [1987] 1 All ER 225, 84 Cr App Rep 191, DC).

EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1368. Persuasive and evidential burdens of proof.

(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF

1368. Persuasive and evidential burdens of proof.

A party to legal proceedings is said to bear a persuasive (or legal) burden of proof in respect of a particular fact or issue in the cases where the onus is on him to prove that fact or issue to the required standard of proof<sup>1</sup>. This involves satisfying or persuading the court or jury as to the truth of that fact or issue at the conclusion of the trial. In contrast, a party is said to bear an evidential burden where he is required to adduce evidence that is capable of belief and capable (if believed) of proving the fact or issue in question, so that at a trial on indictment the judge may properly leave that issue to the jury<sup>2</sup>. The evidential burden ordinarily lies on the party bearing the persuasive burden in respect of the issue in question<sup>3</sup>, but this is not always the case<sup>4</sup>.

Where the evidential burden rests on the prosecution, the general rule is that it must be discharged by the end of the prosecution case<sup>5</sup>. If it has not then been discharged (that is if the prosecution fails to adduce such credible evidence as would, if believed and uncontradicted, suffice to prove the case against the defendant) the defendant may successfully make a submission of 'no case to answer'<sup>6</sup>.

A burden of proof may also arise where there is a dispute as to facts relating to the admissibility of an item of evidence or as to the competence of a witness. This is a persuasive burden, but differs from the normal persuasive burden in that it is the judge who must be persuaded prior to the admission or exclusion of the evidence<sup>7</sup>.

1 R v Edwards [1975] 1 QB 27 at 40, 59 Cr App Rep 213 at 221, CA, per Lawton LJ ('persuasive burden'). This burden of proof is sometimes also referred to as the 'probative burden': see DPP v Morgan [1976] AC 182 at 209, 61 Cr App Rep 136 at 146, HL, per Lord Hailsham of St Marylebone LC. As to the incidence of the burden see PARA 1369 post.

2 I.e. the obligation to lay a foundation for proof of a particular issue: Bratty v A-G for Northern Ireland [1963] AC 386 at 413, 46 Cr App Rep 1 at 21, HL, per Lord Denning.

3 As to the position where the prosecution fails to make out a case to answer see R v Galbraith [1981] 2 All ER 1060, 73 Cr App Rep 124, CA; and PARA 1313 ante.

4 As to cases where the defendant bears an evidential (but not a persuasive) burden see PARA 1371 post.

5 See PARA 1316 ante. Where, however, the defendant is charged in the same proceedings with an offence of murder or manslaughter and with an offence of causing or allowing the death of a child or vulnerable adult under the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 5 (see PARA 107 ante) in respect of the same death, the question whether there is a case to answer on the charge of murder or manslaughter is not to be considered before the close of all the evidence (or, if at some earlier time he ceases to be charged with the s 5 offence, before that earlier time): see s 6(4).

6 See PARA 1313 ante.

7 See PARA 1373 post.

EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1369. Persuasive burden generally on prosecution.

1369. Persuasive burden generally on prosecution.

The general rule at common law is that the prosecution must establish the guilt of the defendant beyond reasonable doubt<sup>1</sup>. This rule is reinforced by the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms<sup>2</sup>. The prosecution's obligation is to prove the whole crime, including (with some exceptions) the negating of any defences which are in issue<sup>3</sup>. Accordingly, a defendant who pleads 'not guilty' ordinarily casts upon the prosecution the burden of proving every fact that is in issue<sup>4</sup>. If, when the totality of the evidence has been heard and considered, the court or jury is not satisfied of his guilt, it must then acquit him<sup>5</sup>.

1 Woolmington v DPP [1935] AC 462, 25 Cr App Rep 72, HL. As to the standard of proof see further PARA 1372 post. The general rule is subject to exceptions: see PARA 1370 et seq post. The common law recognises only one specific exception, namely in the case of a defendant who raises the issue of insanity: Woolmington v DPP supra; Mancini v DPP [1942] AC 1 at 11, 28 Cr App Rep 65 at 76, HL, per Lord Simon. All other specific exceptions to the rule are statutory.

2 The Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969) is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq. By art 6(2), 'everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law'. This does not, however, create an absolute rule: Salabiaku v France (1988) 13 EHRR 379, ECtHR; Brown v Stott [2003] 1 AC 681, [2001] 2 All ER 97, PC. There are, accordingly, certain circumstances in which the imposition of a burden of proof on the defendant is permissible under the Convention: see R v DPP, ex p Kebeline [2000] 2 AC 326, [1999] 4 All ER 801, HL; R v Lambert [2001] UKHL 37, [2002] 2 AC 545, [2001] 2 Cr App Rep 511; R v Johnstone [2003] UKHL 28, [2003] 3 All ER 884, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 493; A-G's Reference (No 1 of 2004), R v Edwards [2004] EWCA Crim 1025, [2005] 4 All ER 457, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 424; Sheldrake v DPP, A-G's Reference (No 4 of 2002) [2004] UKHL 43, [2005] 1 AC 264, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep 450. See further PARA 1370 post.

3 Chan Kau v R [1955] AC 206 at 211, [1955] 1 All ER 266 at 267, PC. Thus the prosecution must negative self-defence, where that defence is raised: Chan Kau v R supra; and see also R v Lobell [1957] 1 QB 547, 41 Cr App Rep 100, CCA; Palmer v R [1971] AC 814, 55 Cr App Rep 223, PC. As to exceptional cases in which a defence must be proved by the defendant see PARA 1370 post.

4 If the defendant formally admits the actus reus of the offence, but denies mens rea (eg by pleading that an alleged murder was in fact an accidental killing) the prosecution is required to prove mens rea; a plea of accident is a denial of guilt and imposes no burden of proof on the defendant: Woolmington v DPP [1935] AC 462, 25 Cr App Rep 72, HL.

5 It is the duty of the trial judge to give the jury a clear and accurate direction on the burden and standard of proof, without which a conviction is liable to be quashed: see PARA 1320 ante.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1370. Persuasive burden on defendant.

1370. Persuasive burden on defendant.

A persuasive burden of proof (or 'reverse legal burden') is in some cases imposed on the defendant. At common law, the only such reverse burden is imposed when the defendant raises a defence of insanity<sup>1</sup>. To succeed with this defence, the defendant must establish his insanity upon a balance of probabilities<sup>2</sup>. In contrast, statutory exceptions are numerous. It is common for statutes to include provisions that purport expressly to reverse the usual burden of proof in respect of a particular issue<sup>3</sup>, and in other cases the courts may conclude that Parliament must, by necessary implication, have intended to impose such a reverse burden, even where it has not done so expressly<sup>4</sup>. There is statutory authority for this type of implied reversal of the burden as far as summary trials are concerned<sup>5</sup>, and this has been held to mirror the principles of statutory interpretation applicable to trial on indictment<sup>6</sup>, which means that the allocation of the burden of proof in respect of offences triable either way does not differ according to the mode of trial adopted<sup>7</sup>.

In no case, however, is the entire burden of proof in a case imposed on the defendant. The prosecution must always prove certain facts (or those facts must instead be formally admitted) before the defendant can be required to discharge his reverse burden in respect of other facts. Thus, even if the defendant fails to discharge a burden of proof placed upon him in respect of a defence of lawful authority or justification, he must still be acquitted if the prosecution fails to satisfy the court or jury beyond reasonable doubt as to the basic facts that give rise to the imposition of the burden in the first place<sup>8</sup>.

The position governing both express and implied reversals of the persuasive burden of proof is now further complicated by the fact that legislation must be construed wherever possible in such a way as to be compatible with any rights protected under the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms<sup>9</sup>. Even where Parliament appears clearly to have intended to impose a persuasive burden of proof on the defendant, if the court considers that a literal or purposive interpretation of the relevant provision would be incompatible with the presumption of innocence guaranteed under the Convention, it must wherever possible 'read down' that provision so as to impose only an evidential burden in its place<sup>10</sup>. The imposition of an evidential burden will not ordinarily be incompatible with any Convention rights<sup>11</sup>.

In deciding whether the imposition of a reverse persuasive burden is or is not compatible with the Convention, the task of the court is never to decide whether a reverse burden should be imposed on a defendant, but always to assess whether a burden enacted by Parliament unjustifiably infringes the presumption of innocence<sup>12</sup>. Where the imposition of such a burden goes no further than is reasonably necessary to achieve its objective (ie where it is proportionate) and is reasonably necessary in all the circumstances, it will ordinarily be justified<sup>13</sup>. The court may need to take a number of factors into account<sup>14</sup>, but although these factors are reasonably well established in English and United Kingdom case law and in the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights<sup>15</sup>, the application and assessment of those factors in particular cases is often a matter of great difficulty and uncertainty<sup>16</sup>. Some rules or provisions imposing reverse persuasive burdens have already been ruled compatible with the Convention<sup>17</sup> and even fewer have been ruled incompatible<sup>18</sup>, but the compatibility of others remains to be determined, because the courts address such issues on a case-by-case basis.

A persuasive burden of proof may also be imposed on a defendant in respect of the admissibility of an item of evidence on which he proposes to rely<sup>19</sup>.

1 Woolmington v DPP [1935] AC 462, 25 Cr App Rep 72, HL; Bratty v A-G for Northern Ireland [1963] AC 386, 46 Cr App Rep 1, HL. See also M'Naghten's Case (1843) 10 Cl & Fin 200 at 210, HL. Where the issue of insanity is raised by the prosecution, the burden is on the prosecution to establish the issue beyond reasonable doubt: R v Bastian [1958] 1 All ER 568n, [1958] 1 WLR 413; R v Grant [1960] Crim LR 424; and see the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 6; and PARA 96 ante. In the same way, where the issue of unfitness to plead is raised, the legal burden lies upon the party seeking to establish unfitness: R v Podola [1960] 1 QB 325, 43 Cr App Rep 220, CCA; R v Robertson [1968] 3 All ER 557, 52 Cr App Rep 690, CA. See PARA 1265 ante.

2 This is invariably the standard to be attained where the defendant bears a persuasive burden of proof: R v Dunbar [1958] 1 QB 1, 41 Cr App Rep 182, CCA; R v Carr-Briant [1943] KB 607, 29 Cr App Rep 76, CCA; R v Hudson [1966] 1 QB 448, 49 Cr App Rep 69, CCA; Sodeman v R [1936] 2 All ER 1138, PC (burden of proving insanity not higher than the burden which rests on a party in civil proceedings). See further PARA 1372 post.

3 See eg the Homicide Act 1957 s 2 (diminished responsibility; see PARA 96 ante); s 4 (as amended) (suicide pact; see PARA 98 ante); Trade Descriptions Act 1968 s 24(1) (act or default of another person or accident or other cause beyond defendant's control; see SALE OF GOODS AND SUPPLY OF SERVICES vol 41 (2005 Reissue) PARA 472); the Public Order Act 1986 s 6(5) (burden of proving that intoxication was not self-induced, or that it was caused solely by the taking or administration of a substance in the course of medical treatment is on the defendant; see PARA 555 ante); Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 139(4) (good reason or lawful authority for carrying a blade in public place; see PARA 700 ante); Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 s 15 (as amended) (defence of consuming alcohol before providing a specimen for analysis but after the alleged excess alcohol offence; see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARA 991). Note, however, that provisions which purport to reverse a burden of proof may be construed differently where they would otherwise be incompatible with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969); see the text and notes 9-18 infra. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

5 Where the defendant relies for his defence on any exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification, whether or not it accompanies the description of the offence or matter of complaint in the enactment creating the offence or on which the complaint is founded, the burden of proving the exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification is on him, notwithstanding that the information or complaint may contain an allegation negating the exception, exemption, proviso, excuse or qualification: Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 101. Thus the defendant is obliged to prove that he has a valid licence if charged with driving without a licence (John v Humphreys [1955] 1 All ER 793, [1955] 1 WLR 325, DC) and that he has at least third party insurance if charged with driving without insurance (Williams v Russell (1933) 149 LT 190, DC; Davey v Towle [1973] Crim LR 360, DC).

7 R v Hunt (Richard) [1987] AC 352 at 372-373, 84 Cr App Rep 163 at 173-174, HL, per Lord Griffiths. As a guide to construction, it should be considered whether the enactment in question prohibits the doing of an act save in specified circumstances or by persons of specified classes or with specified qualifications or with the licence or permission of specified authorities (R v Hunt (Richard) supra approving to this extent R v Edwards [1975] QB 27, 59 Cr App Rep 213, CA) although other considerations must also be taken into account, such as whether it is fair or practicable for the defendant to be required to discharge such a burden (R v Hunt (Richard) supra). Provisions which might otherwise have been (and may previously have been) construed as imposing a full reverse burden of proof may now have to be construed differently if they would otherwise be incompatible with the European Convention on Human Rights: see R (on the application of Grundy and Co Excavations Ltd) v Halton Division Magistrates' Court [2003] EWHC 272 (Admin), 167 JP 387, DC; and the text and notes 9-18 infra.

8 See eg Gatland v Metropolitan Police Comr [1968] 2 QB 279, [1968] 2 All ER 100, DC, where the defendant was charged under what is now the Highways Act 1980 s 161(1) (see HIGHWAYS, STREETS AND BRIDGES vol 21 (2004 Reissue) PARA 381), the case being that, without lawful authority or excuse he had deposited a skip on a highway in consequence of which a user of the highway had been injured or endangered. The defendant failed to prove any lawful authority for his actions (as required under what is now the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 101) but his guilt was not established because the prosecutor failed to prove that the presence of the skip on the highway had in fact caused any user of the highway to be injured or endangered.

9 See the Human Rights Act 1998 s 3. Within the European Convention on Human Rights, the provision that is at risk of being infringed by reverse burdens is art 6(2), by which everyone charged with a criminal offence is presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS.

- 85 (1) When ascertaining whether an exception is justified, the court must construe the provision to ascertain the realistic effects of the reverse burden. In doing this the courts should be more concerned with substance than form. If the proper interpretation is that the statutory provision creates an offence plus an exception, that will in itself be a strong indication that there is no contravention of the European Convention on Human Rights art 6(2).
- 86 (2) The easier it is for the defendant to discharge the burden the more likely it is that the reverse burden is justified. This will be the case where the facts are within the defendant's own knowledge. How difficult it would be for the prosecution to establish the facts is also indicative of whether a reverse legal burden is justified.
- 87 (3) Caution must be exercised when considering the seriousness of the offence. The need for a reverse burden is not necessarily reflected by the gravity of the offence, though, from a defendant's point of view, the more serious the offence, the more important it is that there is no interference with the presumption of innocence.

See also R v Drummond [2002] EWCA Crim 527, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 352 (Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 s 15 (as amended); if a defendant drinks alcohol after an alleged drink-driving offence, but before providing a specimen for analysis, he defeats the aim of the legislature by making the test potentially unreliable; and the relevant scientific evidence to set against the specimen result is within his knowledge or means of access).

See also R v Johnstone [2003] UKHL 28 at [52], [53], [2003] 3 All ER 884 at [52], [53], [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 493 at [53] (Trade Marks Act 1994 s 92(5) (see TRADE MARKS AND TRADE NAMES vol 48 (2007 Reissue) PARA 144): those who trade in brand products are aware of the need to be on guard against counterfeit goods. They are aware of the need to deal with reputable suppliers and to keep records, and are aware of the risks they take if they do not. The s 92(5) defence relates to facts within the defendant person's own knowledge; his state of mind, and the reasons why he held the belief in question. His sources of supply are known to him. Conversely, it is to be expected that those who supply traders with counterfeit products, if traceable at all by outside investigators, are unlikely to be co-operative. So, in practice, if the prosecution must prove that a trader acted dishonestly, fewer investigations will be undertaken and fewer prosecutions will take place).

A similar burden is imposed for the purposes of the related defence of diminished responsibility (ie under the Homicide Act 1957 s 2): see R v Lambert, R v Ali, R v Jordan [2002] QB 1112, [2001] 1 All ER 1014, CA; R v McQuade [2005] NICA 2.

There would be a clear breach of the presumption of innocence, and a real risk of unfair conviction, if such a person could exonerate himself only by establishing on the balance of probabilities that the organisation was not proscribed on the last (or only) occasion on which he became a member or began to profess to be a member, and that he has not taken part in the activities of the organisation at any time while it was proscribed).

Note that R v Carass [2001] EWCA Crim 2845, [2002] 1 WLR 1714, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 77 (in which it was held that in order to avoid incompatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights, the Insolvency Act 1986 s 206(4) must be read as imposing only an evidential burden on the defendant) is inconsistent with R v Johnstone [2003] UKHL 28, [2003] 3 All ER 884, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 493, and should now be regarded as impliedly overruled by that case: see A-G's Reference (No 1 of 2004), R v Edwards [2004] EWCA Crim 1025 at [52], [2005] 4 All ER 457 at [52], [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 424 at [52] per Lord Woolf CJ.

19 In such cases, however, it is the judge, rather than the jury, who must be satisfied as to the facts that would make the evidence admissible: see PARA 1373 post.

EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1371. Evidential burden on defendant.

1371. Evidential burden on defendant.

The defendant necessarily bears the evidential burden as to those issues or defences in respect of which the persuasive burden rests upon him<sup>1</sup>. In addition, he bears the evidential, though not the persuasive, burden of raising any other common law defences, including self-defence<sup>2</sup>, provocation<sup>3</sup>, duress by threats<sup>4</sup>, duress of circumstances<sup>5</sup>, or non-insane automatism<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, the defendant bears an evidential burden in respect of any statutory defences even if he does not also bear the persuasive burden<sup>7</sup>.

In contrast, no such burden is imposed on the defendant where his defence involves a mere denial of one or more of the basic elements of the offence that must be proved by the prosecution<sup>8</sup>. Where, for example, an alleged offence requires proof of intent and the defendant claims that he committed the actus reus by accident<sup>9</sup> or mistake<sup>10</sup>, this is effectively a denial of mens rea; and the defendant cannot bear an evidential burden in denying what the prosecution bears the evidential and legal burdens of proving<sup>11</sup>.

Where the defendant relies upon evidence of an alibi, he does not merely deny that he committed the alleged offence, but positively asserts that he was somewhere else when that offence was committed. The prosecution cannot be required to disprove such an alibi unless the defendant has adduced some evidence in support of it, and it follows that the defendant bears an evidential (but not a persuasive) burden in respect of that evidence<sup>12</sup>, but the prosecution cannot prove the defendant's guilt merely by disproving his alibi. The prosecution's evidential and legal burdens of proving that the defendant committed the offence with the requisite mens rea remain unaffected<sup>13</sup>.

It is not always necessary for the defendant to adduce evidence in support of an issue in respect of which he bears an evidential burden, because in some cases the prosecution's own evidence may itself provide a sufficient evidential foundation for leaving the issue to the jury<sup>14</sup>. Where this is not the case, the defendant should place before the court, by cross-examination of prosecution witnesses or by evidence called on his behalf or by a combination of the two, such material as makes the issue in question a live issue, fit to be placed before the jury<sup>15</sup>. It is for the judge to rule whether a theory or a submission advanced by the defence has the support of evidence<sup>16</sup>. If he so rules, it is then for the prosecution to eliminate the issue and prove the constituents of the offence charged<sup>17</sup>. If the judge rules against the defendant, the defence in question will not be left to the jury<sup>18</sup>.

1 See PARA 1370 ante. This means that a defence such as insanity or diminished responsibility may not be left to the jury unless some admissible evidence has been adduced that is capable, if believed, of establishing that defence (see R v Windle [1952] 2 QB 826, [1952] 2 All ER 1, CCA). Where there is evidence supporting such a defence, but the defendant has not chosen to raise it (eg because his defence is one of outright denial) the trial judge should bring the matter to the attention of the defence, but should not of his own motion direct the jury to consider the issue: R v Campbell (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 255, CA. See further PARA 96 ante.

A verdict of insanity cannot be returned by a jury unless supported by the written or oral evidence of two or more registered medical practitioners, at least one of whom is duly approved by the Secretary of State as having special experience in the diagnosis or treatment of mental disorder: see the Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 s 1; and PARA 1485 ante. It follows that an insanity defence cannot be left to the jury in the absence of such evidence.

8 DPP v Morgan [1976] AC 182, [1975] 2 All ER 347, HL. Strictly speaking, a claim to have acted in lawful self-defence or in the prevention of crime etc is a denial of the unlawfulness that is an essential element in any crime, but the defendant in such cases is nevertheless introducing an issue that the prosecution might not otherwise have to address, and accordingly he bears an evidential burden on that issue. See R v Cameron [1973] Crim LR 520, CA. Similarly, a defence of non-insane automatism (see note 6 supra) involves a denial that the defendant either committed the actus reus or possessed the requisite mens rea, but it is clear that the defendant cannot seek to rely on automatism unless there is some credible evidence to support that defence: Hill v Baxter [1958] 1 QB 277, 42 Cr App Rep 51, DC.

9 Woolmington v DPP [1935] AC 462, 25 Cr App Rep 72, HL.

10 In DPP v Morgan [1976] AC 182, [1975] 2 All ER 347, HL, it was held that a mistaken belief in the complainant's consent would negate any possible liability for rape. It followed that there could be no question of any evidential burden with regard to it being on the defendant, or of the judge withdrawing that issue from the jury in the absence of evidence supporting it. This remains true of any charge of rape brought in respect of things allegedly done before 1 May 2004 (ie the date on which the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 2 was brought into force: Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Commencement) Order 2004, SI 2004/874), but as regards any such offence allegedly committed on or after that date, see PARA 165 et seq ante.

11 DPP v Morgan [1976] AC 182 at 200, [1975] 2 All ER 347 at 350, HL, per Lord Cross. If the defendant admits killing the deceased but denies murder on the basis that the killing was a mere accident, imposition of an evidential burden on the defendant would mean that in the event of there being no admissible evidence to support that defence, the judge would direct the jury to conclude that the killing was 'not an accident'. Clearly this is not the law. To the extent that Mancini v DPP [1942] AC 1 at 8, [1941] 3 All ER 272 at 279, HL, per Viscount Simon LC, suggests that the defendant bears an evidential burden in such cases, DPP v Morgan supra is to be preferred.

Not all accidents or mistakes will negate mens rea. Eg where the defendant shoots at A and accidentally hits B, or mistakes A for B, his liability is unaffected: see PARA 12 ante. Where the defendant claims that he mistakenly believed himself to be acting in self defence he bears a similar evidential burden to that imposed in case of self-defence generally: Blackburn v Bowering [1994] 3 All ER 380, [1994] 1 WLR 1324, CA.

13 R v Lesley [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 39, CA; and see Judicial Studies Board, Specimen Direction No 46.

14 Bullard v R [1957] AC 635, 42 Cr App Rep 1, PC. Thus, where there is evidence of provocation fit to be left to the jury, the judge should put the defence to the jury, whether or not the issue has been raised by the defence and whether or not the defendant has said in terms that he was provoked: Bullard v R supra; R v Cambridge [1994] 2 All ER 760, 99 Cr App Rep 142, CA; and see also PARA 1321 ante.

15 R v Gill [1963] 2 All ER 688, 47 Cr App Rep 166, CCA; Jayasena v R [1970] AC 618 at 623, [1970] 1 All ER 219 at 221, PC; Parker v Smith [1974] Crim LR 426, DC.

16 Bratty v A-G for Northern Ireland [1963] AC 386, 46 Cr App Rep 1, HL. Where there is no evidence to support a defence of self-defence, counsel should not speculate in his closing speech about the way in which the injuries might have been caused, and the defence should not be put to the jury: R v Critchley [1982] Crim LR 524, CA. Where, on the other hand, the issue is raised, it is the duty of the judge to leave the issue to the jury: R v Cousins [1982] QB 526, 74 Cr App Rep 363, CA.

17 R v Gill [1963] 2 All ER 688, 47 Cr App Rep 166, CCA. This does not necessarily require the prosecution to produce specific evidence in rebuttal of the defendant's defence. If the jury considers the defence to be absurd or incredible it may reject it on that basis.

EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1372. Standard of proof.

1372. Standard of proof.

Where a persuasive (or legal) burden of proof lies on the prosecution<sup>1</sup>, the standard of proof required was for many years described as 'proof beyond reasonable doubt'<sup>2</sup>. This standard has not changed, but judges are now advised to direct juries that they must be 'sure' of the defendant's guilt and that 'nothing less will suffice'<sup>3</sup>. Where, however, the concept of proof beyond reasonable doubt has already been referred to in the trial (for example by counsel in their speeches), the jury should be told that this means the same thing as being sure<sup>4</sup>. Proof beyond a reasonable doubt does not mean proof to a scientific certainty<sup>5</sup>, but it is unwise for trial judges to attempt any further elaboration of the test to be applied<sup>6</sup>.

Where the defence bears a persuasive burden of proof, the standard of proof required is proof on the balance of probabilities<sup>7</sup>.

In so far as the prosecution bears an evidential burden of proof, it must adduce such credible evidence as, if believed and if left uncontradicted and unexplained, could be accepted by the jury as proof<sup>8</sup>.

The prosecution does not discharge its burden by proving that the defendant must have committed either one offence or another, unless the two offences share certain elements and all the elements of the lesser offence at least are proved<sup>9</sup>. This means that where the prosecution cannot prove whether an offence of rape was committed under the old law<sup>10</sup> or the new law<sup>11</sup>, it will be impossible for the defendant to be convicted of either offence<sup>12</sup>.

A court or jury should not (at least in the absence of special features or circumstances) be invited to use complex statistical theorems, such as Bayes's Theorem, when seeking to establish whether facts have been proved to the requisite standard. Most evidence has no precise statistical value, and the use of such techniques by unqualified juries would be a 'recipe for confusion, misunderstanding and misjudgment'<sup>13</sup>.

The term is still used in legislation (eg in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 76(2), which requires proof beyond reasonable doubt that confession evidence to be used by the prosecution was not obtained by oppression etc; see PARA 1540 post).

There is no clear authority on the amount of evidence to be adduced by the defence in order to discharge an evidential burden, but arguably it should suffice if the defendant adduces evidence that, if believed, would put the essential facts in some doubt. In some cases the nature of the issue is such that a certain kind of evidence may be called for (eg where the defence of non-insane automatism is raised, it may be necessary to adduce medical evidence in support of it): Bratty v A-G for Northern Ireland [1963] AC 386 at 413, 46 Cr App Rep 1 at 22, HL, per Lord Denning.

1372 Standard of proof

NOTE 10--See Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006 s 55 (continuity of sexual offences law).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(2) BURDEN AND STANDARD OF PROOF/1373. Burden of proving the admissibility of evidence, etc.

1373. Burden of proving the admissibility of evidence, etc.

A third type of burden, which is distinct both from the evidential burden and from the persuasive (or legal) burden, is the burden of proving the admissibility of evidence<sup>1</sup> or the competence of a witness<sup>2</sup>. Admissibility and competence are issues of law and are decided by the court or judge as they arise during the course of the proceedings<sup>3</sup>, but may in some cases depend on disputed facts, such as whether a defendant's confession was freely made or made under oppression<sup>4</sup>. The general rule is that if the admissibility of an item of evidence depends on proof of certain facts, the burden of proving those facts lies on the party seeking to adduce the evidence in question<sup>5</sup>. Similarly, the burden of proving witness competence lies on the party seeking to call that witness<sup>6</sup>.

The standard of proof applicable ordinarily mirrors the standard applicable to the persuasive burden of proof<sup>7</sup>. Thus the prosecution must prove to the full criminal standard any facts essential to the admissibility of their evidence (that is proof beyond reasonable doubt), whereas in similar circumstances a defendant need only prove such matters on the balance of probabilities<sup>8</sup>. On issues of competence, however, legislation now provides that the balance of probabilities standard is applicable to both prosecution and defendant<sup>9</sup>.

In contrast, where the issue is one concerning the genuineness or otherwise of a document or recording upon which (if it is admitted in evidence) the jury will ultimately have to reach its own decision, the obligation of the judge is merely to satisfy himself that there is some prima facie evidence to suggest that the document or recording may be genuine. Only in exceptional cases should the jury be deprived of the opportunity to decide whether the document or recording is genuine or not<sup>10</sup>.

If it is regarded as a general practice it would lead to the ludicrous situation that in every case where a defendant said that the prosecution evidence is fabricated the judge would be called on to usurp the functions of the jury'. See also R v Wayte (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 110, CA. R v Ewing [1983] QB 1039, 77 Cr App Rep 47, CA, can be distinguished in that it concerned the admissibility of a sample of handwriting that was to be used for comparison with the writing in dispute. Such writing must first be proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine: see the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 8; and PARA 1488 post.

EVIDENCE/(3) PRESUMPTIONS/1374. Classification of presumptions.

(3) PRESUMPTIONS

1374. Classification of presumptions.

Presumptions may be classified as: (1) conclusive and irrebuttable presumptions of law (which are really rules of law, rather than of evidence)<sup>1</sup>; (2) rebuttable presumptions of law, by which if a basic fact is proved or admitted, a further fact must then be presumed, either until the contrary is proved, or (in the case of 'evidential' presumptions) until some admissible evidence to the contrary is adduced<sup>2</sup>; and (3) so-called presumptions of fact, which are merely permissible circumstantial inferences of fact, having no special significance in law<sup>3</sup>.

The general rule that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the defendant of the offence charged is frequently expressed in terms of a 'presumption of innocence'<sup>4</sup>, and the rule that the defendant bears the burden of establishing a defence of insanity is sometimes termed the 'presumption of sanity'<sup>5</sup>, but in such cases the language of presumption is merely a convenient way of describing the allocation of the persuasive burden of proof.

1 See PARA 1375 post; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 1098.

2 See PARA 1376 post; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 1097.

5 M'Naghten's Case (1843) 10 Cl & Fin 200 at 210, HL. As to the persuasive burden of proof see PARA 1368 et seq ante.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(3) PRESUMPTIONS/1375. Irrebuttable presumptions of law.

1375. Irrebuttable presumptions of law.

There are at least two irrebuttable presumptions of law which are peculiar to criminal cases. The first is the presumption (or rule of law) that a child under the age of ten is 'doli incapax' (that is incapable of committing a criminal offence)<sup>1</sup>.

The second such presumption (or rule of law) arises where on a charge of rape<sup>2</sup>, assault by penetration<sup>3</sup>, sexual assault<sup>4</sup> or causing the complainant to engage in sexual activity without consent<sup>5</sup>, the defendant is proved to have intentionally deceived the complainant as to the nature or purpose of the relevant act or induced the complainant to consent to the relevant act by impersonating another person known to the complainant. In any such case, it is to be 'conclusively presumed' that the complainant did not consent to the relevant act and that the defendant did not believe the complainant to have consented<sup>6</sup>.

The former presumption that a boy under the age of 14 is incapable of any offence involving an act of sexual intercourse by him has been abolished<sup>7</sup>. It is also now clear that no rule of law requires a court of jury to infer that a defendant must have intended a consequence of his actions by reason only of it being a natural and probable consequence of those actions. The court or jury must instead reach its own conclusion after considering all the evidence and drawing such inferences from that evidence as appear proper in the circumstances<sup>8</sup>.

1 See the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 50 (amended by the Children and Young Persons Act 1963 s 16(1)); and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1232. Although referred to as a presumption, this rule effectively belongs to the substantive law of crime rather than to the law of evidence.

7 See the Sexual Offences Act 1993 s 1.

UPDATE

1375 Irrebuttable presumptions of law

TEXT AND NOTE 1--The defence of doli incapax has been abolished by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 34: R v JTB [2009] UKHL 20, [2009] 1 AC 1310, [2009] 3 All ER 1.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(3) PRESUMPTIONS/1376. Rebuttable presumptions of law.

1376. Rebuttable presumptions of law.

A rebuttable presumption of law is one which leads to a decision on a particular issue in favour of the party who establishes it or relies upon it, unless it is rebutted. Rebuttable presumptions of law may be created by statute<sup>1</sup>, or may exist at common law<sup>2</sup>, and may cast either a persuasive<sup>3</sup> or an evidential burden<sup>4</sup> on the party seeking to rebut the presumption, except that it is a rule of the common law that (save in the case of a defence of insanity) the defendant cannot be required to discharge a persuasive burden of proof<sup>5</sup>.

The common law presumption that a child between the ages of ten and 14 years is incapable of forming any criminal intention has now been abolished<sup>6</sup>. In alleged offences of bigamy, the common law presumption of marriage from cohabitation and repute does not apply, and the prosecution must adduce strict proof of the marriage<sup>7</sup>. The common law presumption that everything has been done according to due form is common to both criminal and civil proceedings<sup>8</sup>, but must be applied with great care in criminal cases<sup>9</sup>. The related presumption that mechanical instruments are in proper working order, may however be relied on in criminal cases<sup>10</sup>.

1 See eg the Prevention of Corruption Act 1916 s 2 (gifts etc deemed to have been given and received corruptly in certain circumstances; see PARA 530 ante); the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 99(2) (presumption as to age; see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1243); the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 s 15(2), (3) (presumption that amount of alcohol in defendant's breath, blood or urine at time of alleged offence not less than that in specimen taken under the Act: see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARA 991); the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 74 (presumption of guilt of person convicted of an offence; see PARA 1498 post). Many other such presumptions exist, and are dealt with in connection with the offences to which they relate.

2 Eg the presumption of regularity (see the text and note 8 infra).

3 For the meaning of 'persuasive burden' see PARA 1368 ante.

4 For the meaning of 'evidential burden' see PARA 1368 ante. See eg the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 75(1); and PARA 163 ante.

5 Woolmington v DPP [1935] AC 462, 25 Cr App Rep 72, HL; and see PARA 1369 ante. See, however, DPP v Bugg [1987] Crim LR 625, DC (defendant who challenges the validity of a byelaw bears the persuasive burden of proving it to be invalid). Statutory presumptions are capable of imposing a persuasive burden of proof on a defendant (see eg the statutes cited in note 1 supra) but must now be construed in accordance with the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953) Cmd 8969), and in some cases (but not all) provisions that appear to impose such a burden will need to be 'read down' so as to impose on an evidential burden on the defendant: see PARA 1370 ante. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

The effect of the presumption, where it operates against the defendant, appears to be to cast upon him the burden to adduce some evidence in rebuttal: Campbell v Wallsend Shipway and Engineering Co Ltd supra.

9 Scott v Baker [1969] 1 QB 659 at 672, 52 Cr App Rep 566 at 571, DC, per Lord Parker CJ. The presumption ought not to be invoked to prove a fact central to the prosecution case: Dillon v R [1982] AC 484, 74 Cr App Rep 274, PC.

10 Nicholas v Penny [1950] 2 KB 466 (sub nom Penny v Nicholas [1950] 2 All ER 89, DC (speedometer)); Tingle, Jacobs & Co v Kennedy [1964] 1 All ER 888n, [1964] 1 WLR 638n, CA (traffic signals); Castle v Cross [1985] 1 All ER 87, [1984] 1 WLR 1372, DC (breath analysis device); Kelly Communications Ltd v DPP (2002) 167 JP 73 (weighbridge). A mechanical device may for this purpose operate electrically or optically etc.

A representation of fact made otherwise than by a person which depends for its accuracy on information supplied (directly or indirectly) by a person is not admissible in criminal proceedings as evidence of the fact unless it is proved that the information was accurate: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 129(1). This properly addresses the need for proof that data placed on computers by individuals is accurate; but it does not affect the presumption that a mechanical device has been properly set or calibrated (s 129(2)).

1377. Presumptions of fact.

Presumptions of fact involve nothing more than the drawing of a reasonable inference from circumstantial evidence<sup>1</sup>. Where frequently recurring fact situations have led to the emergence of a rule as to how the jury should be directed in such circumstances, the term 'presumption of fact' is then used to describe the rule thus formulated<sup>2</sup>.

2 Thus, where the possession of recently stolen goods gives rise to a presumption of guilty knowledge, the jury should be directed that it may, not must, infer the presumed fact: R v Schama, R v Abramovitch (1914) 84 LJKB 396 at 398, 11 Cr App Rep 45 at 49 per Lord Reading CJ. EVIDENCE/(4) JUDICIAL NOTICE/1378. The nature of judicial notice.

(4) JUDICIAL NOTICE

1378. The nature of judicial notice.

The doctrine of judicial notice enables a court or judge to establish and act upon certain facts, or to regard certain facts as clear and beyond dispute, without requiring those facts to be proved by evidence from the parties in the normal way<sup>1</sup>. In a trial on indictment, the jury may likewise be instructed to accept the truth of such facts; and magistrates' courts may take notice of facts that are common knowledge in that court's own locality<sup>2</sup>.

Courts are permitted, in appropriate cases, to draw on their personal knowledge or expertise when assessing evidence given in court<sup>3</sup>. This is akin to the taking of judicial notice, although distinct from its other forms.

Courts are specifically required to take judicial notice of Acts of Parliament and of European Community law<sup>4</sup>.

1379. Judicial notice of obvious or notorious facts.

A court or judge will not require the prosecution or defence to prove a fact that is considered to be self-evident or a matter of common and unchallengeable knowledge<sup>1</sup>. Nevertheless, courts remain cautious as to the circumstances in which the usual requirement for proof may be dispensed with, and may in some cases require formal proof even of matters that appear obvious to them<sup>2</sup>.

Magistrates' courts may take judicial notice of facts that are notorious in their own locality, even if those facts are not widely known elsewhere<sup>3</sup>, but should inform the parties if they are proposing to make use of such knowledge<sup>4</sup>.

A court or judge may take judicial notice of facts that are readily verifiable from sources of indisputable authority<sup>1</sup>. Reference may be made for this purpose to suitably qualified experts<sup>2</sup>. Once judicial notice has been taken, the ruling in question is deemed to be one of law and may set a legal precedent<sup>3</sup>, which may be binding or persuasive according to the status of the court concerned<sup>4</sup>.

In relation to diplomatic issues or affairs of state, a court or judge must take judicial notice of facts stated by ministerial certificate<sup>5</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(4) JUDICIAL NOTICE/1381. Personal knowledge of judges, magistrates or jurors.

1381. Personal knowledge of judges, magistrates or jurors.

It may be proper for judges, magistrates or jurors to make use of their personal knowledge, experience or expertise when hearing evidence, but they may not substitute specialised knowledge of their own in contradiction of evidence they have heard. Thus, a lay magistrate who has special knowledge of matters relevant to a particular case may draw on that special knowledge in interpretation of the evidence he has heard, but such a magistrate may not give evidence to himself or his colleagues in contradiction of that which has been heard in court<sup>1</sup>, nor should he force his views on those sitting with him<sup>2</sup>; and nor for that same reason is it proper for a juror with specialist knowledge to inform fellow jurors on that basis that certain evidence given in court cannot be true<sup>3</sup>.

Courts or judges may not use particular knowledge gained in one case to take judicial notice of facts that are also relevant or in issue in later cases<sup>4</sup>. They may, however, take judicial notice of facts that have become notorious after being decided in reported cases<sup>5</sup>; and magistrates and district judges may in appropriate cases make use of their local knowledge<sup>6</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(4) JUDICIAL NOTICE/1382. Judicial notice of English and European Community law.

1382. Judicial notice of English and European Community law.

All courts must take judicial notice of Public Acts of the United Kingdom Parliament<sup>1</sup>. Acts passed after 1850 are presumed for this purpose to be Public Acts, unless the contrary is stated<sup>2</sup>. Judicial notice must also be taken throughout the United Kingdom of any Act of the Scottish Parliament<sup>3</sup>, although in most other respects Scottish and Northern Irish law cannot be judicially noticed by courts in England and Wales, and must instead be proved as foreign law<sup>4</sup>.

European Community law is incorporated within English law and must itself be judicially noted<sup>5</sup>. Decisions of the European Court of Human Rights must, where relevant, be taken into account by courts in the United Kingdom, but may be proved by evidence in accordance with applicable rules of court<sup>6</sup>.

1 Co Litt 98b; Co Inst 98a; Lord Cromwell's Case (1581) 4 Co Rep 12b at 13a; Holland's Case (1597) 4 Co Rep 75a at 76a; Lovell v Plomer (1812) 15 East 320; R v Sutton (1816) 4 M & S 532 at 542; Forman v Dawes (1841) Car & M 127; Aiton v Stephen (1876) 1 App Cas 456 at 457, HL; Chilton v London Corp'n (1878) 7 ChD 735 at 740. This means, inter alia, that no evidence may be heard as to whether a Public Act was duly passed after compliance with all requisite procedures, and nor is it necessary for a copy of a statute to be adduced in evidence in order to prove its contents.

In contrast, the content of a Private Act, or a statutory instrument or order, must if required be proved by adducing a Queen's Printer's or Stationery Office (HMSO) copy in evidence (Evidence Act 1845 s 3; Documentary Evidence Act 1882 s 2; R v Clarke [1969] 2 QB 91, [1969] 1 All ER 924, CA) unless express provision has been made to the contrary or the relevant provision of a statutory instrument or order has become a matter of notoriety through reported decisions (R v Jones (Reginald) [1969] 3 All ER 1559 at 1561, [1970] 1 WLR 16 at 20, CA (court entitled to take judicial notice of order by Secretary of State approving breath-test device, where the order had previously been proved in a large number of cases)). ## (5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE

(i) Introduction

1383. Disclosure or advance notification by the prosecution.

Fair disclosure by the prosecution to the defendant is now considered to be an inseparable part of a fair trial<sup>1</sup>. The prosecution, therefore, must ordinarily provide the defence with advance notice of any evidence upon which the prosecution proposes to rely<sup>2</sup>, and must also provide the defence with copies of (or access to) any material which might reasonably be considered capable of undermining the case for the prosecution, or of assisting the defence case<sup>3</sup>.

A statutory disclosure scheme governs the disclosure of 'unused' material by the prosecution to the defence<sup>4</sup>, and this scheme must be scrupulously followed<sup>5</sup>; but prosecutors and investigators must at the same time be alive to the potential need to reveal and disclose material even before the statutory scheme specifically so requires, in the interests of justice and fairness in the particular circumstances of any case<sup>6</sup>.

1 Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure (revised April 2005) PARA 1. See also Rowe and Davis v United Kingdom (2000) 30 EHRR 1, ECtHR.

2 Where the defendant is sent for trial on indictment under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as substituted) or s 51A (as added), disclosure of the prosecution case must be effected in accordance with regulations made under Sch 3 para 1. In respect of cases sent under s 51 (as substituted), the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 (Service of Prosecution Evidence) Regulations 2005, SI 2005/902, apply. Copies of the documents containing the evidence on which the charge or charges are based must be served on the person sent for trial and given to the Crown Court within 70 days from the date of the sending of the person for trial or, in the case of a person committed to custody, 50 days: regs 1, 2. The prosecutor may apply for an extension or further extension of the period prescribed by reg 2 by making an oral or written application to the Crown Court at the place specified in the notice under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51(7): Crime and Disorder Act 1998 (Service of Prosecution Evidence) Regulations 2005, SI 2005/902, reg 3. The procedure to be followed on an oral or written application for the extension or further extension of the prescribed period is contained in regs 4-6.

As to disclosure of prosecution evidence in preparatory hearings held pursuant to the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 7 (as amended) or the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 29, see PARA 1251 ante.

As to advance notice of evidence in connection with voluntary bills of indictment, see the Indictments (Procedure) Rules 1971, SI 1971/2084, r 9(1) (amended by SI 2000/3360). Where the defendant is charged with an offence triable either way see also CrimPR 21.1-21.6 (see PARAS 1110-1111 ante). There is no statutory requirement for the advance disclosure of prosecution evidence in proceedings for summary offences.

The absence of advance notice by the prosecution will not invariably prejudice the fairness of a summary trial, but it is desirable for prosecutors to give such notice because without it magistrates' courts may be obliged to grant adjournments to enable the defendant or his representatives to deal with the evidence when it is given, to cross-examine a witness and, if necessary, to obtain evidence to show that the witness is wrong: R v Kingston-upon-Hull Justices, ex p McCann (1991) 155 JP 569, DC; R v Stratford Justices, ex p Imbert [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 276, [1999] All ER (D) 115, DC; and see Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 57.

3 See PARA 1385 et seq post. This may include disclosure of material in the possession of other agencies (Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure paras 51-54) but prosecutors will only be expected to anticipate what material might weaken their case or strengthen the defence in the light of information available at the time of the disclosure decision (Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 9; and see R v Luttrell [2004] EWCA Crim 1344 at [62], [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 520 at [62]).

4 See PARA 1385 et seq post.

5 Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 4. There are, however, other interests that need to be protected, including those of victims and witnesses who might otherwise be exposed to harm. The statutory disclosure scheme protects those interests. It should also ensure that material is not disclosed which overburdens the participants in the trial process, diverts attention from the relevant issues, leads to unjustifiable delay, and is wasteful of resources: Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 6. As to the principles and procedures governing the withholding of disclosure on grounds of public interest see PARAS 1480-1481 post.

6 le after the commencement of proceedings but before their duty arises under the statutory scheme. For instance, disclosure ought to be made of significant information that might affect a bail decision or that might enable the defence to contest the committal proceedings: Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 55; and see R v DPP, ex p Lee [1999] 2 All ER 737, [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 304, DC.

EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(i) Introduction/1384. Disclosure or advance notification by the defendant.

1384. Disclosure or advance notification by the defendant.

The defendant is not required to disclose any evidence or material that may be damaging to his own case or of assistance to the prosecution case, nor is he required to disclose evidence that may assist the case of any other defendant<sup>1</sup>.

At common law, the defendant was not required to give any advance notice or disclosure of evidence on which he proposed to rely at trial<sup>2</sup>. By statute, however, he may now be required (where the case is to be tried on indictment) to serve a 'defence statement' on the prosecution and court<sup>3</sup>. The court may also direct that a copy of this statement be served on any co-defendant<sup>4</sup>. A defence statement may (but is not required to be) given to the prosecution and the court prior to summary trial<sup>5</sup>. Where a defence statement has been given the defendant may then be required to provide an updated statement prior to the trial<sup>6</sup>.

Failure or delay in issuing a defence statement complying with statutory requirements or to present a defence consistent with the defence statement may be the subject of adverse comment by the court or any other party<sup>7</sup> and the court or jury may draw such inferences as appear proper in deciding whether the defendant is guilty of the offence concerned<sup>8</sup>.

The defendant is also required to give advance notice of expert evidence on which he proposes to rely<sup>9</sup>. A defendant who seeks to adduce expert evidence in any proceedings (including summary proceedings) and who fails to comply with the disclosure requirements may not adduce that evidence without the leave of the court<sup>10</sup>.

1 Any such requirement would infringe the privilege against self-incrimination: see PARA 1476 post. As to the obligation to notify the prosecution of any expert witnesses instructed (even where not to be called) see PARA 1390 post.

2 Alibi defences, however, were by statute required to be disclosed prior to trial on indictment: see the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 11 (repealed, in relation to offences into which no criminal investigation began before 1 April 1997, by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 ss 74(1)-(3), (5), 80, Sch 5); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (Appointed Day No 3) Order 1997, SI 1997/682.

(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996

1385. The statutory scheme and the code of practice.

The Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996<sup>1</sup> creates a statutory scheme governing (1) the prosecution's duty to disclose certain kinds of evidence on which they do not propose to rely at trial<sup>2</sup>; and (2) the duty of the defendant to disclose, by means of a 'defence statement' the essential basis of the defence case, including any particular defences upon which he intends to rely and any points of law he wishes to take<sup>3</sup>.

This statutory scheme applies in relation to alleged offences into which no criminal investigation<sup>4</sup> has begun before 1 April 1997<sup>5</sup>. It does not apply to (a) proceedings before a court-martial constituted under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957<sup>6</sup>; (b) proceedings before a standing civilian court<sup>7</sup>; or (c) any investigation conducted with a view to it being ascertained whether a person should be charged with an offence under any of those Acts or whether a person charged with such an offence is guilty of it<sup>8</sup>, but the Secretary of State may by order make equivalent provision as regards proceedings before a court-martial or standing civilian court, subject to such modifications as he thinks fit and specifies in the order<sup>9</sup>.

This statutory scheme does not govern or affect the prosecution's obligation to provide the defendant with advance information of the evidence that is intended to form part of the prosecution case<sup>10</sup>, nor does it impose any obligation on the defendant to disclose evidence that he does not intend to rely upon at trial<sup>11</sup>.

The statutory scheme is supplemented by the Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure<sup>12</sup> and by a code of practice in respect of criminal investigations carried out by police officers<sup>13</sup> which in accordance with statutory requirements<sup>14</sup> contains provisions designed to secure:

- 2152 (i) that where a criminal investigation is conducted all reasonable steps are taken for the purposes of the investigation and, in particular, all reasonable lines of inquiry are pursued<sup>15</sup>;
- 2153 (ii) that information which is obtained in the course of a criminal investigation and may be relevant to the investigation is recorded<sup>16</sup>;
- 2154 (iii) that any record of such information is retained<sup>17</sup>;
- 2155 (iv) that any other material which is obtained in the course of a criminal investigation and may be relevant to the investigation is retained<sup>18</sup>;
- 2156 (v) that information falling within head (ii) above and material falling within head (iv) above is revealed to a person who is involved in the prosecution of criminal proceedings arising out of or relating to the investigation and who is identified in accordance with prescribed provisions<sup>19</sup>;
- 2157 (vi) that where the prosecutor inspects information or other material in pursuance of a requirement that it be revealed to him, and he requests that it be disclosed to the defendant, the defendant is allowed to inspect it or is given a copy of it<sup>20</sup>;

- 2158 (vii) that where the prosecutor is given a document indicating the nature of information or other material in pursuance of a requirement that it be revealed to him, and he requests that it be disclosed to the defendant, the defendant is allowed to inspect it or is given a copy of it<sup>21</sup>;
- 2159 (viii) that the person who is to allow the defendant to inspect information or other material or to give him a copy of it must decide which of those (inspecting or giving a copy) is appropriate<sup>22</sup>;
- 2160 (ix) that where the defendant is allowed to inspect material as mentioned in head (vi) or (vii) above and he requests a copy, he is given one unless the person allowing the inspection is of opinion that it is not practicable or not desirable to give him one<sup>23</sup>;
- 2161 (x) that a person mentioned in PARA (v) above is given a written statement that prescribed activities which the code requires have been carried out<sup>24</sup>.

The Code of Practice also contains provisions prescribing the general responsibilities of police officers<sup>25</sup>, the form in which information is to be recorded<sup>26</sup>, the manner in which and the period for which (A) a record of information is to be retained, and (B) any other material is to be retained<sup>27</sup>, and provision about the time when, the form in which, the way in which, and the extent to which, information or any other material is to be revealed to the prosecutor<sup>28</sup>.

1     le the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt 1 (ss 1-21) (as amended). The scheme is designed to ensure that there is fair disclosure of material which may be relevant to an investigation and which does not form part of the prosecution case. Disclosure under the Act should assist the defendant in the timely preparation and presentation of his case and assist the court to focus on all the relevant issues in the trial. Disclosure which does not meet these objectives risks preventing a fair trial taking place: Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure para 3.

4     le an investigation which police officers or other persons have a duty to conduct with a view to it being ascertained whether a person should be charged with an offence, or whether a person charged with an offence is guilty of it: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 1(4). It may include an investigation into a crime that the police believe is about to be committed and also cases in which a series of offences is committed, some before and some after the appointed day: R v Uxbridge Magistrates' Court, ex p Patel (1999) 164 JP 209, DC; but see also R v Norfolk Stipendiary Magistrates, ex p Keable [1998] Crim LR 510, DC.

The statutory scheme does not apply where an old investigation that had been 'put on hold' was re-opened on or after the appointed day, 'such that although in two parts, the criminal investigation may properly be regarded as one whole'; but it does apply where a new investigation is opened on or after that day: R v Brizzalari [2004] EWCA Crim 310 at [31], (2004) Times, 3 March, per Hedley J.

10    As to this obligation see PARA 1383 ante. As to disclosure of expert evidence see PARA 1492 post.

11    No such obligation is imposed on the defendant either at common law or by statute, but as to the obligation to notify the prosecution of any expert witnesses instructed (even where not to be called) see PARA 1390 post.

12    See the Attorney-General's Guidelines on Disclosure (revised April 2005).

13 The Code of Practice was issued under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt II: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (Code of Practice) Order 2005, SI 2005/985, which appoints 4 April 2005 as the day on which the revised Code of Practice prepared under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23 was brought into operation in England and Wales. The Code of Practice (published and subsequently revised in accordance with s 25) is so framed that it does not apply to material intercepted in obedience to a warrant issued under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 s 2 or under the authority of an interception warrant under the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 5: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(6) (amended by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 82(1), Sch 4 para 7(2)); Code of Practice para 1.3.

For these purposes a criminal investigation is an investigation conducted by police officers with a view to it being ascertained (1) whether a person should be charged with an offence; or (2) whether a person charged with an offence is guilty of it: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 22(1). See also the Code of Practice para 2.1.

The Code of Practice does not apply to persons who are not charged with the duty of conducting a criminal investigation (Code of Practice para 1.2), but a person other than a police officer who is charged with the duty of conducting an investigation with a view to it being ascertained (a) whether a person should be charged with an offence; or (b) whether a person charged with an offence is guilty of it, must in discharging that duty have regard to any relevant provision of the code which would apply if the investigation were conducted by police officers: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 26(1).

Failure (i) by a police officer to comply with any provision of a code for the time being in operation by virtue of an order under s 25; or (ii) by any other person subject to s 26(1) to have regard to any relevant provision, does not in itself render him liable to any criminal or civil proceedings (s 26(2)) but in all criminal and civil proceedings a code in operation at any time by virtue of an order under s 25 is admissible in evidence (s 26(3)) and if it appears to a court or tribunal conducting criminal or civil proceedings that any provision of a code in operation at any time by virtue of an order under s 25, or any failure mentioned in s 26(2) is relevant to any question arising in the proceedings, the provision or failure is to be taken into account in deciding the question (s 26(4)).

Where the Code of Practice applies, its provisions supplant any common law rules that would previously have applied concerning the revealing of material (A) by a police officer or other person charged with the duty of conducting an investigation with a view to it being ascertained whether a person should be charged with an offence or whether a person charged with an offence is guilty of it; (B) to a person involved in the prosecution of criminal proceedings: see s 27.

25 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(2); Code of Practice paras 3.1-3.7.

26 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(3). Material must be recorded in a durable or retrievable form that may be writing, video or audio tape, or computer disc: Code of Practice para 4.1. Material may be photographed, video-recorded, captured digitally or otherwise retained in the form of a copy if the original is perishable or is to be returned to its owner, or where retention of a copy rather than an original is reasonable in all the circumstances: Code of Practice para 5.1.

27 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(4); Code of Practice paras 5.7-5.11.

28 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(5); Code of Practice paras 6.1-6.14; 7.1-7.5. The code may make different provision in relation to different cases or descriptions of case, and may contain exceptions as regards prescribed cases or descriptions of case: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 23(7). For these purposes, 'prescribed' means prescribed by the code: s 23(8). Thus provisions of the Code of Practice concerning the preparation of schedules of unused material vary according to the circumstances of the case in question.

1386. Application of statutory disclosure scheme.

The statutory disclosure scheme<sup>1</sup> applies where: (1) a person is charged with a summary offence in respect of which a court proceeds to summary trial and in respect of which he pleads not guilty<sup>2</sup>; (2) a person who has attained the age of 18 is charged with an offence which is triable either way, in respect of which a court proceeds to summary trial and in respect of which he pleads not guilty<sup>3</sup>; (3) a person under the age of 18 is charged with an indictable offence in respect of which a court proceeds to summary trial and in respect of which he pleads not guilty<sup>4</sup>; (4) a person is charged with an offence for which he is sent for trial<sup>5</sup>; (5) a count charging a person with a summary offence is included in an indictment<sup>6</sup>; or (6) a bill of indictment charging a person with an indictable offence is preferred<sup>7</sup>.

Where the disclosure provisions apply as regards things falling to be done after the relevant time<sup>8</sup> in relation to an alleged offence, the rules of common law which were effective immediately before 1 April 1997<sup>9</sup>, and relate to the disclosure of material by the prosecutor, do not apply as regards things falling to be done after that time in relation to the alleged offence<sup>10</sup>. This does not affect the rules of common law as to whether disclosure is in the public interest<sup>11</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1387. Initial duty of the prosecutor to disclose.

1387. Initial duty of the prosecutor to disclose.

The prosecutor<sup>1</sup> must (1) disclose to the defendant any prosecution material<sup>2</sup> which has not previously been disclosed to the defendant and which might reasonably be considered capable of undermining the case for the prosecution against the defendant, or of assisting the case for the defendant<sup>3</sup>; or (2) give to the defendant a written statement that there is no material of any such description<sup>4</sup>. For these purposes, prosecution material is material which is in the prosecutor's possession, and came into his possession in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant, or which, in pursuance of a code<sup>5</sup>, he has inspected in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant<sup>6</sup>. Where material consists of information which has been recorded in any form, the prosecutor discloses it for these purposes by securing that a copy<sup>7</sup> is made of it and that the copy is given to the defendant<sup>8</sup>, or if in the prosecutor's opinion that is not practicable or not desirable, by allowing the defendant to inspect it at a reasonable time and a reasonable place or by taking steps to secure that he is allowed to do so<sup>9</sup>.

Where material consists of information which has not been recorded, the prosecutor discloses it for the above purposes by securing that it is recorded in such form as he thinks fit and by securing that a copy is made of it and that the copy is given to the defendant<sup>10</sup>, or if in the prosecutor's opinion that is not practicable or not desirable, by allowing the defendant to inspect it at a reasonable time and a reasonable place or by taking steps to secure that he is allowed to do so<sup>11</sup>. Where material does not consist of information, the prosecutor discloses it for the above purposes by allowing the defendant to inspect it at a reasonable time and a reasonable place or by taking steps to secure that he is allowed to do so<sup>12</sup>.

Material must not be disclosed under these provisions to the extent that the court, on an application by the prosecutor, concludes it is not in the public interest to disclose it and orders accordingly<sup>13</sup>. Nor may it be disclosed to the extent that it is material the disclosure of which is prohibited by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000<sup>14</sup>.

The prosecutor must act under the provisions described above during the relevant period<sup>15</sup>. He must at the same time pass on to the defendant any schedule of non-sensitive material previously given to the prosecutor by the disclosure officer in accordance with the code of practice<sup>16</sup>.

If the prosecutor purports to make primary disclosure after the end of the period which is the relevant period, the failure to act during the period concerned does not on its own constitute grounds for staying the proceedings for abuse of process<sup>17</sup>.

1 References in the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 Pt I (ss 1-21) (as amended) to the prosecutor are to any person acting as prosecutor, whether an individual or a body: Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 2(3), (6).

In a summary trial, after the court makes an order under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 3(6) and before the defendant is acquitted or convicted or the prosecutor decides not to proceed with the case, the defendant may apply to the court for a review of the question whether it is still not in the public interest to disclose the material: see s 14 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 30). In other cases, the court must keep the question under review: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 15 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 31). The person claiming to have an interest in the material has a right to be heard by the court: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 16 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 32).

EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1388. Disclosure by defendant: defence statement.

1388. Disclosure by defendant: defence statement.

Where a case is to be tried on indictment, and the prosecutor complies with the primary disclosure provisions<sup>1</sup> or purports to comply with them, the defendant must within the relevant period give a defence statement to the court and the prosecutor<sup>2</sup> and to any co-defendant specified by the court<sup>3</sup>. This does not apply where the defendant is sent for trial to the Crown Court<sup>4</sup>, unless copies of the documents containing the evidence have been served on him<sup>5</sup> and a copy of the notice<sup>6</sup> specifying the offence or offences for which he is so sent has been served on him<sup>7</sup>. Nor does it apply where a bill of indictment has been preferred<sup>8</sup> unless the prosecutor has served on the defendant a copy of the indictment and a copy of the set of documents containing the evidence which is the basis of the charge<sup>9</sup>.

A defence statement is a written statement (1) setting out the nature of the defendant's defence, including any particular defences on which he intends to rely; (2) indicating the matters of fact on which he takes issue with the prosecution; (3) setting out, in the case of each such matter, why he takes issue with the prosecution; and (4) indicating any point of law (including any point as to the admissibility of evidence or an abuse of process) which he wishes to take, and any authority on which he intends to rely for that purpose<sup>10</sup>.

A defence statement that discloses an alibi<sup>11</sup> must give particulars of it, including: (a) the name, address and date of birth of any witness the defendant believes is able to give evidence in support of the alibi, or as many of those details as are known to the defendant when the statement is given; and (b) any information in the defendant's possession which might be of material assistance in identifying or finding any such witness in whose case any of the details mentioned in (a) above are not known to the defendant when the statement is given<sup>12</sup>.

Where a case is to be tried summarily, and the prosecutor complies with the provisions as to primary disclosure<sup>13</sup> or purports to comply with them, the defendant may within the relevant period<sup>14</sup> give a defence statement to the prosecutor, and if he does so, must also give such a statement to the court<sup>15</sup>.

Once the initial defence statement has been given, the defendant is then required (again during a specified 'relevant period'<sup>16</sup>) to give to the court and the prosecutor either an updated defence statement<sup>17</sup> or a written statement stating that he has no changes to make to the statement which he has already given<sup>18</sup>.

The judge in a trial before a judge and jury may direct that the jury be given a copy of any defence statement<sup>19</sup>, and if he does so, may direct that it be edited so as not to include references to matters evidence of which would be inadmissible<sup>20</sup>.

Any such statement that the defendant's solicitor purports to give on behalf of the defendant is, unless the contrary is proved, deemed to be given with the authority of the defendant<sup>21</sup>.

A defence statement that has to be given to the court and the prosecutor under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5(5) must be given during the period which, by virtue of s 12, is the 'relevant period' for s 5: s 5(5C) (s 5(5A)-(5D) added, partly prospectively, by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 33(1): at the date at which this volume states the law the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5(5C) was in force only in relation to alleged offences in relation to which a criminal investigation within the meaning of s 1(4) (see PARA 1385 text and note 4 ante) began in England and Wales on or after 4 April 2005 and the duty to give a defence statement in accordance with s 5(5) arises on or after 24 July 2006 (Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 13 and Transitional Provision) Order 2006, SI 2006/1835, arts 2(a), 3(a)(i), (b)), while the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5(5A), (5B), (5D) had yet to be brought into force). 3 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5(5A) (as prospectively added: see note 2 supra). The statement must then be given to the co-defendant within such period as the court may specify: s 5(5D) (as prospectively added: see note 2 supra). The court may make an order under s 5(5A) (as prospectively added) either of its own motion or on the application of any party: s 5(5B) (as prospectively added: see note 2 supra). At the date at which this volume states the law no such regulations had been made.

11 Evidence in support of an alibi is evidence tending to show that by reason of the presence of the defendant at a particular place or in a particular area at a particular time he was not, or was unlikely to have been, at the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed at the time of its alleged commission: ibid s 6A(3) (as added: see note 10 supra).

This must comply with the requirements imposed by or under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6A (as added) by reference to the state of affairs at the time when the statement is given: s 6B(3) (as so added). Where there are co-defendants and the court so orders (either of its own motion or on the application of any party: s 6B(6) (as so added)) the defendant must also, within such period as may be specified by the court, give an updated defence statement (or a written statement that he has no changes to make) to each other defendant as specified in the order: s 6B(5) (as so added).

18 Ibid s 6B(1)(b), (4) (as prospectively added: see note 16 supra).

19 Where the defendant has provided an updated defence statement, this is the statement to which any such direction must relate: ibid s 6E(6) (s 6E added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 36).

20 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6E(4) (as added: see note 19 supra). Such a direction may be made either of the judge's own motion or on the application of any party, but may be made only if the judge is of the opinion that seeing a copy of the defence statement would help the jury to understand the case or to resolve any issue in the case: s 6E(5) (as so added).

1388 Disclosure by defendant: defence statement

TEXT AND NOTE 10--Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6A(1) amended: Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 s 60(1).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1389. Disclosure by defendant: intention to call witnesses.

1389. Disclosure by defendant: intention to call witnesses.

The defendant must (if he has not already done so as part of his defence statement<sup>1</sup>) give to the court and the prosecutor within the relevant period<sup>2</sup> a notice indicating whether he intends to call any persons (other than himself) as witnesses at his trial and, if so (1) giving the name, address and date of birth of each such proposed witness, or as many of those details as are known to the defendant when the notice is given; (2) providing any information in the defendant's possession which might be of material assistance in identifying or finding any such proposed witness in whose case any of the details mentioned in head (1) above are not known to the defendant when the notice is given<sup>3</sup>.

The Secretary of State is required to prepare a code of practice for the guidance of police officers, and other persons charged with the duty of investigating offences, in relation to the arranging and conducting of interviews of persons, particulars of whom are given in a defence statement or who are included in a notice of intention to call defence witnesses<sup>4</sup>.

1     Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6A(2) (as added) (see PARA 1388 ante): s 6C(2) (prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 34 as from a day to be appointed). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2     Ie the relevant period under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 12: see s 6C(3) (as prospectively added: see note 1 supra). See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (Defence Disclosure Time Limits) Regulations 1997, SI 1997/684.

3     Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6C(1) (as prospectively added: see note 1 supra). A notice does not have to be given under s 6D(1) (as prospectively added) (see PARA 1390 post) specifying the name and address of an expert witness whose name and address have already been given under s 6C (as prospectively added): s 6D(2) (prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 35 as from a day to be appointed). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. As to the consequences of any failure to comply fully with this or other defence disclosure requirements see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 11(5); and PARA 1393 post.

As to the judge's duty to warn the defendant of these consequences at a pre-trial hearing see s 6E(2) (as prospectively added). If, following the giving of a notice under s 6C(1) (as prospectively added) the defendant (1) decides to call a person (other than himself) who is not included in the notice as a proposed witness, or decides not to call a person who is so included; or (2) discovers any information which he would have had to include in the notice if he had been aware of it when giving the notice, he must give an appropriately amended notice to the court and the prosecutor: s 6C(4) (as so added).

4     Ibid s 21A(1) (s 21A added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 40). As to the duties of the Secretary of State in preparing the code see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 21A(4)-(6) (as so added); and as to the procedure to be followed for preparing such a code see s 21A(7)-(10) (as so added). Any such code must include in particular:

- 88     (1)   information that should be provided to the interviewee and the defendant in relation to such an interview (s 21A(2)(a) (as so added));
- 89     (2)   the notification of the defendant's solicitor of such an interview (s 21A(2)(b) (as so added));
- 90     (3)   the attendance of the interviewee's solicitor at such an interview (s 21A(2)(c) (as so added));

91 (4) the attendance of the defendant's solicitor at such an interview (s 21A(2)(d) (as so added));

92 (5) the attendance of any other appropriate person at such an interview taking into account the interviewee's age or any disability of the interviewee (s 21A(2)(e) (as so added)).

Any police officer or other person charged with the duty of investigating offences who arranges or conducts such an interview must have regard to the code (s 21A(3) (as so added)), but failure to have regard to any provision of a code for the time being in operation by virtue of an order under s 21A (as added) does not in itself render him liable to any criminal or civil proceedings (s 21A(11) (as so added)). The code will be admissible in evidence and if it appears to a court or tribunal conducting criminal or civil proceedings that any provision of a code in operation at any time or any failure mentioned in s 21A(11) (as added) is relevant to any question arising in the proceedings, the provision or failure must be taken into account in deciding the question: s 21A(12), (13) (as so added).

1389 Disclosure by defendant: intention to call witnesses

NOTE 1--Day appointed is 1 May 2010: SI 2010/1183.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1390. Disclosure by defendant of names of any expert witnesses instructed.

1390. Disclosure by defendant of names of any expert witnesses instructed.

Where the defendant instructs a person with a view to his providing any expert opinion<sup>1</sup> for possible use as evidence at the trial of the defendant, he must within the relevant period<sup>2</sup> give to the court and the prosecutor a notice specifying the person's name and address<sup>3</sup>, unless he has already given notification of his intention to call that person as a witness<sup>4</sup>. It might then be open to the prosecution to call the expert witness in question, should it transpire that his evidence would assist the prosecution case<sup>5</sup>, although questions of legal professional privilege may arise in respect of any communications between the expert and the defence<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to expert opinion evidence see PARA 1482 et seq post.

2 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6D(3) (s 6D added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 35 as from a day to be appointed) At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. 6 See R v King [1983] 1 All ER 929 at 931, 77 Cr App Rep 1 at 3, CA, per Dunn LJ: '... the rule is that in the case of expert witnesses legal professional privilege attaches to confidential communications between the solicitor and the expert, but it does not attach to the chattels or documents upon which the expert based his opinion, nor to the independent opinion of the expert himself'. Contrast R v R [1994] 4 All ER 260, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 183, CA (privilege attached to a blood specimen provided by defendant to his doctor at his solicitors' request and subsequently analysed for the purpose of DNA profiling. The defendant was entitled to object when the prosecution called evidence from the scientist concerned, for the purpose of proving that the sample incriminated the defendant).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1391. Continuing duty of prosecutor to disclose.

1391. Continuing duty of prosecutor to disclose.

At all times after the prosecutor has complied with the duty to make initial disclosure<sup>1</sup> or has purported to comply with it, and before the defendant is acquitted or convicted or the prosecutor decides not to proceed with the case concerned<sup>2</sup>, the prosecutor must keep under review the question whether at any given time (and, in particular, following the giving of a defence statement) there is prosecution material<sup>3</sup> which might reasonably be considered capable of undermining the case for the prosecution against the defendant, or of assisting the case for the defendant and has not been disclosed to the defendant<sup>4</sup>. If there is such material at any time the prosecutor must disclose it to the defendant as soon as is reasonably practicable, or (where the defendant has given a defence statement and as a result of that statement the prosecutor is required to make any disclosure) within the relevant period<sup>5</sup>.

Material must not be disclosed under these provisions to the extent that the court, on an application by the prosecutor, concludes it is not in the public interest to disclose it and orders accordingly<sup>6</sup>, or to the extent that it is material the disclosure of which is prohibited<sup>7</sup>.

1     Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 3 (see PARA 1387 ante): s 7A(1)(a) (s 7A added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 37).

2     Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 7A(1)(b) (as added: see note 1 supra).

3     For these purposes prosecution material is material (1) which is in the prosecutor's possession and came into his possession in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant; or (2) which, in pursuance of a code of practice operative under ibid Pt 2 (ss 22-27) (as amended) (see PARA 1385 ante), he has inspected in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant: s 7A(6) (as added: see note 1 supra). See also PARA 1387 ante.

4     Ibid s 7A(2) (as added: see note 1 supra). In applying this provision by reference to any given time the state of affairs at that time (including the case for the prosecution as it stands at that time) must be taken into account: s 7A(4) (as so added).

5     Ibid s 7A(3), (5)(a) (as added: see note 1 supra). The relevant period is the period specified by s 12. If the defendant gives a defence statement under s 5 (as amended), s 6 (as amended) or s 6B (as prospectively added) and the prosecutor considers that he is not required to make any further prosecution disclosure he must during that period give the defendant a written statement to that effect: s 7A(5)(b) (as so added). As to the method by which the prosecutor discloses such evidence see s 3(3)-(5) (see PARA 1387 ante): s 7A(7) (as so added). Any failure of the prosecutor to act during the relevant period does not on its own constitute grounds for staying the proceedings for abuse of process (s 10(1)(b), (2) (s 10(1)(b) substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 27)), but this does not prevent the failure constituting such grounds if it involves such delay by the prosecutor that the defendant is denied a fair trial (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 10(3)).

6     Ibid s 7A(8) (as added: see note 1 supra). As to the withholding of evidence or disclosure on grounds of public interest see PARAS 1480-1481 post. In a summary trial, after the court makes an order under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 7A(8) (as added) and before the defendant is acquitted or convicted or the prosecutor decides not to proceed with the case, the defendant may apply to the court for a review of the question whether it is still not in the public interest to disclose the material: see s 14 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 30). In other cases, the court must keep the question under review: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 15 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 31). The person claiming to have an interest in the material has a right to be heard by the court: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 16 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 32).

7 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 7A(9) (as added: see note 1 supra). The text refers to prohibition by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 17 (see PARA 519 ante): Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 7A(9) (as so added).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1392. Application by defendant for disclosure.

1392. Application by defendant for disclosure.

Where the defendant has given a defence statement<sup>1</sup> and the prosecutor complies with the provisions as to continuing disclosure<sup>2</sup> or purports to comply with them or fails to comply with them<sup>3</sup>, if the defendant has at any time reasonable cause to believe that there is prosecution material<sup>4</sup> which is required to be disclosed to him but has not been, he may apply to the court for an order requiring the prosecutor to disclose it to him<sup>5</sup>.

Material may not be disclosed under these provisions to the extent that the court, on an application by the prosecutor, concludes it is not in the public interest to disclose it and orders accordingly<sup>6</sup>, or to the extent that it is material the disclosure of which is prohibited<sup>7</sup>.

1     Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5 (as amended), s 6 (as amended) or s 6B (as prospectively added) (see PARA 1388 ante): s 8(1) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 38).

2     Ie under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 7A (as added) (see PARA 1391 ante): s 8(1) (as substituted: see note 1 supra).

3     Ibid s 8(1) (as substituted: see note 1 supra).

4     For these purposes, prosecution material is material (1) which is in the prosecutor's possession and came into his possession in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant; (2) which in pursuance of a code of practice under ibid Pt II (ss 22-27) (as amended) (see PARA 1385 ante), he has inspected in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant; or (3) which in pursuance of such a code, the prosecutor must, if he asks for the material, be given a copy of it or be allowed to inspect it in connection with the case for the prosecution against the defendant: s 8(3), (4). See DPP v Wood [2005] EWHC 32 (Admin), 170 JP 177 (material sought to be disclosed did not satisfy the criteria listed in the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 8(3), (4) and therefore was not 'prosecution material').

5     Ibid s 8(2) (substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 38). As to the practice and procedure to be followed in relation to an application or order under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 8(2) (as substituted) or s 8(5), see the Crown Court (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996) (Disclosure) Regulations 1997, SI 1997/698; and the Magistrates' Courts (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996) (Disclosure) Regulations 1997, SI 1997/703. In due course, the procedure will be set out in CrimPR Pt 22.

6     Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 8(5). As to the withholding of evidence or disclosure on grounds of public interest see PARAS 1480-1481 post. In a summary trial, after the court makes an order under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 8(5) and before the defendant is acquitted or convicted or the prosecutor decides not to proceed with the case, the defendant may apply to the court for a review of the question whether it is still not in the public interest to disclose the material: see s 14 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 30). In other cases, the court must keep the question under review: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 15 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 31). The person claiming to have an interest in the material has a right to be heard by the court: see the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 16 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Sch 36 Pt 3 paras 20, 32).

7     Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 8(6). The text refers to prohibition by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 s 17 (see PARA 519 ante): Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 8(6).

1393. Faults in disclosure by defendant.

Where in any of three specified cases<sup>1</sup> the defendant fails to make disclosure in accordance with the statutory scheme, the court or any other party may make such comment as appears appropriate and the court or jury may draw such inferences as appear proper in deciding whether he is guilty of the offence concerned<sup>2</sup>, but a defendant may not be convicted of an offence solely on an inference drawn on this basis<sup>3</sup>.

- 93 (1) where the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 5 (as amended) (see PARA 1388 ante) applies and the defendant is required to give a defence statement or updated defence statement (ie a defence statement given under s 6B (as prospectively added) (s 11(12)(b) (as so substituted))) but: (a) fails to give an initial defence statement (ie a defence statement given under s 5 or s 6 (both as amended) (s 11(12)(a) (as so substituted))); (b) gives an initial defence statement but does so after the end of the period which, by virtue of s 12, is the relevant period for s 5 (as amended); (c) is required by s 6B (as prospectively added) (see PARA 1388 ante) to give either an updated defence statement or a statement of the kind mentioned in s 6B(4) (as prospectively added) (ie a statement that he has no changes to make to his initial defence statement) but fails to do so; (d) gives an updated defence statement or a statement of the kind mentioned in s 6B(4) (as prospectively added) but does so after the end of the period which, by virtue of s 12, is the relevant period for s 6B (as prospectively added); (e) sets out inconsistent defences in his defence statement; or (f) at his trial (i) puts forward a defence which was not mentioned in his defence statement or is different from any defence set out in that statement; (ii) relies on a matter which, in breach of the requirements imposed by or under s 6A (as added) (see PARA 1388 ante), was not mentioned in his defence statement; (iii) adduces evidence in support of an alibi (see s 6A(3) (as added): s 11(12)(d) (as so substituted)) without having given particulars of the alibi in his defence statement; or (iv) calls a witness to give evidence in support of an alibi without having complied with s 6A(2)(a) (as added) or s 6A(2)(b) (as added) as regards the witness in his defence statement (s 11(2) (as so substituted));
- 94 (2) where s 6 (as amended) (see PARA 1388 ante) applies and the defendant gives the initial defence statement after the end of the period which, by virtue of s 12, is the relevant period for s 6 (as amended), or does any of the things specified in heads (1)(c)-(f) supra (s 11(3) (as so substituted)); or
- 95 (3) where the defendant gives a witness notice (ie under s 6C (as prospectively added): s 11(12)(e) (as so substituted)) but does so after the end of the period which, by virtue of s 12, is the relevant period for s 6C (as prospectively added) (see PARA 1389 ante), or at his trial calls a witness (other than himself) not included, or not adequately identified, in a witness notice (s 11(4) (as so substituted)).

A reference simply to a defendant's 'defence statement' is a reference (A) where he has given only an initial defence statement, to that statement; (B) where he has given both an initial and an updated defence statement, to the updated defence statement; (C) where he has given both an initial defence statement and a statement of the kind mentioned in s 6B(4) (as prospectively added), to the initial defence statement: s 11(12)(c) (as so substituted).

<sup>2</sup> Ibid s 11(5) (as substituted: see note 1 supra). Where, however, the defendant is at fault under s 11(4) (as substituted) (see note 1 supra) or his fault is that at trial he has relied on a point of law (including any point as to the admissibility of evidence or an abuse of process) or an authority which, in breach of the requirements imposed by or under s 6A (as added), was not mentioned in his defence statement, comment by another party may be made only with the leave of the court: s 11(6), (7) (as so substituted). Where the defendant puts forward a defence which is different from any defence set out in his defence statement, in doing anything under s 11(5) (as substituted) or in deciding whether to do anything under it the court must have regard to: (1) the extent of the differences in the defences; and (2) whether there is any justification for it: s 11(8) (as so substituted). Similarly, where the defendant calls a witness whom he has failed to include, or to identify adequately, in a witness notice, in doing anything under s 11(5) (as substituted) or in deciding whether to do anything under it the court must have regard to whether there is any justification for the failure: s 11(9) (as so substituted).

Where the defendant has given a statement of the kind mentioned in s 6B(4) (as prospectively added) (ie he has stated that he has no changes to make to his initial defence statement), then, for the purposes of s 11(2)(f) (ii), (iv) (as substituted) (see note 1 supra), the question as to whether there has been a breach of the requirements imposed by or under s 6A (as added) or a failure to comply with s 6A(2)(a) or (b) (as added) is to be determined: (a) by reference to the state of affairs at the time when that statement was given; and (b) as if the defence statement was given at the same time as that statement: s 11(11) (as so substituted).

3 Ibid s 11(10) (as substituted: see note 1 supra).

EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(ii) Disclosure under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996/1394. Confidentiality.

1394. Confidentiality.

If the defendant is given or allowed to inspect a document or other object<sup>1</sup> then, subject to the provisions described below<sup>2</sup>, he must not use or disclose it or any information recorded in it<sup>3</sup>. The defendant may use or disclose the object or information in connection with the proceedings for whose purposes he was given the object or allowed to inspect it, with a view to the taking of further criminal proceedings (for instance, by way of appeal) with regard to the matter giving rise to the proceedings, or in connection with the proceedings<sup>4</sup>. The defendant may use or disclose the object to the extent that it has been displayed to the public in open court, or the information to the extent that it has been communicated to the public in open court, but he may not do so if the object is displayed or the information is communicated in proceedings to deal with a contempt of court<sup>5</sup>.

If the defendant applies to the court<sup>6</sup> for an order granting permission to use or disclose the object or information, and the court makes such an order, the defendant may use or disclose the object or information for the purpose and to the extent specified by the court<sup>7</sup>. Subject to rules of court<sup>8</sup>, such an application may be made and dealt with at any time, and in particular after the defendant has been acquitted or convicted or the prosecutor has decided not to proceed with the case concerned<sup>9</sup>. Where such an application is made<sup>10</sup>, and the prosecutor or a person claiming to have an interest in the object or information applies to be heard by the court<sup>11</sup>, the court must not make an order granting permission unless the person applying to be heard has been given an opportunity to be heard<sup>12</sup>.

Nothing in the foregoing provisions affects any other restriction or prohibition on the use or disclosure of an object or information, whether the restriction or prohibition arises under an enactment (whenever passed) or otherwise<sup>13</sup>.

It is a contempt of court for a person knowingly to use or disclose an object or information recorded in it if the use or disclosure is in contravention of the foregoing provisions<sup>14</sup>. A magistrates' court or the Crown Court has jurisdiction to deal with a person who is guilty of a contempt<sup>15</sup>. A person who is guilty of such a contempt may be committed to custody by a magistrates' court for a specified period not exceeding six months or that court may impose on him a fine not exceeding £5,000 or may both commit him to custody and impose a fine on him<sup>16</sup>. The Crown Court may commit a person guilty of such an offence to custody for a specified period not exceeding two years or impose a fine on him or may both commit him to custody and impose a fine on him<sup>17</sup>.

If a person is guilty of a contempt under these provisions, and the object concerned is in his possession, the court finding him guilty may order that the object be forfeited and dealt with in such manner as the court may order<sup>18</sup>. If the court proposes to make an order<sup>19</sup>, and the person found guilty, or any other person claiming to have an interest in the object, applies to be heard by the court, the court must not make the order unless the applicant has been given an opportunity to be heard<sup>20</sup>. If a person is guilty of a contempt under these provisions, and a copy of the object concerned is in his possession, the court finding him guilty may order that the copy be forfeited and dealt with in such manner as the court may order<sup>21</sup>. An object or information is inadmissible as evidence in civil proceedings if to adduce it would in the opinion of the court<sup>22</sup> be likely to constitute a contempt under these provisions<sup>23</sup>.

(iii) Protected Material in Proceedings Relating to Certain Sexual Offences

1395. Meaning of 'protected material'.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. 'Protected material' in relation to proceedings for a sexual offence<sup>2</sup> means a copy<sup>3</sup> of (1) a statement relating to that or any other sexual offence made by the victim<sup>4</sup> of the offence, whether recorded in writing or any other form; (2) a photograph or pseudo-photograph<sup>5</sup> of any such victim; or (3) a report of a medical examination of the physical condition of any such victim<sup>6</sup>.

1 The Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 comes into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order under s 11 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 For these purposes, references to proceedings for a sexual offence include references to: (1) any appeal or application for leave to appeal brought or made by or in relation to a defendant in such proceedings; (2) any application made to the Criminal Cases Review Commission for the reference under the Criminal Appeal Act 1995 s 9 or s 11 of any conviction, verdict, finding or sentence recorded or imposed in relation to any such defendant; and (3) any petition to the Secretary of State requesting him to recommend the exercise of Her Majesty's prerogative of mercy in relation to any such defendant: Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 2(2) (not yet in force). 'Proceedings' means criminal proceedings: s 2(2) (not yet in force).

'Sexual offence', for the purposes of the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997, includes any offence under (a) the Protection of Children Act 1978 s 1 or the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 160; (b) any offence under any provision of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1 (ss 1-79) (as amended) except ss 64, 65, 69 or s 71; (c) the Criminal Law Act 1977 (ie conspiracy to commit any of the offences mentioned in heads (a) and (b) supra); (d) the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 s 1 (ie attempting to commit any of those offences); (e) any offence of inciting another to commit any of those offences: Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 2(1), Schedule (not yet in force) (amended by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 ss 139, 140, Sch 6 para 36, Sch 7).

3 Ie a copy in whatever form, which is given by the prosecutor to any person under the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997: s 1(1) (not yet in force). Subject to s 1(4) (not yet in force), references to any protected material include references to any part of any such material and references to a copy of any such material include references to any part of such copy: s 1(3) (not yet in force). Nothing in the Act (1) so far as it relates to a defendant making any copy of (a) any protected material; or (b) a copy of such material, applies to a manuscript copy which is not a verbatim copy of the whole of that material; or (2) so far as it refers to a defendant having in his possession any copy of any protected material, applies to a manuscript copy made by him which is not a verbatim copy of the whole of that material: s 1(4) (not yet in force).

4 A person is, in relation to any proceedings for a sexual offence, a victim of that offence if (1) the charge, summons or indictment by which proceedings are instituted names that person as a person in relation to whom that offence was committed; or (2) that offence can, in the prosecutor's opinion, be reasonably regarded as having been committed in relation to that person; and a person is, in relation to any such proceedings, a victim of any other sexual offence if that offence can, in the prosecutor's opinion, be reasonably regarded as having been committed in relation to that person: ibid s 1(2) (not yet in force).

5 'Photograph' and 'pseudo-photograph' are to be construed in accordance with the Protection of Children Act 1978 s 7(4), (7): Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 2(1) (not yet in force).

6 Ibid s 1(1) (not yet in force).

1396. Regulation of disclosures by the prosecutor.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where, in connection with any proceedings for a sexual offence<sup>2</sup>, any statement or other protected material<sup>3</sup> would otherwise<sup>4</sup> fall to be disclosed by the prosecutor<sup>5</sup> to the defendant<sup>6</sup>, the prosecutor must not disclose that material to the defendant<sup>7</sup>, but rather if the defendant has a legal representative<sup>8</sup> who has given the requisite undertaking<sup>9</sup>, must disclose the material in question by giving a copy of it to that representative<sup>10</sup>. If the defendant has no legal representative<sup>11</sup>, the prosecutor must disclose the material in question by giving a copy of it to the appropriate person<sup>12</sup> in order for that person to show that copy to the defendant<sup>13</sup>. Once a copy of any material is given to any relevant person<sup>14</sup> by the prosecutor the copy is protected material<sup>15</sup>.

If material has been disclosed to the defendant's legal representative<sup>16</sup>, and at a time when any relevant proceedings<sup>17</sup> are current or in contemplation the legal representative either ceases to act as the defendant's legal representative<sup>18</sup> or dies or becomes incapacitated, that material is to be further disclosed in accordance with the relevant statutory provision<sup>19</sup>. If material has been disclosed to an appropriate person<sup>20</sup> and, at a time when any relevant proceedings are current or in contemplation, the defendant acquires a legal representative who gives the prosecutor the requisite undertaking, that material must be further disclosed in accordance with the relevant statutory provision<sup>21</sup> to the defendant's legal representative<sup>22</sup>.

4 Ie other than under the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 3: s 3(1) (not yet in force).

5 'The prosecutor', in relation to any proceedings for a sexual offence, means any person acting as prosecutor (whether an individual or a body): ibid s 2(1) (not yet in force).

6 'Defendant', in relation to any proceedings for a sexual offence, means any person charged with that offence (whether or not he has been convicted): ibid s 2(1) (not yet in force).

7 Ibid s 3(1)(a) (not yet in force). The material must instead be disclosed in accordance with s 3(2) or s 3(3) (not yet in force) as applicable: s 3(1)(b) (not yet in force). Where a copy of any material falls to be given by any person under the Act by the prosecutor any such copy may be in such form as the prosecutor thinks fit, and where the material consists of information which has been recorded in any form, need not be in the same form as that in which the information has already been recorded: s 3(4) (not yet in force).

8 'Legal representative', in relation to a defendant, means any authorised advocate or authorised litigator (as defined by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 119(1)) acting for the defendant in connection with any proceedings for the sexual offence in question: Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 2(1) (not yet in force).

1397. Disclosure to the defendant's legal representative.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. The defendant's legal representative<sup>2</sup> is required to give, in relation to any protected material<sup>3</sup> given to him, an undertaking to discharge the following obligations<sup>4</sup>.

He must take reasonable steps to ensure that the protected material, or any copy of it, is only shown to the defendant in circumstances where it is possible to exercise adequate supervision to prevent the defendant retaining possession of the material or copy or making a copy of it<sup>5</sup>, and to ensure that the protected material is not shown and no copy of it is given, and its contents are not otherwise revealed, to any person other than the defendant, except so far as it appears to him necessary to show the material or give a copy of it to any such person in connection with any relevant proceedings, or for the purposes of any assessment or treatment of the defendant (whether before or after conviction)<sup>6</sup>.

The legal representative must inform<sup>7</sup> the defendant that the protected material is such material<sup>8</sup>, and that the defendant can only inspect it in specified circumstances<sup>9</sup>. He must also inform the defendant that it would be an offence for the defendant to have protected material, or a copy of it, in his possession otherwise than while inspecting it or the copy in specified circumstances<sup>10</sup>, or to give that material or any copy of it, or otherwise reveal its contents, to any other person<sup>11</sup>.

Where the protected material or copy of it has been shown or given to a person other than the defendant<sup>12</sup>, the legal representative must inform that person that he must not give any copy of that material, or otherwise reveal its contents to any other person other than the defendant, or to the defendant otherwise than in specified circumstances<sup>13</sup> and that it would be an offence for that person to do so<sup>14</sup>.

A legal representative who ceases to act as such for the defendant at a time when any relevant proceedings are current or in contemplation, must inform the prosecutor of that fact, and if he is informed by the prosecutor that the defendant has a new legal representative who has given the prosecutor the undertaking required, he must give the protected material, and any copies of it in his possession, to the defendant's new legal representative<sup>15</sup>. At the time of giving the protected material to the new legal representative he must inform that person that the material is protected material<sup>16</sup>, and of the extent to which that material has been shown by him, and any copies of it have been given by him, to any other person (including the defendant)<sup>17</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(5) ADVANCE INFORMATION AND DISCLOSURE/(iii) Protected Material in Proceedings Relating to Certain Sexual Offences/1398. Disclosure to unrepresented defendant.

1398. Disclosure to unrepresented defendant.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where a defendant<sup>2</sup> has no legal representative<sup>3</sup> a copy of any material falls to be given by the prosecutor<sup>4</sup> to the appropriate person<sup>5</sup>. The appropriate person must take reasonable steps to ensure that: (1) the protected material<sup>6</sup>, or any copy of it, is only shown to the defendant in circumstances where it is possible to exercise adequate supervision to prevent the defendant retaining possession of the material or copy or making a copy of it<sup>7</sup>; (2) the defendant is given such access to that material, or a copy of it, as he reasonably requires in connection with any relevant proceedings<sup>8</sup>; and (3) the material is not shown and no copy of it is given, and its contents are not otherwise revealed, to any person other than the defendant<sup>9</sup>.

The prosecutor must inform the defendant that it would be an offence for the defendant to have that material, or any copy of it, in his possession otherwise than while inspecting it in specified circumstances<sup>10</sup>, or to give that material or any copy of it, or otherwise reveal its contents, to any other person<sup>11</sup>. If the defendant requests the prosecutor in writing to give a further copy of the material to some other person, and it appears to the prosecutor to be necessary to do so in connection with any relevant proceedings, or for the purposes of any assessment or treatment of the defendant (whether before or after conviction), the prosecutor must give such a copy to that person<sup>12</sup>. The prosecutor may give such a copy to some other person where no request has been made but it appears to him that in the interests of the defendant it is necessary to do so<sup>13</sup>. In such circumstances, the prosecutor at the time of giving such a copy to a person must inform that person that he must not give any copy of the protected material or otherwise reveal its contents to any person other than the defendant, or to the defendant otherwise than in specified circumstances<sup>14</sup> and that it would be an offence to do so<sup>15</sup>. If the prosecutor receives a request from the defendant to give a further copy of the material to another person, but does not consider it to be necessary to do so and refuses the request, he must inform the defendant of that refusal<sup>16</sup>.

1 The Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 comes into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order under s 11 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

1399. Disclosure by the Criminal Cases Review Commission.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where, in connection with any relevant application<sup>2</sup> made to the Criminal Cases Review Commission, any protected material<sup>3</sup> would otherwise fall to be disclosed by the Commission to the applicant<sup>4</sup> the Commission must not disclose that material to the applicant, but it must instead be disclosed in the prescribed manner<sup>5</sup>.

1 The Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 comes into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order under s 11 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 'Relevant application' means an application made to the Commission for the reference under the Criminal Appeal Act 1995 s 9 or s 11, of any conviction, verdict, finding or sentence of a court in proceedings for a sexual offence: Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 7(4)(a) (not yet in force). As to the Criminal Cases Review Commission see PARAS 2028-2032 post.

3 For the meaning of 'protected material' see PARA 1395 ante.

4 'The applicant' in relation to a relevant application means the person by or on whose behalf the application is made: Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 s 7(4)(b) (not yet in force).

5 Ibid s 7(1) (not yet in force). Sections 3(2)-(5), 4-6 (not yet in force) apply in connection with any disclosure by the Commission in relation to which s 7(1) (not yet in force) applies as they apply in connection with any disclosure by the prosecutor in relation to which s 3(1) (not yet in force; see PARA 1396 ante) applies: s 7(2) (not yet in force). For the purposes of s 7(1) (not yet in force) and the operation, in connection with any such disclosure by the Commission, of the provisions in 7(2) (not yet in force), references in the Act to the prosecutor and the defendant are to be read as references to the Commission and the applicant respectively: s 7(3) (not yet in force).

1400. Offences.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where any material has been disclosed under the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997<sup>2</sup> in connection with any proceedings for a sexual offence<sup>3</sup>, it is an offence for the defendant<sup>4</sup> to have the protected material<sup>5</sup>, or any copy of it, in his possession otherwise than while inspecting it or the copy in specified circumstances<sup>6</sup>, or to give that material or any copy of it, or otherwise reveal its contents, to any other person<sup>7</sup>. Where any protected material, or any copy of any such material, has been shown or given to any person in accordance with the relevant statutory provisions<sup>8</sup>, it is an offence for that person to give any copy of that material or otherwise reveal its contents to any person other than the defendant, or to the defendant otherwise than in the circumstances specified<sup>9</sup>.

A person found guilty of such an offence<sup>10</sup> is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both, or on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or a fine or both<sup>11</sup>. In the case of a person charged with an offence under the Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 relating to any protected material or copy of any such material, it is a defence to prove that, at the time of the alleged offence, he was not aware, and neither suspected nor had reason to suspect, that the material or copy in question was protected material or a copy of any such material<sup>12</sup>.

1 The Sexual Offences (Protected Material) Act 1997 comes into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order under s 11 (not yet in force). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

Section 8(1), (2) (not yet in force) applies whether or not any relevant proceedings are current or in contemplation (and references to the defendant are to be construed accordingly): s 8(3) (not yet in force). For the meaning of 'relevant proceedings' see PARA 1396 note 17 ante.

10 Ie under ibid s 8(1) or s 8(2) (not yet in force).

11 Ibid s 8(4) (not yet in force). As to the statutory maximum see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 140. The court before which a person is tried for an offence under s 8 (not yet in force) may

(whether or not he is convicted of that offence) make an order requiring him to return any protected material, or any copy of any such material, in his possession to the prosecutor: s 8(6) (not yet in force).

12 Ibid s 8(5) (not yet in force). Nothing in s 8(1) or s 8(2) (not yet in force) is to be taken to apply to: (1) any disclosure made in the course of any proceedings before a court or in any report of any such proceedings; or (2) any disclosure made or copy given by a person when returning any protected material, or a copy of any such material, to the prosecutor or the defendant's legal representative; and accordingly nothing in s 4 or s 5 (not yet in force) is to be read as precluding the making of any disclosure or the giving of any copy in circumstances falling within head (1) or (2) supra: s 8(7) (not yet in force).

EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1401. Competence of witnesses generally.

(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY

1401. Competence of witnesses generally.

A competent witness is one who may lawfully give evidence. The general rule is that at every stage in criminal proceedings all persons are (whatever their age) competent to give evidence for the prosecution or the defence<sup>1</sup>, unless they are unable to understand questions put to them or unable to give answers which can be understood<sup>2</sup>.

Incapacity may arise from a temporary cause, such as illness or drunkenness, if this renders a witness incapable of understanding questions or of giving a rational account of events<sup>3</sup>.

A person who is a defendant in the proceedings is not competent to give evidence for the prosecution<sup>4</sup>. This does not include a former defendant, who is no longer liable to be convicted of any offence in the proceedings, whether as a result of pleading guilty or for any other reason<sup>5</sup>. A former defendant may thus be competent as a witness for either the prosecution or defence.

If any question as to the competence of a witness is raised (whether by a party or by the court of its own motion) it is for the party calling the witness to satisfy the court that, on a balance of probabilities, the witness is competent to give evidence in the proceedings<sup>6</sup>.

1 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 53(1). See R v MacPherson [2005] EWCA Crim 3605, [2006] All ER (D) 104 (Feb) (a child should not be found incompetent on the basis of age alone); see also R v Cowell [1940] 2 KB 49, 27 Cr App Rep 191, CCA (competence of defendant to testify at trial within a trial).

2 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 53(2), (3). A witness who cannot speak may give evidence in writing, and witnesses who are aged under 17 or who suffer from disabilities, mental disorder or significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning may qualify for assistance through 'special measures directions': see PARA 1417 et seq post. In the case of child witnesses, this will almost invariably include the adoption of a videotaped interview in place of that witness's evidence in chief (see PARA 1417 et seq post) but in R v Powell [2006] EWCA Crim 03, [2006] All ER (D) 45 (Jan), CA, the court warned that such a witness must be competent to understand and answer questions under cross-examination during the trial itself. Where a child or other witness provides intelligible testimony on videotape, but fails to cope with cross-examination at trial, the court or judge will have to reconsider the question of competence and if necessary withdraw the case from the jury.

3 Where it appears likely that the witness will recover his faculties in a short while, it may be proper to grant an adjournment to allow his evidence to be received or completed: R v Baines [1987] Crim LR 508, CA.

4 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 53(2), (4).

5 Ibid s 53(5).

6 Ibid s 54(1), (2). In determining competence, the court must treat the witness as having the benefit of any special measures directions which the court has given, or proposes to give, in relation to that witness: s 54(3). As to special measures directions see PARA 1417 et seq post. Issues of competence must be determined in the absence of the jury, if there is one (s 54(4)), but any questioning of the witness must take place in the presence of the parties (s 54(6)). Expert evidence may be received on the question: s 54(5). As to the guidelines to be followed when hearing evidence of a person with learning difficulties see R v SH [2003] EWCA Crim 1208.

1401 Competence of witnesses generally

NOTES 1, 2--Where child is called as witness by prosecution he has to have the ability to understand all questions put to him by defence as well as prosecution and to provide answers to them which are understandable: R v Barker [2010] EWCA Crim 4, [2010] All ER (D) 126 (Jan) (child under five years of age deemed competent to give evidence).

EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1402. Compellability of witnesses.

1402. Compellability of witnesses.

A compellable witness is one who may lawfully be required to give evidence. As a general rule witnesses who are competent<sup>1</sup> to testify are also compellable<sup>2</sup>.

A defendant may be called as a witness only on his own application<sup>3</sup>, but where there are separate trials of two defendants originally charged in the same indictment, each is a compellable witness for the other<sup>4</sup>. A former defendant who has pleaded guilty<sup>5</sup>, or who has been acquitted on the judge's direction<sup>6</sup>, or in respect of whom a nolle prosequi<sup>7</sup> has been entered, is a compellable witness for the prosecution or for any remaining defendant<sup>8</sup>. There is no general rule that a defendant who has pleaded guilty should be sentenced before he gives evidence against a co-defendant. On the contrary, it may be most undesirable for him to be sentenced before the full facts have been established<sup>9</sup>.

The spouse or civil partner of a defendant is compellable only in certain circumstances<sup>10</sup>. Immunities attach to the sovereign and to foreign or commonwealth diplomats, consular agents, officers of certain international organisations and heads of state<sup>11</sup>.

A witness who is not compellable, but who chooses to give evidence, is in the same position regarding the obligation to answer questions properly put as a witness who is compellable<sup>12</sup>. In the case of a defendant who elects to testify, inferences may also be drawn from his failure to answer any such questions<sup>13</sup>. A compellable witness may nevertheless enjoy a privilege in respect of certain disclosures<sup>14</sup>.

Where the prosecution or defence wishes to call a ward of court to testify at a criminal trial, it is for the judge of the criminal court to determine whether the ward should be called. Leave of the wardship court is not required<sup>15</sup>.

1 As to competence see PARA 1401 ante.

2 Hoskyn v Metropolitan Police Comr [1979] AC 474, 67 Cr App Rep 88, HL. A compellable witness who refuses to give evidence may be punished for contempt of court: Hennegal v Evance (1806) 12 Ves 201. He should usually be given the opportunity to reflect, take legal advice and purge his contempt before being punished, but this is not a legal right: R v Moran (1985) 81 Cr App Rep 51. See further CONTEMPT OF COURT.

4 R v Richardson (1967) 51 Cr App Rep 381, CCA. It has, however, been held that a person awaiting trial for an offence should not be called to give evidence of his own offence against another person, even if the other is being tried for a different offence: R v Grant [1944] 2 All ER 311, 30 Cr App Rep 99, CCA; R v Sharrock [1948] 1 All ER 145, 32 Cr App Rep 124, CCA.

8 An accomplice who has been charged but against whom proceedings have not yet been taken should be called by the prosecution only if he is omitted from the indictment or has pleaded guilty or the prosecution offer no evidence against him or a nolle prosequi has been entered in respect of him: R v Pipe (1966) 51 Cr App Rep 17, CA (explained in R v Turner (1975) 61 Cr App Rep 67, CA).

9 R v Weekes (1982) 74 Cr App Rep 161 at 166, CA, per Boreham J. The previous practice was to sentence where possible before the evidence was given: R v Payne [1950] 1 All ER 102, 34 Cr App Rep 43, CCA. In the ordinary case the prosecution should not call a former co-defendant who has been sentenced to give evidence against another defendant who is being tried unless it has a clear indication that he is willing to testify for the Crown: R v Sinclair (1989) Times, 18 April, CA.

10 See PARA 1405 post. In contrast, other partners, parents or children of the defendant (where competent) are always compellable (R v Pearce [2001] EWCA Crim 2834, [2002] 1 WLR 1553, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 551), as are parties to a bigamous or invalid marriage (R v Khan (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 44, CA).

EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1403. Competence of witness to give sworn evidence.

1403. Competence of witness to give sworn evidence.

Any question whether a witness in criminal proceedings may be sworn for the purpose of giving evidence on oath, whether raised by a party to the proceedings, or by the court of its own motion, is to be determined by the court as follows<sup>1</sup>.

A child under the age of 14 may not give sworn evidence<sup>2</sup>, nor may any witness give sworn evidence who lacks a sufficient appreciation of the solemnity of the occasion and of the particular responsibility to tell the truth which is involved in taking an oath<sup>3</sup>, but a witness who can give intelligible evidence<sup>4</sup> is presumed to have a sufficient appreciation of those matters unless some evidence tending to show the contrary is adduced (by any party)<sup>5</sup>, in which case the party seeking to have the witness sworn must satisfy the court that, on a balance of probabilities, the witness has attained the age of 14 and does have sufficient appreciation<sup>6</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid s 55(2)(b). The test is derived from R v Hayes [1977] 2 All ER 288, 64 Cr App Rep 194, CA, in which it was established that the witness need not believe in any 'divine sanction' of the oath.

<sup>4</sup> A person is able to give intelligible testimony if he is able to understand questions put to him as a witness, and give answers to them which can be understood: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 55(8).

<sup>6</sup> Ibid s 55(4). Note that a balance of probabilities suffices even in the case of a prosecution witness. Any such question must be determined in the absence of any jury (s 55(5)), but any questioning of the witness must take place in the presence of the parties (s 55(7)). Expert evidence may be received on the question: s 55(6).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1404. Reception of unsworn evidence.

1404. Reception of unsworn evidence.

Where a person is competent to give evidence in criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup>, but is not permitted to be sworn for the purpose of giving evidence on oath in such proceedings<sup>2</sup> he must give his evidence unsworn<sup>3</sup>.

A defendant may now be convicted on the basis of unsworn evidence. There is no longer any requirement that such evidence be corroborated by sworn testimony<sup>4</sup>, nor is there now any obligation to warn a jury as to the 'dangers' of convicting on the uncorroborated evidence of a child<sup>5</sup>.

Where a witness who is competent to give evidence in criminal proceedings gives evidence in such proceedings unsworn, no conviction, verdict or finding in those proceedings on appeal is to be taken to be unsafe<sup>6</sup> by reason only that it appears to the Court of Appeal that the witness should have given his evidence on oath<sup>7</sup>.

If a person over the age of 14 wilfully gives false evidence in such circumstances that, had the evidence been given on oath, he would have been guilty of perjury, he is instead guilty of a summary offence<sup>8</sup>.

1    Ie competent under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 53 (see PARA 1401 ante).

2    Ie he has not attained 14 years of age or lacks sufficient understanding for the purposes of ibid s 55(2) (see PARA 1403 ante): s 56(1).

3    Ibid s 56(2). A deposition of unsworn evidence given by such a person may be taken for the purposes of criminal proceedings as if that evidence had been given on oath (s 56(3)) and may be received in evidence (s 56(4)). A child or other witness may be competent to give unsworn evidence without having any appreciation of the importance of telling the truth, but it may still be appropriate in some cases for a child witness to be warned as to the importance of telling the truth: R v Hampshire [1996] QB 1, [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 319, CA.

4    The Children and Young Persons Act 1933, which formerly imposed such a requirement, was repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 34(1).

5    Ibid s 34(2) (amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 ss 32(2), (4), 168(3), Sch 11).

6    Ie for the purposes of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 s 2(1), s 13(1) or s 16(1) (as amended) (grounds for allowing appeals): see PARAS 1877, 1886-1887 post.

7    Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 56(5). In contrast, if a witness is allowed to give evidence on oath when not competent to do so, an appellate court might treat this as material, but whether it would be sufficient to make a conviction unsafe must depend on the circumstances.

8    Ibid s 57(1), (2). In the case of an adult the maximum penalty is imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or a fine not exceeding £1,000 or both: s 57(2). As from a day to be appointed this maximum term is increased to a maximum term of 51 weeks (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 281(4), (5), (7) (not yet in force)), although this does not affect the penalty for any offence committed before that day (s 281(6)(b) (not yet in force)). At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed. In relation to a person under the age of 14, the maximum penalty on summary conviction is limited to a fine not exceeding £250: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 57(3). See also PARA 712 ante.

EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1405. Competence and compellability of spouse or civil partner of defendant.

1405. Competence and compellability of spouse or civil partner of defendant.

No special rules govern the competence of the spouse or civil partner<sup>1</sup> of a defendant to give evidence in criminal proceedings<sup>2</sup>.

The spouse or civil partner of a defendant (if not also charged in the same proceedings<sup>3</sup>) is compellable to give evidence on behalf of that defendant<sup>4</sup>; but is compellable to give evidence for the prosecution or on behalf of any person charged in the same proceedings only in respect of a 'specified offence'<sup>5</sup>. A specified offence is one which:

- 2162 (1) involves an assault on, or injury or a threat of injury to, the spouse or civil partner of the defendant or a person who was at the material time under the age of 16<sup>6</sup>; or
- 2163 (2) is a sexual offence<sup>7</sup> alleged to have been committed in respect of a person who was at the material time under that age<sup>8</sup>; or
- 2164 (3) consists of attempting or conspiring to commit, or of aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or inciting the commission of an offence falling within head (1) or (2) above<sup>9</sup>.

In any proceedings a person who has been but is no longer married to the defendant (or who has been but is no longer a civil partner of that defendant) is compellable to give evidence as if that person and the defendant had never been married or civil partners<sup>10</sup>.

The failure of the spouse or civil partner of a defendant to give evidence in the proceedings must not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to civil partnerships see the Civil Partnership Act 2004; and MATRIMONIAL AND CIVIL PARTNERSHIP LAW. A party to an invalid or bigamous marriage is not a wife or husband for the purposes of the rules governing competence and compellability: see R v Khan (Junaid) (1987) 84 Cr App Rep 44, CA.

2 As to the general competency requirements for witnesses see PARA 1401 ante.

3 Where spouses or civil partners are charged in the same proceedings, neither is compellable at the trial (or competent as a prosecution witness) unless no longer liable to be convicted of any offence in the proceedings (whether as a result of pleading guilty or for any other reason): see the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(4), (4A) (s 80(4) substituted, and s 80(4A) added by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 67(1), Sch 4 paras 12, 13).

4 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(2) (substituted by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Sch 4 paras 12, 13; and amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 s 261(1), Sch 27 para 97). A witness giving evidence for a spouse or civil partner may be cross-examined by any co-defendant: see R v Hilton [1972] 1 QB 421, 55 Cr App Rep 466, CA.

5 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(2A) (added by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Sch 4 paras 12, 13; and amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 Sch 27 para 97). The fact that a witness may be compellable in respect of one offence does not make him compellable in respect of other offences charged in the same indictment: R v Deacon [1973] 2 All ER 1145, 57 Cr App Rep 688, CA. In other cases, the prosecution is under a duty to disclose to the defence and to the court that a defendant's spouse (or civil partner) is reluctant to give evidence against him, so that the court can warn her before she gives evidence that she is not obliged to do so: R v Birmingham Magistrates' Court, ex p Shields (1994) 158 JP 845, DC. See also R v Pitt [1983] QB 25, 75 Cr App Rep 254, CA.

6 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(3)(a) (amended by the Civil Partnership Act 2004 s 261(1), Sch 27 para 97). As to what may amount to an offence 'involving' an assault, injury or threat of injury, see R v Lee [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 266, CA; R v Verolla [1963] 1 QB 285, 46 Cr App Rep 252, CCA. The age of such a person at the material time is, for such purposes, deemed to be or to have been that which appears to the court to be or to have been his age at that time: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(6).

7 'Sexual offence' means for this purpose an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 1956, the Indecency with Children Act 1960, the Protection of Children Act 1978 or the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(7) (amended by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 ss 139, 140, Sch 6 para 28(1), (2), Sch 7).

Spouses who are judicially separated, but not divorced, remain husband and wife: Moss v Moss [1963] 2 QB 799, 47 Cr App Rep 222, DC. As to the procedure to be followed when the status of a witness as the spouse of the defendant is questioned see R v Yacoob (1981) 72 Cr App Rep 313, CA; and PARA 1401 ante.

See also R v Naudeer [1984] 3 All ER 1036, 80 Cr App Rep 9, CA. Breach of the prohibition will not necessarily lead to the quashing of a conviction: R v Hunter [1969] Crim LR 262, CA; and see also R v Dickman (1910) 5 Cr App Rep 135, CCA. The trial judge is not prohibited from commenting (R v Gallagher [1974] 3 All ER 118, 59 Cr App Rep 239, CA), but should be circumspect about doing so (R v Naudeer supra). EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1406. Witness wrongly compelled to testify.

1406. Witness wrongly compelled to testify.

Where the spouse or civil partner of a defendant is not compellable, but is wrongly compelled to testify for the prosecution<sup>1</sup>, or was not informed of his or her right not to testify when he or she might have taken advantage of that right<sup>2</sup>, any conviction based upon that spouse's evidence is liable to be quashed on appeal. Similar considerations apply where the defendant is effectively forced to testify owing to the wrongful exclusion of other defence evidence on which he might otherwise have relied<sup>3</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(6) WITNESS COMPETENCE AND COMPELLABILITY/1407. Capacity of absent witnesses.

1407. Capacity of absent witnesses.

Where, under the Criminal Justice Act 2003, either the prosecution or the defence seeks to adduce hearsay evidence in the form of a business document<sup>1</sup>, or a statement by a person who for specified reasons is not available to give oral evidence in the proceedings<sup>2</sup>, or where it is sought to adduce evidence of a witness's previous consistent or inconsistent statement<sup>3</sup>, or where it is submitted that a document used by a witness to refresh his memory in court has become admissible as evidence in the proceedings<sup>4</sup>, an issue may be raised as to the capacity of the maker of the statement, etc, or of any person who supplied or received the information concerned or created or received in the business document<sup>5</sup>. In such a case proceedings must be held for the determination of that issue in the absence of the jury (if there is one)<sup>6</sup> and it must be established by the party seeking to adduce the evidence in question<sup>7</sup> that the maker of the statement or any person who supplied or received the information concerned was capable at the time of understanding questions put to him about the matters stated, and of giving answers to such questions which could be understood<sup>8</sup>. That person must, in other words, be proved to have been capable at the time of acting as a competent witness<sup>9</sup>.

1 See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 117; and PARA 1522 post.

2 See ibid s 116; and PARA 1521 post.

3 See ibid ss 119, 120; and PARA 1529 post.

4 See ibid s 120(3); and PARA 1439 post.

5 See ibid s 123(4). Nothing in s 116, s 119 or s 120 makes a statement admissible as evidence if it was made by a person who did not have the required capability at the time when he made the statement: s 123(1). Nothing in s 117 makes a statement admissible as evidence if any person who, in order for the requirements of s 117(2) to be satisfied, must at any time have supplied or received the information concerned or created or received the document or part concerned (1) did not have the required capability at that time; or (2) cannot be identified but cannot reasonably be assumed to have had the required capability at that time: s 123(2).

6 Ibid s 123(4)(a).

7 Expert evidence may be admitted on this issue, as may evidence from any person to whom the statement in question was made: ibid s 123(4)(b).

8 Ibid s 123(3).

9 As to the test for competence see PARA 1401 ante. The standard of proof required of either party is proof on a balance of probabilities: ibid s 123(4)(c).

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(i) Attendance/1408. Evidence of defendant.

(7) CALLING WITNESSES

(i) Attendance

1408. Evidence of defendant.

In criminal proceedings, a defendant who elects to give evidence must (where competent to do so<sup>1</sup>) testify on oath and is then liable to cross-examination<sup>2</sup>. Unless otherwise ordered by the court, he must give his evidence from the witness box or any other place from which the other witnesses give their evidence<sup>3</sup>.

Where the only witness to the facts of the case called by the defence is the defendant, he must be called as a witness immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution<sup>4</sup>. If the defence intends to call two or more witnesses to the facts of the case, and those witnesses include the defendant, the defendant must be called before the other witness or witnesses unless the court in its discretion otherwise directs<sup>5</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> See the Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 72(1) (amended by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 67(1), Sch 4 para 10). This abolished the common law right of the defendant to make an unsworn statement from the dock on which he was not open to cross-examination. It does not affect the right of the defendant, if not represented by counsel or solicitor, to address the court or jury otherwise than on oath on any matter on which, if he were represented, counsel or a solicitor could address the court or jury on his behalf: Criminal Justice Act 1982 s 72(1). Nor does it prevent the defendant making a statement without being sworn if (1) it is one he is required by law to make personally; or (2) if he makes it by way of mitigation before the court passes sentence upon him: s 72(2).

<sup>3</sup> Criminal Evidence Act 1898 s 1(4) (amended and renumbered by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Sch 4 para 1(1), (6)). The defendant should not be deprived of this right unless there are special circumstances, eg he is too infirm to walk to the witness box or so violent that he cannot be properly controlled there: R v Symonds (1924) 18 Cr App Rep 100, CCA.

<sup>5</sup> Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 79. At common law it was held that in exceptional circumstances a formal witness or a witness about whose evidence there was no controversy might, by the leave of the court, be called before the defendant: R v Morrison (1911) 6 Cr App Rep 159, CCA; R v Smith (Joan) [1968] 2 All ER 115, 52 Cr App Rep 224, CA. It would appear that in these circumstances it would now be open to a court to exercise the power conferred by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 79. See also PARA 1314 ante.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(i) Attendance/1409. Securing attendance of witnesses.

1409. Securing attendance of witnesses.

The statutory provisions and associated procedural rules governing the summoning of persons to testify or produce evidence in criminal proceedings before the Crown Court<sup>1</sup> differ from those applicable in the magistrates' courts<sup>2</sup>. Only those rules and provisions governing proceedings before the Crown Court are considered in this volume<sup>3</sup>.

Where in any proceedings before the Crown Court any party to those proceedings wishes to secure the attendance of a witness or the production of any document or thing<sup>4</sup>, an application may be made to the Crown Court for a witness summons<sup>5</sup>. Where following such an application the Crown Court is satisfied that:

- 2165 (1) a person is likely to be able to give evidence likely to be material evidence, or produce any document or thing likely to be material evidence, for the purpose of any criminal proceedings before the Crown Court<sup>6</sup>; and
- 2166 (2) it is in the interests of justice to issue a summons to secure the attendance of that person to give evidence or to produce the document or thing<sup>7</sup>, the Court must, subject to certain provisos, issue a witness summons directed to the person concerned and requiring him to attend before the Crown Court at the time and place stated in the summons, and give the evidence or produce the document or thing<sup>8</sup>. The Court may, however, refuse to issue the summons if any requirement relating to the application is not fulfilled<sup>9</sup>, and it may also issue such a summons of its own motion<sup>10</sup>.

A witness summons which requires a person to produce a document or thing may additionally require him to produce the document or thing for prior inspection by the applicant at a time and place stated in the summons<sup>11</sup>.

1 The legislation applicable to proceedings in the Crown Court is the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 ss 2-2E (as substituted, added and amended). The relevant procedural rules are contained in CrimPR Pt 28.

2 The legislation applicable to proceedings in the magistrates' courts is the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 97 (as amended). The relevant procedural rules are contained in CrimPR Pt 28.

3 As to the procedure in magistrates' courts see MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 734.

4 In cases where the party in question is not confident that the person will attend or produce the evidence voluntarily.

5 Where a person has been sent for trial for any offence to which the proceedings concerned relate, an application must be made as soon as is reasonably practicable after service on that person, in pursuance of regulations made under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3 para 1, of the documents relevant to that offence: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(4) (s 2 substituted by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2), (7), (8); the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(4) further substituted by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 41, Sch 3 Pt 2 para 42(a)). Where the proceedings concerned relate to an offence in relation to which a bill of indictment has been preferred under the authority of the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (bill preferred by direction of Court of Appeal, or by direction or with consent of judge) an application must be made as soon as is reasonably practicable after the bill was preferred: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(6) (s 2 as so substituted).

The application must be made in accordance with the CrimPR, which may make different provision for different cases or different descriptions of case: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(7)-(10) (as so substituted). The application must be made in writing to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court and must: (1) contain a brief description of the stipulated evidence, document or thing; (2) set out the reasons why the applicant considers that the stipulated evidence, document or thing is likely to be material evidence; (3) set out the reason why the applicant considers that the directed person will not voluntarily attend as a witness or produce the document or thing; and (4) if the witness summons is proposed to require the directed person to produce a document or thing, (a) inform the directed person of his right to make representations in writing and at a hearing, and (b) state whether the applicant seeks a requirement also to be imposed under the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2A (as added) and, if such a requirement is sought, specify the place and time at which the applicant wishes the document or thing to be produced: CrimPR 28.3(1), (2).

The application must be supported by an affidavit (i) setting out any charge on which the proceedings concerned are based; (ii) specifying the stipulated evidence, document or thing in such a way as to enable the directed person to identify it; (iii) specifying grounds for believing that the directed person is likely to be able to give the stipulated evidence or to produce the stipulated evidence or thing; (iv) specifying grounds for believing that the stipulated evidence is likely to be material evidence or, as the case may be, that the stipulated document or thing is likely to be material evidence: CrimPR 28.3(3). A copy of the application and the supporting affidavit must be served on the directed person at the same time as it is served on the appropriate officer of the Crown Court: CrimPR 28.3(4). The directed person may, within seven days of receiving a copy of the application inform the appropriate officer of the Crown Court whether or not he wishes to make representations, concerning the issue of the witness summons proposed to be directed to him, at a hearing and may also make written representations to that officer: CrimPR 28.3(5). The appropriate officer of the Crown Court must: (A) if the directed person indicates that he wishes to have the application considered at a hearing, fix a time, date and place for the hearing; (B) if the directed person does not indicate in accordance with CrimPR 28.3(5) that he wishes to make representations at a hearing, refer the application to a judge of the Crown Court for determination with or without a hearing; and (C) notify the applicant and, where head (A) supra applies, the directed person of the time, date and place fixed for any hearing of the application: CrimPR 28.3(6).

Any hearing under CrimPR 28.3 must, unless the judge directs otherwise, take place in private and the proceedings at the hearing must be recorded: CrimPR 28.3(7). In the case of an application for a witness summons which it is proposed is to require the directed person to give evidence but not to produce any document or thing, that application may be made orally to a judge or in writing and, in such a case CrimPR 28.3(3)-(7) does not have effect, and the application must, in addition to the matters set out in CrimPR 28.3(2) (a)-(c) (see heads (1)-(3) supra), specify any charge on which the proceedings concerned are based, and the grounds for believing that the directed person is likely to be able to give the stipulated evidence: CrimPR 28.3(8). Subject to CrimPR 28.3(10), in the case of an application for a witness summons which it is proposed is to require the directed person to produce any document or thing and which is made within seven days of the date fixed for trial, the appropriate officer must refer the notice of application to the trial judge, or such other judge as may be available, to determine the application or to give such directions as the judge to whom the notice is referred considers appropriate, and CrimPR 28.3(2)(d)(i) (see head (4)(a) supra), (4)-(6) does not have effect: CrimPR 28.3(9).

In the case of an application for a witness summons which it is proposed is to require the directed person to produce any document or thing and which is made during the trial, such application must be made orally to the trial judge, to determine the application or to give such directions as he considers appropriate, and in such a case CrimPR 28.3(3)-(7) does not have effect, and the application must, in addition to the matters set out in heads (1)-(3) supra, specify the grounds for believing that the directed person is likely to be able to produce the document or thing: CrimPR 28.3(10).

6 Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(1)(a) (s 2 as substituted: see note 5 supra).

7 Ibid s 2(1)(b) (s 2 as substituted (see note 5 supra); s 2(1)(b) further substituted by the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005 s 169(1)).

8 Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2(2) (s 2 as substituted: see note 5 supra), CrimPR 28.3. If such a summons is directed to a person who then applies to the Crown Court in accordance with CrimPR 28.5, satisfies the court that he was not served with notice of the application to issue the summons and that he was neither present nor represented at the hearing of the application, and satisfies the court that he cannot give any evidence likely to be material evidence or, as the case may be, produce any document or thing likely to be material evidence, the court may direct that the summons is of no effect; and it is immaterial whether the CrimPR require that person to be served with notice of the application to issue the summons; or whether those Rules enable that person to be present or represented at the hearing of the application: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2C(1), (2), (3) (s 2C added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2); and amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 3 para 126(c)). Such an application must be made in accordance with the CrimPR: see the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2C(5), (6), (7) (as so added and amended). On receiving the application, the court officer must serve notice of the application on the person on whose application the witness summons was issued, and the court must not grant or refuse the application unless the applicant and the person on whose application the witness summons has been issued have been given an opportunity of making representations, whether at a hearing or (where they agree to do so) in writing without a hearing: CrimPR 28.5(3), (4). The Court may refuse to make such a direction if any requirement relating to the application is not fulfilled: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2C(4) (as so added).

Where a direction is made under the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2C (as added and amended) that a witness summons is of no effect, the person on whose application the summons was issued may be ordered to pay the whole or any part of the costs of the application: s 2C(8) (as so added). Any costs payable under such an order must be taxed by the proper officer of the court, and payment of those costs is enforceable in the same manner as an order for payment of costs made by the High Court in a civil case or as a sum adjudged summarily to be paid as a civil debt: s 2C(9) (as so added).

9 Ibid s 2(3) (s 2 as substituted: see note 5 supra).

10 Ibid s 2D (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2)). If such a summons is directed to a person who then applies to the Crown Court in accordance with CrimPR 28.6, satisfies the court that he cannot give any evidence likely to be material evidence or, as the case may be, produce any document or thing likely to be material evidence, the court may direct that the summons is of no effect: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2E(1) (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2); and amended by the Courts Act 2003 Sch 8 para 126(d)). Such an application must be made in accordance with the CrimPR: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2E(3), (4) (as so added and amended). The Court may refuse to make such a direction if any requirement relating to the application is not fulfilled: s 2E(2) (as so added). The Court must not grant or refuse the application unless the applicant has been given an opportunity of making representations, whether at a hearing or (where he agrees to do so) in writing without a hearing: CrimPR 28.5, 28.6.

11 Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2A (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2)). If, following the production of a document or thing in pursuance of a requirement imposed under the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2A (as added), the person applying for the summons concludes that a requirement imposed by the summons under s 2(2) (as substituted) (ie for attendance and production at trial) is no longer needed, he may apply to the Crown Court in accordance with CrimPR 28.4 for a direction that the summons is of no further effect and the court may direct accordingly: Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2B (added by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (2); and amended by the Courts Act 2003 Sch 8 para 126(b)).

1410. Punishment for disobedience; further process to secure attendance.

Any person who without just excuse disobeys a witness summons requiring him to attend before any court<sup>1</sup> or who without just excuse disobeys a requirement made by any court requiring him to produce any document or thing at a stated time and place<sup>2</sup> is guilty of contempt of that court and may be punished summarily by that court as if his contempt had been committed in the face of the court<sup>3</sup>, but no person may by reason of any such disobedience be liable to imprisonment for a period exceeding three months<sup>4</sup>.

If a judge of the Crown Court is satisfied by evidence on oath that a witness in respect of whom a witness summons is in force is unlikely to comply with the summons, the judge may issue a warrant to arrest the witness and bring him before the court before which he is required to attend; but such a warrant may not be so issued unless the judge is satisfied by such evidence that the witness is likely to be able to give evidence likely to be material evidence or produce any document or thing likely to be material evidence in the proceedings<sup>5</sup>.

Where a witness who is required to attend before the Crown Court by virtue of a witness summons fails to attend in compliance with the order or summons, that court may (1) cause to be served on him a notice requiring him to attend the court forthwith or at such time as may be specified in the notice; or (2) if the court is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he has failed to attend without just excuse, or if he has failed to comply with a notice under head (1) above, issue a warrant to arrest him and bring him before the court<sup>6</sup>.

The prosecution must prove that the witness was properly notified of the summons and the trial date, but it is not necessary for the summons to have been served on the witness in person: R v Abdulaziz [1989] Crim LR 717, CA; R v Abbott [2004] EWCA Crim 91, [2004] All ER (D) 154 (Feb); R v Wang [2005] EWCA Crim 476, [2005] All ER (D) 137 (Apr). It would suffice if it were proved the defendant was warned that the prosecution would obtain a witness summons and if he had gone to ground for the purposes of evading a witness summons which he knew was coming: R v Wang supra. It is both desirable and appropriate for the judge who issued the warrant to deal in person with the witness: R v Yusef [2003] EWCA Crim 1488, [2003] 2 Cr App Rep 488. Forgetfulness on the part of a witness cannot be a just excuse: R v Lennock (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 228, CA.

4    Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 3(2) (amended by the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 66(1), (4)). There is no parallel jurisdiction to punish such misconduct as contempt at common law: R v Abbott [2004] EWCA Crim 91 at [14], [2004] All ER (D) 154 (Feb) at [14]; cf R v Montgomery [1995] 2 All ER 28, [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 23, CA, in which there was contempt in the form of a refusal to testify in court.

A witness brought before the court in pursuance of a warrant under the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 4 (as amended) may be remanded by that court in custody or on bail (with or without sureties) until such time as the court may appoint for receiving his evidence or dealing with him under s 3 (as amended) and where a witness attends a court in pursuance of a notice under s 4 (as amended) the court may direct that the notice is to have effect as if it required him to attend at any later time appointed by the court for receiving his evidence or dealing with him as aforesaid: s 4(3).

1411. Transfer of overseas prisoners for the purpose of criminal proceedings or investigations in the United Kingdom.

Where a witness order has been made or a witness summons issued in criminal proceedings in the United Kingdom in respect of a person in custody in another country<sup>1</sup> or it is desirable that a person in custody in another country should assist in investigations in the United Kingdom<sup>2</sup>, the Secretary of State may<sup>3</sup> issue a warrant authorising: (1) the bringing<sup>4</sup> of the prisoner to the United Kingdom; (2) the taking of the prisoner to, and his detention in custody at, such place or places in the United Kingdom as are specified in the warrant; and (3) the returning of the prisoner to the country or territory from which he has come<sup>5</sup>.

Corresponding provision is made for United Kingdom prisoners required overseas<sup>6</sup>.

1 Either by virtue of a sentence of a court exercising criminal jurisdiction there or having been transferred there under the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 or corresponding provisions in another country: Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 s 6(1)(a), (7). For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

Without prejudice to the generality of any existing power to make rules, provision may be made by rules of court for any purpose for which it appears to the authority having power to make the rules that it is necessary or expedient that provision should be made in connection with any of the provisions of Pt 1 (ss 5, 6, 9): s 10(1).

2 Ibid s 6(1)(b).

3 The Secretary of State must be satisfied that the appropriate authority in that country will make arrangements for the prisoner to come to the United Kingdom: see ibid s 6(2). As to the immigration consequences of bringing the person to the United Kingdom see s 6(5), (6); and BRITISH NATIONALITY, IMMIGRATION AND ASYLUM.

4 The consent of the prisoner is required, but it may not be withdrawn after the issue of the warrant: see ibid s 6(3).

1412. Transfer of United Kingdom prisoner to assist investigation abroad.

The Secretary of State may, pursuant to an agreement with the competent authority of a participating country, issue a warrant providing for any prisoner to whom the following provisions<sup>1</sup> apply<sup>2</sup> to be transferred to that country for the purpose of assisting there in the investigation of an offence<sup>3</sup>. A warrant may be issued in respect of a prisoner only if (1) the prisoner; or (2) in certain circumstances<sup>4</sup>, a person appearing to the Secretary of State to be an appropriate person to act on the prisoner's behalf, has made a written statement consenting to his being transferred<sup>5</sup>. Such consent cannot be withdrawn after the issue of the warrant<sup>6</sup>. A warrant under these provisions authorises (a) the taking of the prisoner to a place in the United Kingdom and his delivery at a place of departure from the United Kingdom into the custody of a person representing the appropriate authority of the participating country to which the prisoner is to be transferred<sup>7</sup>; and (b) the bringing of the prisoner back to the United Kingdom and his transfer in custody to the place where he is liable to be detained under the sentence or order to which he is subject<sup>8</sup>.

A person authorised by or for the purposes of the warrant to take the prisoner to or from any place or to keep him in custody has all the powers, authority, protection and privileges (1) of a constable in the part of the United Kingdom in which that person is for the time being; or (2) if he is outside the United Kingdom, of a constable in the part of the United Kingdom to or from which the prisoner is to be taken under the warrant: s 5(5). If the prisoner escapes or is unlawfully at large, he may be arrested without warrant by a constable and taken to any place to which he may be taken under the warrant: s 5(6). The Secretary of State may, pursuant to an agreement with the competent authority of a participating country, issue a warrant providing for any person to whom the following provisions<sup>1</sup> apply<sup>2</sup> ('the overseas prisoner') to be transferred to the United Kingdom for the purpose of assisting in the investigation of an offence<sup>3</sup>. A warrant may be issued in respect of an overseas prisoner<sup>4</sup> only if the competent authority provides a written statement made by the prisoner consenting to his being transferred<sup>5</sup>. Such consent cannot be withdrawn after the issue of the warrant<sup>6</sup>. A warrant under these provisions authorises: (1) the bringing of the prisoner to the United Kingdom; (2) the taking of the prisoner to, and his detention in custody at, any place or places in the United Kingdom specified in the warrant; (3) the returning of the prisoner to the country from which he has come<sup>7</sup>.

A person is not subject to the Immigration Act 1971 in respect of his entry into or presence in the United Kingdom pursuant to a warrant under the Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 48; but if the warrant ceases to have effect while he is still in the United Kingdom (1) he is to be treated for the purposes of the Immigration Act 1971 as if he has then illegally entered the United Kingdom; and (2) the provisions of Sch 2 have effect accordingly except that Sch 2 para 20(1) (liability of carrier for expenses of custody etc of illegal entrant: see BRITISH NATIONALITY, IMMIGRATION AND ASYLUM) does not have effect in relation to directions for his removal given by virtue of Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 48(8): s 48(8).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(i) Attendance/1414. Evidence through live television link from abroad.

1414. Evidence through live television link from abroad.

A witness (other than a defendant) who is outside the United Kingdom<sup>1</sup> may with leave of the court<sup>2</sup> give evidence through a live television link<sup>3</sup>:

- 2167 (1) at a trial on indictment, appeal to the criminal division of the Court of Appeal or the hearing of a reference by the Criminal Cases Review Commission<sup>4</sup>; or 2168 (2) in proceedings in youth courts, and in appeals or references to the Crown Court arising out of such proceedings<sup>5</sup>.

Such evidence is treated for the purpose of the law relating to perjury as having been made in the proceedings in question<sup>6</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

2 Where the proceedings in question are in the Crown Court, an application for leave to call such evidence must ordinarily be made in writing within 28 days of notice of transfer of the case to the Crown Court of the preferring of a bill of indictment in relation to the case, or within 28 days of the service of copies of the documents containing the evidence on which the charge or charges are based, and must be in the form set out in Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, CA: CrimPR 30.1(1)-(4). The 28-day period may be extended by the Crown Court, either before or after it expires, on an application made in writing, specifying the grounds of the application: CrimPR 30.1(5). Copies of any application must be sent by the applicant to the court officer and to all other parties, who have 28 days in which to give notice of any objection to the application and to indicate whether they wish to be represented at any hearing of the application: CrimPR 30.1(6), (7), (8). Applications may be dealt with in chambers by any judge of the Crown Court. Where leave is granted it may specify as a condition that the witness should give the evidence in the presence of a specified person who is able and willing to answer under oath or affirmation any questions the trial judge may put as to the circumstances in which the evidence is given, including questions about any persons who are present when the evidence is given and any matters which may affect the giving of the evidence: CrimPR 30.1(10). All parties must be notified by the court officer as to: (1) the country in which the witness will give evidence; (2) if known, the place where the witness will give evidence; (3) where the witness is to give evidence on behalf of the prosecutor, or where disclosure is required by the defence (alibi witness or expert evidence), the name of the witness; (4) the location of the Crown Court at which the trial should take place; and (5) any conditions specified by the Crown Court: CrimPR 30.1(9). For the corresponding rules governing evidence given in proceedings in the Court of Appeal see CrimPR 68.19.

3 Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 32(1) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 55(2); Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 67(3), (4), Sch 6, Sch 7 para 3).

4 As to the Criminal Cases Review Commission see PARAS 2028-2032 post.

5 Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 32(1A) (added by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 55(3); amended by the Criminal Appeal Act 1995 s 29, Sch 2 para 16(2)). The Secretary of State may by order provide for s 32(1A) (as added and amended) to be extended to any further description of criminal proceedings, or to all criminal proceedings: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 29(1).

6 Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 32(3). However, evidence may be given from abroad through a television link by virtue of s 32(1)(a) even where no extradition treaty is in force with that foreign place and the witness cannot therefore be extradited to the United Kingdom if he should commit perjury: R v Forsyth [1997] 2 Cr App Rep 299, [1997] Crim LR 581, CA. EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(i) Attendance/1415. Evidence given by live link from within the United Kingdom.

1415. Evidence given by live link from within the United Kingdom.

As from a day to be appointed, the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where in specified criminal proceedings<sup>2</sup> the court is satisfied that it is in the interests of the efficient or effective administration of justice for a witness (other than a defendant) to give evidence in the proceedings through a live link<sup>3</sup> (and has been notified by the Secretary of State that suitable facilities for receiving evidence by such means are available in the area in which it appears to the court that the proceedings will take place<sup>4</sup>) it may on an application by a party to the proceedings<sup>5</sup>, or of its own motion<sup>6</sup> direct that the witness give evidence by means of such a link<sup>7</sup>.

Where the court gives such a direction, the witness concerned may not (unless the order is rescinded<sup>8</sup>) give evidence in those proceedings after the direction is given otherwise than through a live link<sup>9</sup>.

The judge may give the jury (if there is one) such direction as he thinks necessary to ensure that the jury gives the same weight to the evidence as if it had been given by the witness in the courtroom or other place where the proceedings are held<sup>10</sup>.

The provisions described above do not affect any power of the court to make an order, give directions or give leave of any description in relation to any witness (including the defendant) or to exclude evidence at its discretion (whether by preventing questions being put or otherwise)<sup>11</sup>.

1 The Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 51-54, 56 come into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order under s 336. At the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed.

2 These are: (1) a summary trial; (2) an appeal to the Crown Court arising out of such a trial; (3) a trial on indictment; (4) an appeal to the criminal division of the Court of Appeal; (5) the hearing of a reference under the Criminal Appeal Act 1995 s 9 or s 11; (6) a hearing before a magistrates' court or the Crown Court which is held after the defendant has entered a plea of guilty; and (7) a hearing before the Court of Appeal under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 80 (see PARA 1940 post): s 51(2) (not yet in force).

3 Ibid s 51(4)(a) (not yet in force). 'Witness' means a person called, or proposed to be called, to give evidence in proceedings: s 56(1) (not yet in force). A 'live link' means for this purpose a live television link or other arrangement by which a witness, while at a place in the United Kingdom (for the meaning of which see PARA 45 note 2 ante) which is outside the building where the proceedings are being held, is able to see and hear a person at the place where the proceedings are being held and to be seen and heard by the defendant or defendants, the judge or justices (or both) and the jury (if there is one), legal representatives acting in the proceedings, and any interpreter or other person appointed by the court to assist the witness: s 56(2), (3) (not yet in force). The extent (if any) to which a person is unable to see or hear by reason of any impairment of eyesight or hearing is to be disregarded for these purposes: s 56(4) (not yet in force).

4 Ibid s 51(4)(b) (not yet in force). The notification must not have been withdrawn: s 51(4)(c) (not yet in force). The withdrawal of such a notification does not affect a direction given under s 51 (not yet in force) before that withdrawal: s 51(5) (not yet in force). If suitable facilities for receiving such evidence are not available at any place where a magistrates' court would otherwise sit, the court may arrange to sit for the purposes of the whole or any part of the proceedings at any place at which such facilities are available and which has been authorised by a direction under the Courts Act 2003 s 30: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 53(1), (2) (not yet in force). If this place is outside the local justice area in which the justices act it is deemed to be in that area for the purpose of the jurisdiction of the justices acting in that area: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 53(3) (not yet in force).

yet in force) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Provisions) Order 2005, SI 2005/886, art 2, Schedule para 99).

5 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 51(3)(a) (not yet in force).

6 Ibid s 51(3)(b) (not yet in force). The court must state in open court its reasons for refusing an application for a direction and, if it is a magistrates' court, it must cause them to be entered in the register of its proceedings: s 51(8) (not yet in force).

7 Ibid s 51(1) (not yet in force). In deciding whether to give a direction under s 51 the court must consider all the circumstances of the case, including in particular: the availability of the witness, the need for the witness to attend in person, the importance of the witness's evidence to the proceedings, the views of the witness, the suitability of the facilities at the place where the witness would give evidence through a live link, and whether a direction might tend to inhibit any party to the proceedings from effectively testing the witness's evidence: s 51(6), (7) (not yet in force). Rules of court may be made in connection with ss 51, 52 (not yet in force): see s 55 (amended by the Courts Act 2003 (Consequential Amendments) Order 2004, SI 2004/2035, art 3, Schedule paras 45, 47). At the date at which this volume states the law, the CrimPR had made no such provision.

8 The court may rescind a direction under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 51 (not yet in force) if it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to do so: s 52(3) (not yet in force). It may act either on an application by a party to the proceedings (which may be made only where there has been a material change of circumstances since the direction was given) or it may act of its own motion: s 52(5), (6) (not yet in force). Where it rescinds the direction, the witness concerned ceases to be able to give evidence in the proceedings through a live link, but this does not prevent the court from giving a further direction under s 51 (not yet in force) in relation to him: s 52(4) (not yet in force). The court must give reasons for rescinding a direction under s 51 (not yet in force) or for refusing an application to rescind it; and, if it is a magistrates' court, it must cause them to be entered in the register of its proceedings: s 52(7) (not yet in force).

1416. Statutory and non-statutory measures.

Various measures may be adopted to assist, encourage or protect potentially vulnerable witnesses<sup>1</sup>. Some of these measures are available only where and to the extent that legislation so provides<sup>2</sup>, and are therefore not available to defendants, even where, as witnesses, they would otherwise be eligible to benefit from such measures<sup>3</sup>. Other measures may be provided by the courts on their own authority<sup>4</sup>, although in some cases legislation now makes further or more specific provision for their use<sup>5</sup>. Witnesses (such as defendants) who are not eligible to benefit from statutory special measures directions may still be eligible to benefit from any such measures as fall within the scope of the courts' inherent powers to regulate their own proceedings<sup>6</sup>.

1 Such measures include measures taken to protect the identity of a witness who may fear or be at risk of reprisals or other forms of intimidation, measures taken to reduce the stresses of testifying in court, and (particularly in the case of children or handicapped witnesses) measures designed to facilitate communication between the witness and the court. In prosecutions for certain alleged sexual offences, the identity of a complainant is automatically protected: see the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act 1992 s 1 (as amended); and PARA 239 ante. Witness anonymity is not prohibited by the right to a fair trial under the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953) Cmd 8969), art 6 (right to a fair trial), provided that the witness can be examined by or on behalf of the defendant: see R v Davis [2006] EWCA Crim 1155, [2006] All ER (D) 281 (May). The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

2 See in particular the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Pt II Ch 1 (ss 16-33) (as amended); and PARA 1417 et seq post. The Secretary of State may by order make such amendments to the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Pt II Ch 1 as he considers appropriate: see s 18(5).

3 Defendants are not eligible to benefit from special measures directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999: see ss 16(1), 17(1); and PARA 1417 post. This inequality between the parties has been held not to involve any incompatibility with the European Convention on Human Rights: R (on the application of S) v Waltham Forest Youth Court [2004] EWHC 715 (Admin), [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 335; but see also R (on application of D) v Camberwell Green Youth Court [2005] UKHL 4 at [63], [2005] 1 All ER 999 at [63], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 1 at [63] per Baroness Hale.

4 Measures that may be adopted by the courts without necessarily relying on the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 include shielding a witness by means of a screen, allowing a witness to be accompanied by a reassuring member of the court's witness service, providing an interpreter, or excluding members of the public. The list is not exhaustive or the categories closed: R (on the application of S) v Waltham Forest Youth Court [2004] EWHC 715 (Admin), [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 335.

At common law, witnesses may also be granted anonymity, where this is necessary for the fair and proper administration of justice: R v Socialist Worker Printers and Publishers, ex p A-G [1975] QB 637, [1975] 1 All ER 142, DC; A-G v Leveller Magazine [1979] AC 440, [1979] 1 All ER 745, HL. In relation to reporting restrictions see also the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 46; and PARA 1430 post. In the case of eligible witnesses anonymity may be combined with special measures under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999: see eg R v Piggott [2005] EWCA Crim 655, [2005] All ER (D) 46 (Mar) (witnesses to gangland shooting allowed to give evidence anonymously and via live link under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 24). As to live links see PARA 1422 post.

5 Eg the use of screens to shield witnesses from the defendant and the public may now be authorised pursuant to the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 23: see PARA 1421 post.

6 In particular, young, handicapped or vulnerable defendants may benefit from various measures that lie within a court's inherent power to secure a fair trial. In the case of a defendant with learning difficulties, the following possible measures were suggested in R v H [2003] EWCA Crim 1208, (2003) Times, 15 April:

- 96 (1) the defendant's legal representatives may be asked to provide a detailed defence statement which can be read to the jury if there is concern about the defendant's ability to recall everything that he wants to tell the jury;
- 97 (2) if the defendant can recall matters only by reference to an earlier account of events that he has given, the judge may permit that course to be taken; and
- 98 (3) if the defendant cannot read, the judge may permit him to be asked leading questions in relation to the account given in the defence statement.

See also Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.39, CA (trial of children and young persons). This addresses a number of issues concerning the trial of juveniles in adult courts (following V v United Kingdom (1999) 30 EHRR 121, [2000] Crim LR 187, ECtHR). One of the guiding principles adopted is that all possible steps should be taken to assist the young defendant to understand and participate in the proceedings: see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.39.3, CA.

(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999

1417. Witnesses eligible for assistance on grounds of age or incapacity.

A witness<sup>1</sup> in criminal proceedings other than a defendant<sup>2</sup> is eligible for assistance if: (1) under the age of 17 at the time of the hearing<sup>3</sup>; or (2) the court considers that the quality of evidence given by the witness<sup>4</sup> is likely to be diminished by reason of specified circumstances<sup>5</sup>. The specified circumstances are that (a) the witness suffers from mental disorder within the meaning of the Mental Health Act 1983, or otherwise has a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning<sup>6</sup>; or (b) the witness has a physical disability or is suffering from a physical disorder<sup>7</sup>.

The following special measures are available to such witnesses<sup>8</sup>: (i) screening the witness from the defendant<sup>9</sup>; (ii) the giving of evidence by live link<sup>10</sup>; (iii) the giving of evidence in private<sup>11</sup>; (iv) the removal of wigs and gowns<sup>12</sup>; (v) the giving of video recorded evidence in chief<sup>13</sup>; (vi) the video-recording of any cross-examination and re-examination of the witness<sup>14</sup>; (vii) the examination of the witness through an intermediary<sup>15</sup>; and (viii) the provision of aids to communication<sup>16</sup>. Where a special measure would, in accordance with heads (i) to (viii) above, be available to a witness, it must not be taken by a court to be available in relation to the witness unless the court has been notified by the Secretary of State that relevant arrangements<sup>17</sup> may be made available in the area in which it appears to the court that the proceedings will take place and the notice has not been withdrawn<sup>18</sup>.

1 'Witness' means any person called, or proposed to be called, to give evidence in the proceedings: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1).

2 Ie any person charged with an offence to which the proceedings relate, whether or not he has been convicted: ibid s 63(1). Note that the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 uses the term 'accused' in place of 'defendant' (which is the term employed throughout this work for consistency).

3 Ibid ss 16(1)(a), 33(1). 'The time of the hearing' means the time when it falls to the court to make a determination for the purposes of s 19(2) (see PARA 1419 post) in relation to the witness: s 16(3). 'Court' means a magistrates' court, the Crown Court or the criminal division of the Court of Appeal: s 63(1).

4 References to the quality of a witness's evidence are to its quality in terms of completeness, coherence and accuracy: ibid ss 16(5), 33(1). 'Coherence' refers to a witness's ability in giving evidence to give answers which address the questions put to him and can be understood both individually and collectively: s 16(5).

5 Ibid ss 16(1)(b), 33(1). In determining whether a witness falls within s 16(1)(b), the court must consider any views expressed by the witness: s 16(4).

6 Ibid s 16(2)(a). For the meaning of 'mental disorder' see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30(2) (Reissue) PARA 402.

7 Ibid s 16(2)(b).

8 See ibid ss 18(1)(a), 33(2).

9 See ibid s 23; and PARA 1421 post.

10 See ibid s 24; and PARA 1422 post.

11 See ibid s 25; and PARA 1423 post.

12 See ibid s 26; and PARA 1424 post.

13 See ibid s 27; and PARA 1425 post. This must be distinguished from the use of a video recording as admissible hearsay in a case where the witness is no longer alive or no longer competent to testify at all: see R v D [2002] EWCA Crim 990, [2003] QB 90, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 601 (witness suffering from Alzheimer's disease; earlier video recording admitted under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 23).

14 See the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 28 (not yet in force); and PARA 1426 post. For the meaning of 'video recording' see PARA 1420 note 9 post.

15 See ibid s 29; and PARA 1427 post.

16 See ibid s 30; and PARA 1428 post.

17 'Relevant arrangements' means arrangements for implementing the measure in question which cover the witness and the proceedings in question: ibid s 18(3).

18 Ibid s 18(2). The withdrawal of a notice under s 18(2) does not affect the availability of the measure in relation to a witness if a special measures direction providing for that measure to apply to the witness's evidence has been made by the court before the notice is withdrawn: s 18(4).

UPDATE

1417 Witnesses eligible for assistance on grounds of age or incapacity

NOTE 18--The 1999 Act s 18(2) makes provision for 'good administration' by making sure the courts have the requisite information before considering whether to make a direction; it does not enable the Secretary of State to apply or disapply the power of a particular court, or the Crown Court at a particular location, under the substantive law to admit evidence obtained pursuant to a special measure: see R v R (video recording: admissibility) [2008] EWCA Crim 678, [2008] 1 WLR 2044, [2008] All ER (D) 61 (Apr).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20.

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1418. Witnesses eligible for assistance on grounds of fear or distress.

1418. Witnesses eligible for assistance on grounds of fear or distress.

A witness<sup>1</sup> in criminal proceedings other than a defendant<sup>2</sup> is eligible for assistance if the court<sup>3</sup> is satisfied that the quality of evidence given by the witness<sup>4</sup> is likely to be diminished by reason of fear or distress on the part of the witness in connection with the testifying in the proceedings<sup>5</sup>. In determining whether a witness is so eligible, the court must take into account in particular<sup>6</sup>: (1) the nature and alleged circumstances of the offence to which the proceedings relate<sup>7</sup>; (2) the age of the witness<sup>8</sup>; (3) such of the following matters as appear to the court to be relevant, namely, the social and cultural background and ethnic origins of the witness, the domestic and employment circumstances of the witness, and any religious beliefs or political opinions of the witness<sup>9</sup>; and (4) any behaviour towards the witness on the part of the defendant, members of the family or associates of the defendant or any other person who is likely to be a defendant or a witness in the proceedings<sup>10</sup>.

Where the complainant<sup>11</sup> in respect of a sexual offence<sup>12</sup> is a witness in proceedings relating to that offence, or to that offence and any other offences, the witness is eligible for assistance in relation to those proceedings unless he has informed the court of his wish not to be so eligible<sup>13</sup>.

The following special measures are available to such witnesses<sup>14</sup>: (a) screening the witness from the defendant<sup>15</sup>; (b) the giving of evidence by live link<sup>16</sup>; (c) the giving of evidence in private<sup>17</sup>; (d) the removal of wigs and gowns<sup>18</sup>; (e) the giving of video evidence recorded in chief<sup>19</sup>; and (f) the cross-examination and re-examination of the witness adduced by video recording<sup>20</sup>. Where, however, a special measure would, in accordance, with heads (a) to (f) above be available to a witness, it must not be taken by a court to be available in relation to the witness unless the court has been notified by the Secretary of State that relevant arrangements<sup>21</sup> may be made available in the area in which it appears to the court that the proceedings will take place and the notice has not been withdrawn<sup>22</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

2 As to non-statutory measures that may be available to defendants see PARA 1416 ante.

3 For the meaning of 'court' see PARA 1417 note 3 ante.

4 As to the quality of a witness's evidence see PARA 1417 note 4 ante.

5 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 17(1). The exclusion of the defendant from the power to make a special measures direction is not incompatible with the right to a fair trial: R (on the application of S) v Waltham Forest Youth Court [2004] EWHC 715 (Admin), [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 335, DC; but see also R (on application of D) v Camberwell Green Youth Court [2005] UKHL 4 at [63], [2005] 1 All ER 999 at [63], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 1 at [63] per Baroness Hale.

6 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 17(2). In determining the question, the court must in addition consider any views expressed by the witness: s 17(3).

7 Ibid s 17(2)(a).

8 Ibid s 17(2)(b).

9 Ibid s 17(2)(c).

10 Ibid s 17(2)(d).

11 'Complainant' means a person against or in relation to whom the offence was, or is alleged to have been, committed: ibid s 63(1). On a literal construction of s 63(1), a 'complainant' may in some cases be a co-defendant who denies that any such offence has been committed (eg where D1 is charged with an offence of penetrative sex with an adult relative (D2), contrary to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 64, and D2 is charged with consenting to such penetration by D1 (contrary to s 65), D1 and D2 are each (in respect of the other) 'persons in relation to whom the offence was committed'). In contrast, the victim or alleged victim of some other offence committed or allegedly committed by the defendant, which is referred to in evidence, but not charged in the instant proceedings, is not a 'complainant' within the meaning of this section: R v M [2006] All ER (D) 164 (May), CA.

12 'Sexual offence' means any offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1 (ss 1-79) (as amended): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 62(1) (substituted by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 139, Sch 6 para 41(3)). Any reference in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 Pt II to an offence of any description ('the substantive offence') is to be taken to include a reference to an offence which consists of attempting or conspiring to commit, or of aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or inciting the commission of, the substantive offence: s 62(2). As originally enacted, s 62(1) listed only rape, burglary with intent to rape (under the Theft Act 1968 s 9), offences under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 ss 2-12, 14-17 (now repealed), offences under the Mental Health Act 1959 s 128 (now repealed), offences under the Indecency with Children Act 1960 s 1 (now repealed) and offences under the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 54 (now repealed), together with inchoate versions of any of those offences or secondary participation. It is submitted that this original list still governs cases where a defendant is charged with a sexual offence allegedly committed before 1 May 2004, when the provisions of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 came into force.

14 See ibid s 18(1)(b).

15 See ibid s 23; and PARA 1421 post.

16 See ibid s 24; and PARA 1422 post.

17 See ibid s 25; and PARA 1423 post.

18 See ibid s 26; and PARA 1424 post.

19 See ibid s 27; and PARA 1425 post.

20 See ibid s 28 (not yet in force); and PARA 1426 post.

21 For the meaning of 'relevant arrangements' see PARA 1417 note 17 ante.

1419. Special measures directions.

Where in any criminal proceedings a party makes an application for the court<sup>1</sup> to give a special measures direction in relation to a witness<sup>2</sup> other than the defendant<sup>3</sup>, or the court of its own motion raises the issue whether such a direction should be given<sup>4</sup>, then, where the court determines that the witness is eligible for assistance<sup>5</sup>, it must determine whether any of the special measures available in relation to the witness, or any combination of them, would in its opinion be likely to improve the quality of evidence given by him<sup>6</sup>, and if so it must (1) determine which of those measures, or combination of them, would in its opinion, be likely to maximise so far as practicable the quality of such evidence<sup>7</sup>; and (2) give a direction providing for the measure or measures to apply to evidence given by the witness<sup>8</sup>. In determining whether any special measure or measures would or would not be likely to improve, or to maximise so far as practicable, the quality of evidence given by the witness, the court must consider all the circumstances of the case, including in particular<sup>9</sup> any views expressed by the witness<sup>10</sup> and whether the measure or measures might tend to inhibit such evidence being effectively tested by a party to the proceedings<sup>11</sup>. A special measures direction must specify particulars of the provision made by the direction in respect of each special measure which is to apply to the witness's evidence<sup>12</sup>.

Nothing in these provisions<sup>13</sup> is to be regarded as affecting any power of a court to make an order or give leave of any description, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction or otherwise<sup>14</sup> (a) in relation to a witness who is not an eligible witness<sup>15</sup>; or (b) in relation to an eligible witness where (as, for example, in a case where a foreign language interpreter is to be provided) the order is made or the leave is given otherwise than by reason of the fact that the witness is an eligible witness<sup>16</sup>.

A special measures direction has binding effect from the time it is made until the proceedings are either determined<sup>17</sup> or abandoned<sup>18</sup> in relation to the defendant or, if there is more than one, in relation to each defendant<sup>19</sup>. The court may discharge, vary or further vary a special measures direction if it appears to it to be in the interests of justice to do so<sup>20</sup>, and may do so either on an application made by a party to the proceedings, if there has been a material change of circumstances since the relevant time<sup>21</sup>, or of its own motion<sup>22</sup>. The court must state in open court its reasons for: (i) giving or varying a direction<sup>23</sup>; (ii) refusing an application for, or for the variation or discharge of a direction<sup>24</sup>; or (iii) discharging a special measures direction<sup>25</sup>. If it is a magistrates' court, the court must cause the reasons to be entered in the register of its proceedings<sup>26</sup>.

Criminal Procedure Rules make provision for: (A) uncontested applications to be determined by the court without a hearing; (B) preventing the renewal of an unsuccessful application for a direction except where there has been a material change of circumstances; (C) for expert evidence to be given in connection with an application for, or for varying or discharging, such a direction; and (D) for the manner in which confidential or sensitive information is to be treated in connection with such an application and in particular as to its being disclosed to, or withheld from, a party<sup>27</sup>.

Where in the course of a trial on indictment with a jury evidence is given in accordance with a special measures direction, the judge must give the jury such warning, if any, as he considers necessary to ensure that the fact that the direction was given in relation to the witness does not prejudice the defendant<sup>28</sup>.

Some forms of special measure (eg the use of screens or live links) may necessarily require such a warning whereas others may not. As to the form that such a warning might take, see Judicial Studies Board, Specimen Direction No 22a; and see also R v Piggott [2005] EWCA Crim 655, [2005] All ER (D) 46 (Mar). The warning should be given immediately before the witness testifies with the benefit of the special measure, because it is more likely to impress itself on the jury if it is given then. In contrast, it is not important whether the warning is repeated in the summing-up: R v Brown [2004] EWCA Crim 1620, [2004] All ER (D) 98 (Jun).

NOTE 27--CrimPR Pt 29 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60 ('CrimPR'), Pt 29. The form for use with CrimPR 29.3 is set out in Amendment No 24 to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (criminal proceedings: witness anonymity orders (2); forms) [2010] All ER (D) 276 (Mar).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1420. Child witnesses.

1420. Child witnesses.

Where the court determines<sup>1</sup> that a witness is eligible for assistance by virtue of being a child<sup>2</sup>, it must have regard to certain provisions<sup>3</sup> before determining whether any special measures direction (or combination of them) is required<sup>4</sup>. These provisions limit the court's discretion by specifying that certain special measures must ordinarily be adopted in cases involving child witnesses, and by making certain measures mandatory in the case of a child witness who is deemed 'in need of special protection', whether or not the court would otherwise have determined upon those measures. Any special measures required by these provisions<sup>5</sup> must be treated as if they were measures determined by the court<sup>6</sup> to be ones that (whether on their own or with any other special measures) would be likely to maximise so far as practicable, the quality of the child's evidence<sup>7</sup>.

The issues which must be considered by the court are as follows. The primary rule in the case of a child witness is that the court must give a special measures direction in relation to that witness which complies with the following requirements<sup>8</sup>: (1) it must provide for any 'relevant recording'<sup>9</sup> to be admitted<sup>10</sup>; and (2) it must provide for any evidence given by the witness which is not given by means of a video recording, whether in chief or otherwise, to be given by means of a live link<sup>11</sup>.

The primary rule is subject to the following limitations: (a) the requirement relating to relevant recordings or relating to evidence which is not given by video recording has effect subject to the availability<sup>12</sup> of the special measure in question in relation to the witness<sup>13</sup>; (b) the requirement relating to relevant recordings also has effect subject to the provision regarding the interests of justice<sup>14</sup>; and (c) save where the witness is a child in need of special protection, the rule does not apply to the extent that the court is satisfied that compliance with it would not be likely to maximise the quality of the witness's evidence so far as practicable, whether because the application to that evidence of one or more other special measures available in relation to the witness would have that result or for any other reason<sup>15</sup>.

A child witness is deemed 'in need of special protection' where he testifies (whether for the prosecution or for the defence) in proceedings involving one or more specified sexual offences<sup>16</sup> or proceedings involving offences of kidnapping, false imprisonment, child abduction, assault, threats of violence or child cruelty<sup>17</sup>. In such proceedings the court must apply the primary rule even if satisfied that compliance with it would not be likely to maximise the quality of the witness's evidence<sup>18</sup>.

Where the proceedings relate to one or more of the specified sexual offences, any special measures direction given by the court as to the use of video-recorded evidence must provide for cross-examination of the witness and any subsequent re-examination to be recorded by means of a video-recording<sup>19</sup>, in addition to the recording of the child's evidence in chief<sup>20</sup>. However, the provision concerning video-recorded cross-examination and re-examination has not been brought into force and, if it is brought into force, it will have effect subject to the availability of that special measure in relation to the witness<sup>21</sup> and it will not apply if the witness has informed the court that he does not want that special measure to apply in relation to him<sup>22</sup>.

2 A witness is a child witness if he is an eligible witness by reason of ibid s 16(1)(a) (ie he is aged under 17 at the time of the hearing) whether or not he is an eligible witness by reason of any other provision of s 16 or s 17 (see PARAS 1417-1418 ante); s 21(1)(a). For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

Where a special measures direction is given in relation to a child witness who is an eligible witness by reason only of the fact that he is under the age of 17 at the time of the hearing, and, except where he has already begun to give evidence in proceedings, the direction ceases to have effect at the time when the witness attains that age: see s 21(8), (9). The provisions of s 21 are extended to qualifying witnesses over the age of 17 in certain circumstances: see s 22.

8 Ibid s 21(3).

9 A 'relevant recording' in relation to a child witness is a video recording of an interview of the witness made with a view to its admission as evidence in chief of the witness: ibid s 21(1)(c). 'Video recording' means any recording, on any medium, from which a moving image may by any means be produced, and includes the accompanying sound-track: s 63(1).

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1421. Screening the witness from the defendant.

1421. Screening the witness from the defendant.

A special measures direction may provide for the witness<sup>1</sup>, while giving testimony or being sworn in court<sup>2</sup>, to be prevented by means of a screen or other arrangement from seeing the defendant<sup>3</sup>. The screen or other arrangement must not prevent the witness from being able to see<sup>4</sup>, and to be seen by, the judge or justices (or both) and the jury (if there is one)<sup>5</sup>, legal representatives<sup>6</sup> acting in the proceedings<sup>7</sup>, and any interpreter or other person appointed (in pursuance of the direction or otherwise) to assist the witness<sup>8</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

2 For the meaning of 'court' see PARA 1417 note 3 ante.

3 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 23(1). Justices do not give the impression of having pre-judged a defendant by ordering a screen to be brought into the court before deciding whether it is required: KL v DPP, LK v DPP [2001] EWHC 1112 (Admin), 166 JP 369.

4 References to a person being able to see or hear, or be seen or heard by, another person are to be read as not applying to the extent that either of them is unable to see or hear by reason of any impairment of eyesight or hearing: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 33(3).

5 Ibid s 23(2)(a).

6 'Legal representative' means any authorised advocate or authorised litigator, as defined by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 119(1) (see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 65 (2008) PARA 498): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1).

7 Ibid s 23(2)(b). Where two or more legal representatives are acting for a party to the proceedings, s 23(2)(b) is to be regarded as satisfied if the witness is able at all material times to see and be seen by at least one of them: s 23(3).

8 Ibid s 23(3)(c). The fact that one witness is happy to testify without the protection of a screen does not mean that other witnesses do not require such protection: R v Brown [2004] EWCA Crim 1620, [2004] All ER (D) 98 (Jun).

1421 Screening the witness from the defendant

NOTE 6--'Legal representative' now means a person who, for the purposes of the Legal Services Act 2007, is an authorised person in relation to an activity which constitutes the exercise of a right of audience or the conduct of litigation (within the meaning of that Act) (see LEGAL PROFESSIONS vol 65 (2008) para 512): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1) (definition amended by Legal Services Act 2007 Sch 21 para 132).

1422. Evidence by live link.

A special measures direction may provide for an eligible witness<sup>1</sup> to give evidence by means of a live link<sup>2</sup>. Where a direction provides for the witness to give evidence by such means, he may not give evidence in any other way without the permission of the court<sup>3</sup>. The court may give such permission if it appears to it to be in the interests of justice to do so, and may do so either<sup>4</sup>: (1) on an application by a party to the proceedings, if there has been a material change of circumstances since the relevant time<sup>5</sup>; or (2) of its own motion<sup>6</sup>.

A vulnerable, intimidated or child witness giving evidence by means of a live link may be accompanied by a 'witness supporter'<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to eligible witnesses see PARA 1417 ante. For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

2 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 24(1). 'Live link' means a live television link or other arrangement whereby a witness, while absent from the courtroom or other place where the proceedings are being held, is able to see and hear a person there and to be seen and to be seen and heard by the judge or justices (or both) and the jury (if there is one), legal representatives acting in the proceedings, and any interpreter or other person appointed (in pursuance of the direction or otherwise) to assist the witness: ss 24(8), 33(1). See also s 23(2); and PARA 1421 ante. Note that in some cases involving child witnesses the use of a live link is effectively mandatory as far as cross-examination and re-examination is concerned.

3 Ibid s 24(2).

5 Ibid s 24(3)(a). 'The relevant time' means the time when the direction was given, or if a previous application has been made under s 24(3), the time when the application (or last application) was made: s 24(4).

6 Ibid s 24(3)(b). This contemplates a time after the live link direction has been made. Usually it will be at the trial, eg where the machinery is not working properly or where the child is sliding down so as to be invisible to the camera. Another possibility might be where the child was positively anxious to give evidence in the courtroom and the court considered that it would be contrary to the interests of justice to require her to use the live link: R (on application of D) v Camberwell Green Youth Court [2005] UKHL 4 at [35], [2005] 1 All ER 999 at [35], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 1 at [35] per Baroness Hale.

7 The witness supporter should be completely independent of the witness and his or her family and have no previous knowledge of or personal involvement in the case. The supporter should also be suitably trained so as to understand the obligations of, and comply with, the National Standards relating to witness supporters. Providing these criteria are met, the witness supporter need not be an usher or court official. Thus, the functions of the witness supporter may be performed by a representative of the Witness Service: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.29.2, CA.

Where the witness supporter is someone other than the court usher, the usher should continue to be available both to assist the witness and the witness supporter, and to ensure that the judge's requirements are properly complied with in the CCTV room: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at III.29.3, CA.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1422A. Use of live link for evidence of certain accused persons.

1422A. Use of live link for evidence of certain accused persons.

The court may, on the application of the accused, give a live link direction if it is satisfied that certain conditions<sup>1</sup> are met in relation to the accused, and that it is in the interests of justice for the accused to give evidence through a live link<sup>2</sup>. A live link direction is a direction that any oral evidence to be given before the court by the accused is to be given through a live link<sup>3</sup>. Where the accused is aged under 18 when the application is made, the conditions are that (1) his ability to participate effectively in the proceedings as a witness giving oral evidence in court is compromised by his level of intellectual ability or social functioning; and (2) use of a live link would enable him to participate more effectively in the proceedings as a witness, whether by improving the quality of his evidence or otherwise<sup>4</sup>. Where the accused has attained the age of 18 at that time, the conditions are that (a) he suffers from a mental disorder<sup>5</sup> or otherwise has a significant impairment of intelligence and social function; (b) he is for that reason unable to participate effectively in the proceedings as a witness giving oral evidence in court; and (c) use of a live link would enable him to participate more effectively in the proceedings as a witness, whether by improving the quality of his evidence or otherwise<sup>6</sup>. While a live link direction has effect the accused may not give oral evidence before the court in the proceedings otherwise than through a live link<sup>7</sup>. The court may discharge a live link direction at any time before or during any hearing to which it applies if it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to do so, but this does not affect the power to give a further live link direction in relation to the accused<sup>8</sup>. The court must state in open court its reasons for giving or discharging a live link direction, or refusing an application for or for the discharge of a live link direction, and, if it is a magistrates' court, it must cause those reasons to be entered in the register of its proceedings<sup>9</sup>. In these provisions 'live link' means an arrangement by which the accused, while absent from the place where the proceedings are being held, is able to see and hear a person there, and to be seen and heard by (i) the judge or justices, or both, and the jury, if there is one; (ii) where there are two or more accused in the proceedings, each of the other accused; (iii) legal representatives acting in the proceedings; and (iv) any interpreter or other person appointed by the court to assist the accused<sup>10</sup>. Nothing in these provisions affects any power of a court to make an order, give directions or give leave of any description in relation to any witness, including an accused, or the operation of any rule of law relating to evidence in criminal proceedings<sup>11</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1423. Evidence given in private.

1423. Evidence given in private.

A special measures direction may provide for the exclusion from the court<sup>1</sup>, during the giving of the witness's<sup>2</sup> evidence, of persons of any description specified in the direction<sup>3</sup>. The persons who may be so excluded do not include the defendant<sup>4</sup>, legal representatives<sup>5</sup> acting in the proceedings<sup>6</sup>, or any interpreter or other person appointed (in pursuance of the direction or otherwise) to assist the witness<sup>7</sup>. A direction providing for representatives of news gathering or reporting organisations to be excluded must be expressed not to apply to one named person who is a representative of such an organisation and who has been nominated for the purpose by one or more such organisations, unless it appears to the court that no such nomination has been made<sup>8</sup>. A direction may only provide for the exclusion of persons where the proceedings relate to a sexual offence<sup>9</sup> or it appears to the court that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person other than the defendant has sought, or will seek, to intimidate the witness in connection with testifying in the proceedings<sup>10</sup>. Any proceedings from which persons are excluded, whether or not those persons include representatives of news gathering or reporting organisations, must nevertheless be taken to be held in public for the purposes of any privilege or exemption from liability available in respect of fair, accurate and contemporaneous reports of legal proceedings held in public<sup>11</sup>.

1425. Video recorded evidence in chief.

A special measures direction may provide for a video recording<sup>1</sup> of an interview of the witness<sup>2</sup> to be admitted as evidence in chief of the witness<sup>3</sup>. However, a direction may not provide for a video recording, or part of such a recording, to be admitted if the court<sup>4</sup> is of the opinion, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, that in the interests of justice the recording, or that part of it, should not be so admitted<sup>5</sup>. In considering whether any part of a recording should not be admitted, the court must consider whether any prejudice to the defendant<sup>6</sup> which might result from that part being so admitted is outweighed by the desirability of showing the whole, or substantially the whole, of the recorded interview<sup>7</sup>.

Where a direction provides for a recording to be admitted, the court may nevertheless subsequently direct that it is not to be so admitted if<sup>8</sup>: (1) it appears to the court that the witness will not be available for cross-examination, whether conducted in the ordinary way or in accordance with any such direction<sup>9</sup>, and the parties to the proceedings have not agreed that there is no need for the witness to be so available<sup>10</sup>; or (2) any Criminal Procedure Rules requiring disclosure of the circumstances in which the recording was made have not been complied with to the satisfaction of the court<sup>11</sup>.

Where a recording is admitted<sup>12</sup>: (a) the witness must be called by the party tendering it in evidence, unless a special measures direction provides for the witness's evidence on cross-examination to be given otherwise than by testimony in court<sup>13</sup> or the parties to the proceedings have agreed that there is no need for the witness to be available for cross-examination<sup>14</sup>; and (b) the witness may not give evidence in chief otherwise than by means of the recording<sup>15</sup> as to any matter which, in the opinion of the court, has been dealt with adequately in the witness's recorded testimony<sup>16</sup>, or, without permission of the court<sup>17</sup>, as to any other matter which, in the opinion of the court, is dealt with in that testimony<sup>18</sup>.

Nothing in the above provisions affects the admissibility of any video recording which would be admissible apart from those provisions<sup>19</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'video recording' see PARA 1420 note 9 ante. The procedure for making application for leave to adduce a video recording of testimony from a witness under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 27 (as amended) is laid down in CrimPR 29.7 (which reproduces the Crown Court (Special Measures Directions and Directions Prohibiting Cross-Examination) Rules 2002, SI 2002/1688).

2 For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

3 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 27(1).

4 For the meaning of 'court' see PARA 1417 note 3 ante.

5 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 27(2). Where the court directs that some part of the recording be excluded, the party who made application to admit the video recording must edit the recording in accordance with the judge's directions and send a copy of the edited recording to the appropriate officer of the Crown Court and to every other party to the proceedings: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.40.2, CA.

Where a video recording is to be adduced during proceedings before the Crown Court, it should be produced and proved by the interviewer, or any other person who was present at the interview with the witness at which the recording was made. The applicant should ensure that such a person will be available for this purpose, unless the parties have agreed to accept a written statement in lieu of attendance by that person: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.40.3, CA.

Once a trial has begun if, by reason of faulty or inadequate preparation or for some other cause, the procedures set out above have not been properly complied with and an application is made to edit the video recording, thereby making necessary an adjournment for the work to be carried out, the court may make at its discretion an appropriate award of costs: Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533 at IV.40.4, CA.

6     le any person charged with an offence to which the proceedings relate, whether or not he has been convicted: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1).

7     Ibid s 27(3). See R v K [2006] EWCA Crim 472, (2006) Times, 10 April (the test for admissibility of video-recorded evidence was whether a reasonable jury properly directed could be sure that the witness had given a credible and accurate account on the videotape, notwithstanding any breaches of the guidelines).

8     Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 27(4). Where a direction provides for part only of a recording to be admitted, references in s 27(4), (5) to the recording or to the witness's recorded testimony are references to the part of the recording or testimony which is to be so admitted: s 27(6).

1426. Video recorded cross-examination or re-examination.

As from a day to be appointed the following provisions have effect<sup>1</sup>. Where a special measures direction provides for a video recording<sup>2</sup> to be admitted as evidence in chief of the witness<sup>3</sup>, the direction may also provide for: (1) any cross-examination of the witness, and any re-examination, to be recorded by means of a video recording<sup>4</sup>; and (2) such a recording to be admitted, so far as it relates to any such cross-examination or re-examination, as evidence of the witness under cross-examination or on re-examination<sup>5</sup>. Such a recording must be made in the presence of such persons as the Criminal Procedure Rules or the direction may provide and in the absence of the defendant<sup>6</sup>, but in circumstances in which<sup>7</sup>: (a) the judge or justices, or both, and legal representatives<sup>8</sup> acting in the proceedings are able to see and hear the examination of the witness and to communicate with the persons in whose presence the recording is being made<sup>9</sup>; and (b) the defendant is able to see and hear any such examination and to communicate with any legal representative acting for him<sup>10</sup>. Where a direction provides for a recording to be admitted, the court<sup>11</sup> may nevertheless subsequently direct that it is not to be so admitted if any of the specified circumstances<sup>12</sup> or the Criminal Procedure Rules or the direction has not been complied with to the satisfaction of the court<sup>13</sup>.

Where a recording has been made of any examination of the witness<sup>14</sup>, the witness may not be subsequently cross-examined or re-examined in respect of any evidence given by him in the proceedings (whether in any recording admissible<sup>15</sup> or otherwise than in such a recording) unless the court gives a further special measures direction making such provision as is mentioned above<sup>16</sup> in relation to any subsequent cross-examination, and re-examination, of the witness<sup>17</sup>. The court may only give such a further direction if it appears to the court<sup>18</sup> that: (i) the proposed cross-examination is sought by a party as a result of that party having become aware, since the time when the original recording was made, of a matter which that party could not with reasonable diligence have ascertained by then<sup>19</sup>; or (ii) for any other reason it is in the interests of justice to give the further direction<sup>20</sup>.

Nothing in the above provisions is to be read as applying in relation to any cross-examination of the witness by the defendant in person in a case where the defendant is able to conduct any such cross-examination<sup>21</sup>.

1427. Examination of witness through intermediary.

A special measures direction may provide for any examination of the witness<sup>1</sup>, however and wherever conducted, to be conducted through an interpreter or other person approved by the court ('an intermediary')<sup>2</sup>. The function of an intermediary is to communicate to the witness questions put to the witness, and, to any person asking such questions, the answers given by the witness in reply to them, and to explain such questions or answers so far as necessary to enable them to be understood by the witness or person in question<sup>3</sup>. Any examination of the witness must take place in the presence of such persons as the Criminal Procedure Rules or the directions may provide, but in circumstances in which<sup>4</sup> (1) the judge or justices, or both, and legal representatives<sup>5</sup> acting in the proceedings are able to see and hear the examination of the witness and to communicate with the intermediary<sup>6</sup>; and (2) except in the case of a video recorded examination, the jury (if there is one) is able to see and hear the examination of the witness<sup>7</sup>.

A person may not act as an intermediary in a particular case except after making a declaration, in such form as may be prescribed by the Criminal Procedure Rules, that he will faithfully perform his function as intermediary<sup>8</sup>. The statutory provision relating to perjury<sup>9</sup> applies in relation to a person acting as an intermediary as it applies in relation to a person lawfully sworn as an interpreter in a judicial proceeding<sup>10</sup>. Where a person acts as an intermediary in any proceeding which is not a judicial proceeding<sup>11</sup>, that proceeding is to be taken to be part of the judicial proceeding in which the witness's evidence is given<sup>12</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

2 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 29(1). This provision does not apply to an interview of the witness recorded by means of a video recording with a view to its admission as evidence in chief of the witness, but a special measures direction may provide for such a recording to be admitted under s 27 (see PARA 1425 ante) if the interview was conducted through an intermediary and that person complied with s 29(5) (see the text and note 8 infra) before the interview began, and the court's approval is given before the direction is given: s 29(6).

1428. Aids to communication.

A special measures direction may provide for the witness<sup>1</sup>, while giving evidence (whether by testimony in court<sup>2</sup> or otherwise) to be provided with such device as the court considers appropriate with a view to enabling questions or answers to be communicated to or by the witness despite any disability or disorder or other impairment which the witness has or suffers from<sup>3</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1429. Status of evidence given in accordance with special measures direction.

1429. Status of evidence given in accordance with special measures direction.

The following provisions apply to a statement<sup>1</sup> made by a witness<sup>2</sup> in criminal proceedings which, in accordance with a special measures direction, is not made by the witness in direct oral testimony in court but forms part of the witness's evidence in those proceedings<sup>3</sup>. The statement must be treated as if made by the witness in direct oral testimony in court<sup>4</sup>, and, accordingly: (1) it is admissible evidence of any fact of which such testimony from the witness would be admissible<sup>5</sup>; and (2) it is not capable of corroborating any other evidence given by the witness<sup>6</sup>.

In estimating the weight to be attached to the statement, the court must have regard to all the circumstances from which an inference can reasonably be drawn (as to the accuracy of the statement or otherwise)<sup>7</sup>. Nothing in the provisions relating to special measures directions<sup>8</sup> affects the operation of any rule of law relating to evidence in criminal proceedings<sup>9</sup>.

Where any statement made by a person on oath in any proceedings which is not a judicial proceeding for the purposes of the statutory provision relating to perjury<sup>10</sup> is received in evidence in pursuance of a special measures direction, that proceeding is to be taken for the purposes of that provision to be part of the judicial proceeding in which the statement is so received in evidence<sup>11</sup>. Where in any proceeding which is not a judicial proceeding for the purposes of the Perjury Act 1911, a person wilfully makes a false statement otherwise than on oath which is subsequently received in evidence in pursuance of a special measures direction, and the statement is made in such circumstances that had it been given on oath in any such judicial proceeding that person would have been guilty of perjury, he is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months<sup>12</sup> or a fine not exceeding £1,000 or both<sup>13</sup>.

1 'Statement' includes any representation of fact, whether made in words or otherwise: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 31(8).

This applies to a statement admitted under s 27 (see PARA 1425 ante) or s 28 (not yet in force) (see PARA 1426 ante) which is not made by the witness on oath even though it would have been required to be made on oath if made by the witness in direct oral testimony in court: s 31(3).

EVIDENCE/(7) CALLING WITNESSES/(iii) Special Measures Directions under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999/1430. Reporting restrictions relating to adult witnesses.

1430. Reporting restrictions relating to adult witnesses.

Where, in criminal proceedings in any court, other than a service court<sup>1</sup>, or in any proceedings, whether in the United Kingdom<sup>2</sup> or elsewhere, in any service court, a party to the proceedings makes an application for the court to give a reporting direction in relation to a witness<sup>3</sup> in the proceedings, other than a defendant, who has attained the age of 18, a court may give a reporting direction<sup>4</sup> in relation to the witness<sup>5</sup>. However, the court may give a reporting direction only if it determines that the witness is eligible for protection and that giving a reporting direction in relation to the witness is likely to improve the quality of evidence given by the witness, or the level of co-operation given by the witness to any party to the proceedings in connection with that party's preparation of its case<sup>6</sup>.

A witness is eligible for protection if the court is satisfied that the quality of evidence<sup>7</sup> given by the witness, or the level of co-operation given by the witness to any party to the proceedings in connection with that party's preparation of its case, is likely to be diminished by reason of fear or distress on the part of the witness in connection with being identified by members of the public as a witness in the proceedings<sup>8</sup>. In determining whether a witness is eligible for protection the court must take into account, in particular: (1) the nature and alleged circumstances of the offence to which the proceedings relate<sup>9</sup>; (2) the age of the witness<sup>10</sup>; (3) such of the social and cultural background and ethnic origins of the witness<sup>11</sup>, the domestic and employment circumstances of the witness<sup>12</sup>, and any religious beliefs or political opinions of the witness, as appear to the court to be relevant matters<sup>13</sup>; and (4) any behaviour towards the witness on the part of the defendant, members of the family or associates of the defendant, or any other person who is likely to be a defendant or a witness in the proceedings<sup>14</sup>. In making such a determination the court must in addition consider any views expressed by the witness<sup>15</sup>.

In determining whether to give a reporting direction the court must consider whether it would be in the interests of justice to do so, and the public interest<sup>16</sup> in avoiding the imposition of a substantial and unreasonable restriction on the reporting of the proceedings<sup>17</sup>.

The court or an appellate court<sup>18</sup> may by an excepting direction dispense, to any extent specified in that direction, with the restrictions imposed by a reporting direction if it is satisfied (a) that it is necessary in the interests of justice to do so<sup>19</sup>; or (b) that the effect of those restrictions is to impose a substantial and unreasonable restriction on the reporting of the proceedings<sup>20</sup>, and that it is in the public interest to remove or relax that restriction<sup>21</sup>.

A reporting direction may be revoked by the court or an appellate court<sup>22</sup>. An excepting direction may be given at the time the reporting direction is given or subsequently<sup>23</sup>, and may be varied or revoked by the court or an appellate court<sup>24</sup>.

1 'Service court' means a court-martial, the Courts-Martial Appeal Court, or a Standing Civilian Court: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 63(1). For the meaning of 'court' see PARA 1417 note 3 ante.

2 For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

3 For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante.

4 A reporting direction in relation to a witness is a direction that no matter relating to the witness may be included in any publication during the witness's lifetime if it is likely to lead members of the public to identify him as being a witness in the proceedings: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 46(6). 'Publication' includes any speech, writing, relevant programme or other communication in whatever form, which is addressed to the public at large or any section of the public (and for this purpose every relevant programme is taken to be so addressed), but does not include an indictment or other document prepared for use in particular legal proceedings: s 63(1). Matters relating to a witness in relation to which the restrictions imposed by a reporting direction apply, if their inclusion in any publication is likely to have such a result, include in particular the witness's name, the witness's address, the identity of any educational establishment attended by the witness, the identity of any place of work, and any still or moving picture of the witness: s 46(7). 'Picture' includes a likeness however produced: s 63(1).

5 Ibid s 46(1), (2).

6 Ibid s 46(2). References to the preparation of the case of a party to any proceedings include, where the party is the prosecution, the carrying out of investigations into any offence at any time charged in the proceedings: s 46(12)(c).

7 Ie the quality of the evidence in terms of completeness, coherence and accuracy: ibid s 46(12)(b). 'Coherence' refers to a witness's ability in giving evidence to give answers which address the questions put to the witness and which can be understood both individually and collectively: s 46(12)(b).

8 Ibid s 46(3).

9 Ibid s 46(4)(a).

10 Ibid s 46(4)(b).

11 Ibid s 46(4)(c)(i).

12 Ibid s 46(4)(c)(ii).

13 Ibid s 46(4)(c)(iii).

14 Ibid s 46(4)(d).

15 Ibid s 46(5).

16 Where for the purposes of any provision in ibid Pt II Ch IV (ss 44-52) it falls to a court to determine whether anything is or, as the case may be, was in the public interest, the court must have regard, in particular and so far as relevant, to: (1) the interest in the open reporting of crime, the open reporting of matters relating to human health or safety, and the prevention and exposure of miscarriages of justice; (2) the welfare of any person in relation to whom the relevant restrictions imposed by or under Pt II Ch IV apply, applied or would apply, as the case may be; and (3) any views expressed by an appropriate person on behalf of a person within head (2) supra who is under the age of 16 ('the protected person'), or by a person within head (2) supra who has attained that age: s 52(1), (2). 'An appropriate person', in relation to the protected person, has the same meaning as it has for the purposes of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 50 (see CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARA 1275; MAGISTRATES vol 29(2) (Reissue) PARA 755): s 52(3).

17 Ibid s 46(8).

18 'Appellate court', in relation to any proceedings in a court, means a court dealing with an appeal, including an appeal by way of case stated, arising out of the proceedings or with any further appeal: ibid s 46(12)(a).

19 Ibid s 46(9)(a).

20 Ibid s 46(9)(b)(i).

21 Ibid s 46(9)(b)(ii). However, no excepting direction may be given under s 46(9)(b) by reason only of the fact that the proceedings have been determined in any way or have been abandoned: s 46(9).

22 Ibid s 46(10).

23 Ibid s 46(11)(a).

24 Ibid s 46(11)(b).

Where the Secretary of State receives a request<sup>1</sup> from an external authority<sup>2</sup>, for a person in the United Kingdom<sup>3</sup> to give evidence through a live television link in criminal proceedings<sup>4</sup> before a court in a country outside the United Kingdom<sup>5</sup>, he must unless he considers it inappropriate to do so, nominate by notice in writing a court in the United Kingdom where the witness may be heard in the proceedings in question through a live television link<sup>6</sup>. Anything done by the witness in the presence of the nominated court which, if it were done in proceedings before the court, would constitute contempt of court is to be treated for that purpose as done in proceedings before the court<sup>7</sup>.

Evidence given pursuant to the above provisions is not to be treated for any purpose as evidence given in proceedings in the United Kingdom<sup>8</sup>.

1    Ie a request under the Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 30.

2    An external authority is the authority in that country which appears to the Secretary of State to have the function of making requests of the kind to which ibid s 30 applies: s 30(2).

3    For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

4    Criminal proceedings include any proceedings on an appeal before a court against a decision in administrative proceedings: ibid s 30(1).

5    Ibid s 30(1).

6    Ibid s 30(3). The nominated court has the like powers for securing the attendance of the witness to give evidence through the link as it has for the purpose of proceedings before the court: s 30(6), Sch 2 Pt 1 para 1.

7    Ibid s 30(4). Any statement made on oath by a witness giving evidence in pursuance of s 30 is to be treated for the purposes of the Perjury Act 1911 s 1 (see PARA 712 ante) as made in proceedings before the nominated court: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 30(5).

The witness is to give evidence in the presence of the nominated court: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 Sch 2 Pt 1 para 3). The nominated court is to establish the identity of the witness: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 4. The nominated court is to intervene where it considers it necessary to do so to safeguard the rights of the witness: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 5. The evidence is to be given under the supervision of the court of the country concerned: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 6. The evidence is to be given in accordance with the laws of that country and with any measures for the protection of the witness agreed between the Secretary of State and the authority in that country which appears to him to have the function of entering into agreements of that kind: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 7. Rules of court make provision for the use of interpreters: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 8; CrimPR 32.6. The witness cannot be compelled to give any evidence which he could not be compelled to give in criminal proceedings in the part of the United Kingdom in which the nominated court exercises jurisdiction, and the witness cannot be compelled to give any evidence if his doing so would be prejudicial to the security of the United Kingdom: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 Sch 2 Pt 1 para 9. Rules of court make provision for the drawing up of a record of the hearing and for sending the record to the external authority: Sch 2 Pt 1 para 10; CrimPR 32.7.

Evidence given in pursuance of the above provisions is not to be treated for any purpose as evidence given in proceedings in the United Kingdom<sup>8</sup>.

1    Ie a request under the Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 31.

2    An external authority is the authority in that country which appears to the Secretary of State to have the function of making requests of the kind to which ibid s 31 applies: s 31(2).

3    A participating country in relation to any provision of the Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 Pt 1 (ss 1-51) means (1) a country other than the United Kingdom which is a member State on a day appointed for the commencement of that provision; and (2) any other country designated by an order made by the Secretary of State: s 51(2). For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

4    Criminal proceedings include any proceedings on an appeal before a court against a decision in administrative proceedings: ibid s 31(1).

5    Ibid s 31(1). A request under s 31(1) must: (1) specify the court in the participating country; (2) give the name and address of the witness; (3) state that the witness is willing to give evidence by telephone in the proceedings before that court: s 31(3).

6    Ibid s 31(4).

7    Ibid s 31(5). Any statement made on oath by a witness giving evidence in pursuance of s 31 is to be treated for the purposes of the Perjury Act 1911 s 1 (see PARA 712 ante) as made in proceedings before the nominated court: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 31(6).

The nominated court must notify the witness of the time when and the place at which he is to give evidence by telephone: Crime (International Co-operation) Act 2003 s 31(6), Sch 2 Pt 2 para 11. The nominated court must be satisfied that the witness is willingly giving evidence by telephone: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 12. The witness is to give evidence in the presence of the nominated court: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 13. The nominated court is to establish the identity of the witness: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 14. The evidence is to be given under the supervision of the court of the participating country: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 15. The evidence is to be given in accordance with the laws of that country: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 16. Rules of court make provision for the use of interpreters: Sch 2 Pt 2 para 17; CrimPR 32.6. As to the keeping of record see CrimPR 32.8.

(8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF

1433. Evidence to establish credibility.

A party calling a witness may not ordinarily call evidence to establish the credibility of that witness, except in rebuttal of attempts to discredit the witness; and it is limited, even then, to the rebuttal of allegations of general untruthfulness by contrary evidence of reputation<sup>1</sup>. Evidence in rebuttal of particular allegations of misconduct relating to credibility is not permitted because such issues are collateral and the witness's denial of such an accusation will be final<sup>2</sup>.

A witness may however be questioned as to his trade, profession or calling, and such questions might sometimes help to underpin his credit<sup>3</sup>. In the case of an expert witness evidence may be adduced to establish the experience and qualifications of the witness<sup>4</sup>.

If the defendant proposes to call an expert witness to say that a witness of fact for the prosecution should be regarded as unreliable due to mental abnormality<sup>5</sup>, then, depending on the precise issue, it may be open to the prosecution to call an expert in rebuttal, or even (anticipating the defence expert) as part of the prosecution case. It may even be open to the prosecution to rebut by expert evidence a case put only in cross-examination that a prosecution witness is unreliable in a particular respect arising from mental abnormality<sup>6</sup>. If such evidence is admitted, great care must be taken to restrict the expert opinion to meeting the specific challenge and not to allow it to extend to 'oath-helping'<sup>7</sup>.

Even where there has been a direct attack on the credibility of a witness, a further witness called to testify as to the other's credibility cannot be permitted to testify in chief as to the particular facts, circumstances of incidents which form the basis of his opinion, although he may be cross-examined upon them: R v Richardson and Longman [1969] 1 QB 299 at 304, sub nom R v Longman and Richardson [1968] 2 All ER 761 at 764, CA, per Edmund Davies LJ.

EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1434. Leading questions.

1434. Leading questions.

A witness may not ordinarily be asked leading questions during examination in chief or re-examination<sup>1</sup>, but some leading questions are permissible. Where a matter is not in dispute, there is no reason why the witness should not be led through his evidence<sup>2</sup>, and where a witness is asked to identify an exhibit in court, it may be difficult to avoid the use of a leading question<sup>3</sup>. It may be necessary in the interests of justice for a court to allow leading questions to be put to a defendant who suffers from learning and communication difficulties<sup>4</sup>. Where the court or judge has granted leave for a witness to be treated as hostile, leading questions may then be asked by the party calling him, as if in cross-examination<sup>5</sup>.

Evidence given in answer to a leading question is not thereby rendered inadmissible, but the weight or credibility of such evidence may be adversely affected<sup>6</sup>, and where a child has been pressurised by leading questions in the course of a video-taped interview which it is proposed to use as that child's evidence in chief<sup>7</sup>, the videotape may be excluded as unreliable<sup>8</sup>.

1 Pop v R [2003] UKPC 40, [2003] All ER (D) 333 (May). There is no clear definition of the phrase 'leading question'. The definition most frequently cited is that from Stephen Digest of the Law of Evidence (12th edn, 1936) p 165 which defines a leading question as one which suggests the answer which the questioner wishes to receive or which suggests the existence of disputed facts to which the witness has not already testified. During examination in chief, counsel must phrase his questions in a neutral form and must build on the witness's own testimony without pre-supposing the existence of facts to which he has not testified.

2 See eg R v Knighton [2002] EWCA Crim 2227, [2003] Crim LR 117, (2002) Times, 28 October. Counsel may thus lead evidence in respect of his witness's name, address and occupation, or in respect of any other matters of agreed fact.

EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1435. Unfavourable witnesses.

1435. Unfavourable witnesses.

Where a witness for the prosecution or defence fails to 'come up to proof', and does not give the evidence expected of him, or gives evidence that is in some respect positively unfavourable to the party calling him, that party may not ordinarily<sup>1</sup> cross-examine the witness as to any inconsistencies between his oral testimony and his previous statements or proof of evidence<sup>2</sup>, nor may that party under any circumstances seek to impeach the credit of his own witness by calling evidence of his bad character<sup>3</sup>. The party concerned is not, however, precluded from calling other witnesses to establish the facts in question, even though their evidence may contradict the unfavourable witness and prove him to have been inaccurate or mistaken<sup>4</sup>.

1 He not unless the witness is declared to be hostile. As to hostile witnesses see PARA 1436 post.

2 Where a witness appears to be confused or forgetful, it may be appropriate for him to be given an opportunity to refresh his memory by reading a copy of any previous statement that is admissible for that purpose: see R v Maw [1994] Crim LR 841, CA. EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1436. Hostile witnesses.

1436. Hostile witnesses.

A hostile witness (sometimes referred to as a witness who proves 'adverse'<sup>1</sup>) is one who is not merely disappointing or unfavourable to the party calling him, but is also, in the opinion of the court, unwilling to tell the truth at the instance of that party<sup>2</sup>. A witness may prove hostile through his adverse testimony or through his refusal to answer questions, even where he does not give any adverse testimony<sup>3</sup>, and he may be ruled hostile even where his unwillingness to co-operate is driven by fear, rather than by any animosity to the party calling him<sup>4</sup>.

A party producing a witness who is found to be hostile may not impeach the credit of that witness by general evidence of bad character<sup>5</sup>, but may (as with any other unfavourable witness<sup>6</sup>) contradict him by evidence from other sources, and in addition the court may give leave for that party to cross-examine his own witness and prove the witness has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony<sup>7</sup>. Before such proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement<sup>8</sup>.

In cases where the witness demonstrates his hostility by refusing to testify once sworn, it is arguably impossible for his previous statements to be 'inconsistent with his present testimony', but at common law he may still be cross-examined concerning such statements<sup>9</sup>.

A witness may be called to testify even when it is known in advance that he is likely to prove hostile<sup>10</sup>, although a judge may in some cases be justified in holding a trial within a trial for the purpose of deciding whether the calling of such a witness by the prosecution would be in the interests of justice, and whether he should exclude (in the exercise of his discretion) evidence of any previous statements of a hostile witness that might be considered unfairly prejudicial to the defendant<sup>11</sup>.

Where a previous inconsistent statement is proved in evidence, it is admissible as evidence of any fact asserted<sup>12</sup>. It is accordingly possible for a defendant to be convicted on the basis of previous statements made by prosecution witnesses who have resiled from those statements in their oral testimony<sup>13</sup>.

Any questioning of a possibly hostile witness should generally take place in the presence of the jury: R v Darby [1989] Crim LR 817, CA; but cf R v Honeyghon and Sayles [1999] Crim LR 221, CA.

8 Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 3. A statement admitted under this provision need not be in writing: R v Prefas, R v Pryce (1986) 86 Cr App Rep 111, CA. As to the compellability of a spouse see PARA 1402 ante.

9 The Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 3 does not refer to this, but has not removed or destroyed the basic common law right of the judge in his discretion to allow such cross-examination when a witness proves to be hostile: R v Thompson (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 96, CA.

12 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 119(1)(b). See PARA 1529 post.

13 As in R v Joyce [2005] EWCA Crim 1785, [2005] All ER (D) 309 (Jun). If, however, such evidence is so unconvincing that, considering its importance to the case against the defendant, his conviction of the offence would be unsafe, the court must either direct the jury to acquit the defendant of the offence or, if it considers that there ought to be a re-trial, discharge the jury: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 125(1).

UPDATE

1436 Hostile witnesses

NOTE 3--Where a judge rules that a witness can be treated as hostile at trial within the meaning of the 1865 Act s 3 by the party calling him, he must, in all but exceptional cases, still direct the jury to approach the witness' evidence with caution, even if the witness does not ultimately prove to be hostile: R v Greene (2009) Times, 28 October, CA.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1437. Previous consistent statements of witnesses.

1437. Previous consistent statements of witnesses.

A previous statement by a witness which appears to supplement or support his testimony is not generally admissible, either as evidence of any matter stated<sup>1</sup> or as evidence of that witness's consistency<sup>2</sup>. There are, however, certain statutory exceptions to this general rule<sup>3</sup>, under which a statement made by a witness may be admissible as evidence of any matter stated of which oral evidence by him would be admissible, provided in each case that the witness while giving evidence indicates that to the best of his belief he made the statement, and that to the best of his belief it states the truth<sup>4</sup>.

At common law, the previous consistent statement of a witness may also be admissible to rebut a suggestion that his testimony has been fabricated at some later date or time<sup>5</sup>, and by statute any statement that is admissible on that basis is admissible as evidence of any matter stated of which oral evidence by the witness would be admissible<sup>6</sup>.

5    R v Oyesiku (1971) 56 Cr App Rep 240, CA; R v Benjamin (1913) 8 Cr App Rep 146, CCA. Such evidence does not become admissible merely because it is suggested that the testimony of the witness in question is untrue: Fox v General Medical Council [1960] 3 All ER 225, [1960] 1 WLR 1017, PC; R v Oyesiku supra.

6    See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 120(2); and PARA 1529 post. Rules of common law continue to determine when such a statement is admissible in the first place. Section 120(2) merely addresses the evidential value of such evidence once it has been given. At common law, such a statement was originally admissible only for the purpose of rebutting the allegation and could not be regarded as evidence of the facts stated.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1438. Refreshing memory.

1438. Refreshing memory.

A witness in criminal proceedings may be permitted to refresh his memory either in the course of his evidence or before going into the witness box<sup>1</sup>. In practice, it would be almost impossible for a court to control the extent to which witnesses refresh their memories before testifying, and testimony would become more a test of memory than of truthfulness if witnesses were deprived of the opportunity of checking their recollection beforehand by reference to statements or notes made at a time closer to the events in question<sup>2</sup>. Any rule purporting to deny witnesses prior access to their statements would tend to create difficulties for honest witnesses but do little to hamper dishonest witnesses<sup>3</sup>.

A witness giving oral evidence in criminal proceedings about any matter may, at any stage in the course of doing so, refresh his memory of it from a document made or verified by him at an earlier time if: (1) he states in his oral evidence that the document records his recollection of the matter at that earlier time; and (2) his recollection of the matter is likely to have been significantly better at that time than it is at the time of his oral evidence<sup>4</sup>. Similarly, where such a witness (a) has previously given an oral account, of which a sound recording was made, and he states in that evidence that the account represented his recollection of the matter at the time; (b) his recollection of the matter is likely to have been significantly better at the time of the previous account than it is at the time of his oral evidence; and (c) a transcript has been made of the sound recording, he may, at any stage in the course of giving his evidence, refresh his memory of the matter from that transcript<sup>5</sup>.

A document used by a witness to refresh his memory need not have been made by the witness personally, provided it was verified by him while the facts were relatively fresh in his memory<sup>6</sup>. Where a witness has dictated a note to, for example, a police officer, he need not verify the original by inspecting it; it is enough if the officer reads back to the witness what he has written<sup>7</sup>. Documents may be used to refresh memory even if they would not otherwise be admissible if tendered in evidence<sup>8</sup>, and there seems to be nothing to prevent copies of original documents being used for this purpose<sup>9</sup>.

It is not necessary that the witness should have any independent recollection of the facts to which he testifies and of which he seeks to refresh his memory, apart from the document to which he refers<sup>10</sup>.

1 Police officers or others who may have to gather and present evidence in several different cases each year will often need to refresh their memories from notebooks or statements made at or near the time of the events in question, especially on matters of detail. See eg R v Simmonds [1969] 1 QB 685, 51 Cr App Rep 316, CA. The rule applies to all witnesses, however, including (where he gives evidence) the defendant: R v Britton [1987] 2 All ER 412, 85 Cr App Rep 14, CA. See also R v Tyagi (1986) Times, 21 July, CA (trial judge may suggest witness refreshes his memory in interests of justice). In some cases it may be appropriate for the witness to have the statement read to him (eg where he is dyslexic or otherwise impaired from reading it himself): R v Gordon [2002] EWCA Crim 412, [2002] All ER (D) 99 (Feb).

2 R v Richardson [1971] 2 QB 484, 55 Cr App Rep 244, CA, citing Lau Pak Ngam v R [1966] Crim LR 443, PC. See also Worley v Bentley [1976] 2 All ER 449, 62 Cr App Rep 239, DC. It is nevertheless desirable that the defence be informed that prosecution witnesses have seen their statements: R v Westwell [1976] 2 All ER 812, 62 Cr App Rep 251, CA. A party cross-examining a witness who has refreshed his memory out of court may inspect the document in the same way as if it had been used to refresh memory in court: Owen v Edwards (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 191, DC; and see PARA 1439 post.

3 R v Richardson [1971] 2 QB 484 at 489, 55 Cr App Rep 244 at 251, CA, per Sachs LJ, citing Lau Pak Ngam v R [1966] Crim LR 443, PC. It would nevertheless be wrong if prior to giving evidence several witnesses were handed statements in circumstances which enabled one to compare with another what each had said: R v Richardson supra. See also R v Shaw [2002] EWCA Crim 3004, [2002] All ER (D) 79 (Dec). Discussions between witnesses ought not to take place, particularly just before they give evidence, nor should statements or proofs of evidence be read to witnesses in each other's presence: R v Skinner (1993) 99 Cr App Rep 212, CA. There is, however, nothing objectionable in the practice whereby police officers collaborate together to produce a joint note of an incident or event witnessed by them: R v Bass [1953] 1 QB 680 at 686, 37 Cr App Rep 51 at 59, CCA.

Training or coaching for witnesses in criminal proceedings (whether for prosecution or defence) is not permitted. This is the logical consequence of well-known principle that discussions between witnesses should not take place, and that the statements and proofs of one witness should not be disclosed to any other witness. The witness should give his or her own evidence, so far as practicable uninfluenced by what anyone else has said, whether in formal discussions or informal conversations. The rule reduces, indeed hopefully avoids any possibility, that one witness may tailor his evidence in the light of what anyone else said, and equally, avoids any unfounded perception that he may have done so: R v Momodou [2005] EWCA Crim 177, [2005] 2 All ER 571, [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 85. The court in this case also issued guidance as to the regulation of witness familiarisation sessions (the holding of which must be disclosed to the court and other parties) so as to ensure that they do not infringe the prohibition against the coaching of witnesses.

4 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 139(1). This represents a significant relaxation of the old common law rules by which a witness could refer during his oral testimony only to a document made at the time of the events described therein or one made so shortly afterwards that the facts in question would have been fresh in the mind of the witness. See R v Mills, R v Rose [1962] 3 All ER 298, 46 Cr App Rep 336, CCA; R v Simmonds [1969] 1 QB 685, 51 Cr App Rep 316, CA; R v Richardson [1971] 2 QB 484, 55 Cr App Rep 244, CA; R v Graham [1973] Crim LR 628, CA; R v Fotheringham [1975] Crim LR 710, CA.

At common law, a witness who had begun to give evidence might nevertheless be permitted to adjourn and refresh his memory from a statement that was not strictly speaking 'contemporaneous' if the judge was satisfied: (1) that the witness could not then recall the details of events because of the lapse of time since they took place; (2) that the witness had made a statement much nearer the time of the events and that the contents of the statement represented his recollection at the time he made it; (3) that the witness had not read the statement before coming into the witness box; and (4) that the witness desired an opportunity to read his statement before he continued to give evidence: R v Da Silva [1990] 1 All ER 29, [1990] 1 WLR 31, CA. See also R v South Ribble Magistrates' Court, ex p Cochrane [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 544, DC (the criteria in R v Da Silva supra were not wholly inflexible). It did not matter whether the witness withdrew from the witness box to read his statement or whether he read it in the witness box; but, if he withdrew, no communication could be had with him other than to see that he could read the statement in peace; and, whichever course was adopted, the statement had to be removed from him when he came to resume his evidence and he could not be permitted to refer to it again: R v Da Silva supra. The Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 139 does not appear to leave any room or necessity for the kind of distinction drawn in R v Da Silva.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/ (8) EXAMINATION IN CHIEF/1439. Documents used to refresh memory.

1439. Documents used to refresh memory.

Where a document has been used to refresh memory, any other party may inspect the document and cross-examine the witness upon it<sup>1</sup>. If the witness is cross-examined on parts of the document to which he has not made reference in his evidence, the party calling him may treat the document as evidence in the proceedings<sup>2</sup>. At common law such a document could be treated as evidence only for the limited purpose of showing the witness's consistency<sup>3</sup>, but now a statement made by a witness in a document: (1) which is used by him to refresh his memory while giving evidence; (2) on which he is cross-examined; and (3) which as a consequence is received in evidence in the proceedings, is admissible as evidence of any matter stated of which oral evidence by him would be admissible<sup>4</sup>.

If on a trial before a judge and jury a statement made by a witness in a document and used by him to refresh his memory is admitted in evidence<sup>5</sup> and the document or a copy of it is produced as an exhibit, the exhibit must not accompany the jury when it retires to consider its verdict unless (a) the court considers it appropriate or (b) all the parties to the proceedings agree that it should accompany the jury<sup>6</sup>.

1 See R v Fenlon, R v Neal (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 307 at 311, CA; R v Sekhon (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 19, CA. The right to cross-examine a witness as to a previous statement does not depend on whether the witness purports to recall events after refreshing his memory from the statement: but is in any case permitted under the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 5 (see PARA 1445 post): R v Bradley [2004] EWCA Crim 1770, [2004] All ER (D) 282 (Jun). A party cross-examining a witness who has refreshed his memory out of court may inspect the document in the same way as if it had been used in court: Owen v Edwards (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 191, DC. A document may also provide evidence of its own authenticity where this is in question eg where it is alleged that it has been altered: R v Sekhon supra at 23. The jury may inspect a memory-refreshing document if it is necessary to its determination of a point in issue (R v Bass [1953] 1 QB 680, 37 Cr App Rep 51, CCA) or where it would be difficult for the jury to follow the cross-examination of the witness without having the record, or copies of the record, before it: R v Sekhon (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 19, CA.

EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1440. General principles governing cross-examination.

(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION

1440. General principles governing cross-examination.

In criminal proceedings the prosecution will ordinarily cross-examine the defendant, if he testifies<sup>1</sup>, and any other witness called on behalf of the defence. A defendant or his advocate may in turn cross-examine any prosecution witness and any co-defendant who testifies, together with any other witness called on behalf of a co-defendant<sup>2</sup>. In some cases, however, a defendant may not be permitted to conduct a cross-examination in person<sup>3</sup>.

Cross-examination may be conducted for any of a number of purposes, but will usually be intended to challenge or undermine part or all of the witness's evidence in chief. The cross-examiner may seek to cast doubt on the accuracy, completeness and/or veracity of that evidence, and will in many cases seek to undermine that evidence by suggesting that the witness is biased, of bad character, or otherwise unworthy of belief (for example by means of cross-examination as to credit)<sup>4</sup>. In the case of an expert witness<sup>5</sup>, cross-examination may seek to cast doubt on the validity or accuracy of that witness's investigations, opinions or conclusions. In contrast, the cross-examination by a defendant of a witness called on behalf of a co-defendant may in some cases be intended to complement or enhance, rather than undermine, that witness's evidence in chief.

A witness may only be cross-examined by the party calling him if he has been declared hostile by the court<sup>6</sup>, and a witness called by the judge may only be cross-examined with leave of the judge<sup>7</sup>. Certain witnesses are not subject to cross-examination, namely:

- 2169 (1) a witness who is called only to produce a document<sup>8</sup>; and
- 2170 (2) a witness who is called by mistake, and who is unable to give any evidence through examination in chief<sup>9</sup>.

A witness may be called by the prosecution for the sole purpose of being tendered for cross-examination by the defence<sup>10</sup>.

Where a witness for the prosecution gives evidence in chief but dies before the completion of his cross-examination or becomes too ill or distressed to go on, it may sometimes be necessary for the trial to be halted, but in other cases any potential unfairness to the defendant may be dealt with by a carefully worded direction from the judge<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to the right of a defendant to choose whether or not he should testify see PARA 1402 ante.

2 The right to cross-examine a co-defendant does not depend on whether the co-defendant or his witnesses have given evidence unfavourable to the defendant (R v Hadwen [1902] 1 KB 882, CCA; R v Paul, R v McFarlane [1920] 2 KB 183, 14 Cr App Rep 155, CCA; R v Hilton [1972] 1 QB 421, 55 Cr App Rep 466, CA), but cross-examination as to a co-defendant's bad character is permitted only in accordance with the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101, notably where there is an important matter in issue between the defendant and the co-defendant: see s 101(1)(e); and PARA 1508 post.

3 See PARA 1441 post.

4 See PARA 1443 post.

5 See PARA 1484 post.

6 See PARA 1436 ante.

7 Leave to cross-examine should be given if the evidence of the witness is damaging to a party (Coulson v Disborough [1894] 2 QB 316; R v Cliburn (1898) 62 JP 232.

EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1441. Restrictions on cross-examination by defendant in person.

1441. Restrictions on cross-examination by defendant in person.

A defendant may ordinarily conduct in person the cross-examination of witnesses called by the prosecution or by a co-defendant<sup>1</sup>, but this right is now subject to the following restrictions.

No person charged with a sexual offence<sup>2</sup> may in any criminal proceedings cross-examine in person a witness who is the complainant<sup>3</sup>, either (1) in connection with that offence; or (2) in connection with any other offence (of whatever nature) with which that person is charged in the proceedings<sup>4</sup>.

No person charged with one of certain sexual offences<sup>5</sup>, or with kidnapping<sup>6</sup>, child abduction<sup>7</sup>, child cruelty or neglect<sup>8</sup> or any other offence which involves an assault on, or injury or a threat of injury to, any person<sup>9</sup> may in any criminal proceedings cross-examine in person a protected witness<sup>10</sup>, either in connection with that offence, or in connection with any other offence (of whatever nature) with which that person is charged in the proceedings<sup>11</sup>.

Where neither of the above rules applies, the prosecutor may apply for the court to give a direction, prohibiting the defendant from cross-examining (or further cross-examining) a specified witness in person, or the court may of its own motion raise the issue whether such a direction should be given<sup>12</sup>. If it then appears to the court:

62. (a) that the quality of evidence<sup>13</sup> given by the witness on cross-examination is likely to be diminished if the cross-examination (or further cross-examination) is conducted by the defendant in person, and would be likely to be improved if a direction were given prohibiting it<sup>14</sup>; and
63. (b) that it would not be contrary to the interests of justice to give such a direction<sup>15</sup>, the court may give such a direction<sup>16</sup>.

A defendant who is prevented by the above rules from cross-examining (or from continuing the cross-examination of) a witness in person must be informed of this by the court as early in the proceedings as is reasonably practicable and he must be invited to arrange for a legal representative to act for him for the purpose of cross-examining the witness<sup>17</sup>. The defendant is then required to notify the court whether a legal representative is to act for him for that purpose<sup>18</sup>. If he notifies the court that no legal representative is to act for him for the purpose of cross-examining the witness, or if no notification is received by the court and it appears to the court that no legal representative is to so act, it must consider whether it is necessary in the interests of justice for the witness to be cross-examined by a qualified legal representative<sup>19</sup> appointed to represent the interests of the defendant<sup>20</sup>. If the court decides that it is necessary and makes such an appointment<sup>21</sup>, the person so appointed is not responsible to the defendant<sup>22</sup>.

Where on a trial on indictment with a jury a defendant is prevented from cross-examining (or from continuing the cross-examination of<sup>23</sup>) a witness in person by virtue of any of the above rules, the judge must give the jury such warning (if any) as the judge considers necessary to ensure that the defendant is not prejudiced:

- 2171 (i) by any inferences that might be drawn from the fact that the defendant has been prevented from cross-examining the witness in person<sup>24</sup>; or
- 2172 (ii) where the witness has been cross-examined by a legal representative appointed by the court<sup>25</sup>, by the fact that the cross-examination was carried out by such a legal representative and not by a person acting as the defendant's own legal representative<sup>26</sup>.

1 R v Brown (Milton) [1998] 2 Cr App Rep 364, [1998] All ER (D) 187, CA. A court or judge is not, however, obliged to give an unrepresented defendant his head to ask whatever questions, at whatever length, the defendant wishes: R v Brown supra.

2 Is an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1 (ss 1-79) (as amended) (see PARA 165 et seq ante): Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 62(1) (substituted by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 139, Sch 6 para 41(1), (3)).

3 For the meaning of 'complainant' see PARA 1418 note 11 ante.

4 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 34.

5 Is an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1 (as amended) or an offence under the Protection of Children Act 1978: see PARA 165 et seq ante.

6 As to kidnapping see PARA 136 ante.

7 Is an offence under the Child Abduction Act 1984 s 1 or s 2: see PARA 137 et seq ante; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(4) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 781-785.

8 Is an offence contrary to the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 1: see PARA 143 ante.

9 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 35(3) (amended by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 140, Sch 7).

10 For these purposes, a 'protected witness' is a witness who either is the complainant or is alleged to have been a witness to the commission of the offence to which the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 35 (as amended) applies, and either is a child or falls to be cross-examined after giving evidence in chief (whether wholly or in part) (1) by means of a video recording made for the purposes of s 27 (see PARA 1425 ante) at a time when the witness was a child; or (2) in any other way at any such time: s 35(2). Such a witness may also be a co-defendant: s 35(5). For the meaning of 'witness' see PARA 1417 note 1 ante. A 'child' for the purpose of an alleged offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 Pt 1 (as amended) or an offence under the Protection of Children Act 1978 is a person under the age of 17, but for other purposes it means a person under the age of 14: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 35(4).

11 Ibid s 35(1).

12 Ibid s 36(1). See also CrimPR 31.4.

13 References to the quality of a witness's evidence are to be construed in accordance with the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 16(5) (see PARA 1417 ante): s 36(4)(b).

14 Ibid s 36(2)(a). In determining whether this is the case, the court must have regard in particular to: (1) any views expressed by the witness as to whether or not the witness is content to be cross-examined by the defendant in person; (2) the nature of the questions likely to be asked, having regard to the issues in the proceedings and the defence case advanced so far (if any); (3) any behaviour on the part of the defendant at any stage of the proceedings, both generally and in relation to the witness; (4) any relationship (of whatever nature) between the witness and the accused; (5) whether any person (other than the defendant) is or has at any time been charged in the proceedings with a sexual offence or an offence to which s 35 applies, and (if so) whether s 34 or s 35 operates or would have operated to prevent that person from cross-examining the witness in person; and (6) any direction under s 19 (see PARA 1419 ante) which the court has given, or proposes to give, in relation to the witness: s 36(3).

15 Ibid s 36(2)(b).

16 Ibid s 36(2). A direction under s 36 has binding effect from the time it is made until the witness to whom it applies is discharged: s 37(1). The court may discharge a direction if it appears to the court to be in the interests of justice to do so, and may do so either (1) on an application made by a party to the proceedings, if there has been a material change of circumstances since the time when the direction was given (or the time when any previous application to discharge it was made); or (2) of its own motion: s 37(2), (3). The court must state in open court its reasons for its decision in relation to a direction: s 37(4). The CrimPR may make further provision for the procedure to be followed: s 37(5) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 384).

17 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 38(1), (2), (8)(a); CrimPR 31.1.

18 The defendant should notify the court officer within 7 days of the court giving its explanation, or within such other period as the court may in any particular case allow: CrimPR 31.1(3); and see CrimPR 31.3.

19 'Qualified legal representative' means a legal representative who has a right of audience (within the meaning of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990) in relation to the proceedings before the court: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 38(8)(b).

20 Ibid s 38(3). The CrimPR may make further provision for the procedure to be followed: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 38(6), (7) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 384). Where no reply is received within the specified period the court may extend the period, either of its own motion or on the application of the defendant: CrimPR 31.1(8).

21 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 38(4).

EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1442. Failure to cross-examine.

1442. Failure to cross-examine.

As a general rule, a party who fails to cross-examine a witness upon any matter tacitly accepts the truth of the witness's evidence in chief on that matter, and will not thereafter be entitled to challenge or contradict it by other evidence, or invite the jury to disbelieve him in that regard<sup>1</sup>.

Two exceptions to this general rule have been recognised. The first is that in summary proceedings, where parties may lack experienced advocates who understand the importance of the rule, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that justices must accept a witness's evidence merely because he has not been cross-examined<sup>2</sup>. The second is that there may be cases in which it is perfectly clear to the witness that his evidence is disputed, or is inconsistent with evidence that has gone before, and in which no injustice would be done by failure to cross-examine him<sup>3</sup>.

1 R v Hart (1932) 23 Cr App Rep 202, CCA; R v Bircham [1972] Crim LR 430, CA; R v Fenlon (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 307, CA; R v Wood Green Crown Court, ex p Taylor [1995] Crim LR 879, DC. See also Browne v Dunn (1893) 6 R 67 at 76, HL, per Lord Halsbury. Where evidence is later adduced in contradiction of a witness who has not previously been cross-examined on that particular matter, it may be necessary to recall that witness in order to cross-examine him on it: R v Cannan [1998] Crim LR 284, CA.

EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1443. Cross-examination as to credit.

1443. Cross-examination as to credit.

Cross-examination as to credit involves an attempt to undermine a witness's testimony by means of an attack on the witness's personal credibility as opposed to the specific content of his testimony<sup>1</sup>. The distinction is potentially important, because as a general rule any answers given by the witness to questions going merely to credibility are collateral and final and evidence is not admissible to contradict them, whereas evidence may be adduced to contradict answers given under cross-examination in respect of the facts in issue<sup>2</sup>.

Cross-examination as to credit will generally involve attempts to establish that the witness is a person of bad character or reputation, or that he has in the past committed or been convicted of criminal offences or has been guilty of other forms of misconduct. Cross-examination on such matters is now regulated primarily by statute<sup>3</sup>. Notice in the prescribed form must be given of any intention to cross-examine a witness as to his (or any other person's) previous convictions, or as to any misconduct or disposition thereto, other than where this (1) has to do with the alleged facts of the offence with which the defendant is charged; or (2) is evidence of misconduct in connection with the investigation or prosecution of that offence<sup>4</sup>. Save where the witness concerned is a defendant, or where all parties agree to it, no such cross-examination may then take place without leave of the court<sup>5</sup>. Other legislation restricts the right of a defendant in proceedings concerning alleged sexual offences from cross-examining a complainant as to the complainant's sexual behaviour on other occasions<sup>6</sup>, particularly where the apparent purpose of such questioning is to impugn the credibility of complainants<sup>7</sup>.

Cross-examination as to credit may not necessarily involve allegations of bad character. It may for example be possible to impugn the credibility of a witness to identification by cross-examining that witness as to deficiencies in his eyesight or in his ability to recall facial features. In such cases the right to cross-examine remains governed by the common law<sup>8</sup>.

A witness may also be cross-examined as to any previous oral or written statement made by him which is inconsistent with his testimony in court<sup>9</sup>, or as to his impartiality or his relationship or connection with any person for or in respect of whom he gives evidence<sup>10</sup>.

1 The credibility of any witness who testifies as to the facts, whether for the prosecution or for the defence, is a relevant matter, although collateral to the facts in issue: R v Baker [1895] 1 QB 797, CCR. See also R v Garner (1889) 61 LT 699, CCR.

2 R v Cargill [1913] 2 KB 271, 8 Cr App Rep 224, CCA; A-G v Hitchcock (1847) 1 Exch 91 at 99 per Pollock CB; Harris v Tippet (1811) 2 Camp 637 at 638, 170 ER 1277 at 1278 per Lawrence J; R v Edwards [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA; Nicholls v R [2005] HCA 1, Aust HC. In practice it may frequently be difficult to determine whether the matter upon which it is sought to contradict the witness goes only to credit: see eg R v Busby (1981) 75 Cr App Rep 79, CA; R v Phillips (1936) 26 Cr App Rep 17, CCA; R v Funderburk [1990] 2 All ER 482, 90 Cr App Rep 466, CA. As to collateral evidence generally see PARA 1444 post.

3 See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 98-113; and PARA 1502 et seq post. See also the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 6 (as amended); and PARA 1445 post.

4 See PARA 1502 et seq post. See also CrimPR 35 which specifies the practice and procedure to be followed in the criminal courts in connection with cross-examination as to bad character.

5 See PARA 1504 post. As to cross-examination of a defendant on his character see PARA 1505 et seq post.

6 See the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41; and PARA 1446 post.

7 In particular, no evidence or question concerning about any sexual behaviour of the complainant in such a case may be regarded as relating to a relevant issue in the case if it appears to the court to be reasonable to assume that the purpose (or main purpose) for which it would be adduced or asked is to establish or elicit material for impugning the credibility of the complainant as a witness: ibid s 41(4). This prevents the defence from suggesting that a promiscuous complainant lacks credibility merely on account of such promiscuity; but it must not be used to prevent cross-examination as to any sexual behaviour which is properly admissible as bearing on the issue of consent: R v A [2001] UKHL 25 at [138], [2002] 1 AC 45 at [138], [2001] 2 Cr App Rep 351 at [138] per Lord Hutton. See also R v Martin [2004] EWCA Crim 916, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 354, sub nom R v M [2004] All ER (D) 487 (Mar); R v F [2005] EWCA Crim 493, [2005] 1 WLR 2348, [2005] All ER (D) 58 (Mar).

8 The general rule here is that since the purpose of cross-examination as to credit is to show that the witness ought not to be believed on oath, the matters about which he is questioned must (in order to be admissible) relate to his likely standing after cross-examination with the tribunal which is trying him or listening to his evidence: R v Sweet-Escott (1971) 55 Cr App Rep 316 per Lawton J at 320; approved R v Funderburk [1990] 2 All ER 482, 90 Cr App Rep 466, CA; R v Edwards [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA.

1443 Cross-examination as to credit

NOTE 4--CrimPR Pt 35 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 35.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1444. Finality of answers on credit and other collateral issues.

1444. Finality of answers on credit and other collateral issues.

The general rule at common law is that answers of witnesses to questions pertaining to matters collateral to the proceedings are final<sup>1</sup>. This does not mean that a witness's answers to such questions must necessarily be believed. It merely prevents the cross-examiner from calling further evidence in respect of matters which are not directly relevant to the issues in the proceedings. Collateral matters do not bear directly on the facts in issue in the trial, but on matters such as the character of a defendant or the credibility or consistency of a witness<sup>2</sup>.

The distinction between questions which are merely collateral and those which are directly relevant to the issue can be difficult to apply in practice. It is virtually impossible to identify matters that will always be collateral or will always be relevant to the facts in issue<sup>3</sup>. Cases often turn on their own particular facts and the final classification may need to be based on the court's sense of justice rather than on any precise philosophical or analytical process<sup>4</sup>. In some cases the importance of the distinction is rendered largely academic by rules that permit the contradiction of a witness's answers even on matters which might be considered collateral to the proceedings<sup>5</sup>.

1 'Policy considerations provide the rationale for the collateral evidence rule. The reasons for the rule are generally practical: it is based on principles of case management, such as the desirability of avoiding a multiplicity of issues and of protecting the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the trial process by preventing the parties from litigating matters of marginal relevance; [but] it is also based on the need to be fair to the witness': Nicholls v R [2005] HCA 1 at [39], Aust HC, per McHugh J. See also R v Mendy (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 4 at 5, CA, per Lord Lane CJ: 'The rule is of great practical use. It serves to prevent the indefinite prolongation of trials which would result from a minute examination of the character and credit of witnesses'.

2 'The test, whether the matter is collateral or not, is this: if the answer of a witness is a matter which you would be allowed on your own part to prove in evidence (if it have such a connection with the issues, that you would be allowed to give it in evidence) then it is a matter on which you may contradict him': A-G v Hitchcock (1847) 1 Exch 91 at 99, 154 ER 38 at 42 per Pollock CB. As to evidence of bad character see PARA 1502 et seq post.

3 Nicholls v R [2005] HCA 1, Aust HC; R v Mendy (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 4, CA.

4 R v Funderburk [1990] 2 All ER 482, 90 Cr App Rep 466, CA; R v Busby (1981) 75 Cr App Rep 79, CA; R v Edwards [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA. See also R v Phillips (1936) 26 Cr App Rep 17, CCA (on a charge of incest, the defence alleged that the defendant's two daughters, who were the complainants, had been rehearsed by their mother in false testimony. They denied this in cross-examination and denied having admitted to other persons that their allegations were false. Held: the judge ought to have allowed the defence to call witnesses to whom it was claimed the complainants had made such admissions, because this went to the heart of the prosecution case, suggesting that it may have been a complete invention).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1445. Exceptions to the finality rule.

1445. Exceptions to the finality rule.

There are certain exceptions to the general rule by which evidence may not ordinarily be called to contradict the answers of a witness on a collateral issue such as that of the witness's own credibility<sup>1</sup>. The following statutory and common law exceptions to that rule now apply in criminal cases.

- 2173 (1) If a witness, upon cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement<sup>2</sup>.
- 2174 (2) A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing relative to the subject matter of the indictment or proceeding, without such writing being shown to him; but if it is intended to contradict such witness by the writing, his attention must, before such contradictory proof can be given, be called to those parts of the writing which are to be used for the purpose of so contradicting him: provided always, that it is competent for the judge, at any time during the trial, to require the production of the writing for his inspection, and he may thereupon make such use of it for the purposes of the trial as he may think fit<sup>3</sup>.
- 2175 (3) If, upon a witness being lawfully questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any offence<sup>4</sup>, he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer, it is lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction<sup>5</sup>.
- 2176 (4) It is permissible to call evidence to contradict a witness's denial of bias or partiality towards one of the parties and to show that he is prejudiced so far as the case being tried is concerned<sup>6</sup>.
- 2177 (5) Medical evidence is admissible to show that a witness suffers from some disease or defect or abnormality of mind that affects the reliability of his evidence. Such evidence is not confined to a general opinion of the unreliability of the witness, but may give all the matters necessary to show not only the foundation of and reasons for the diagnosis but also the extent to which the credibility of the witness is affected<sup>7</sup>.
- 2178 (6) Where a witness's reputation for untruthfulness is properly admissible on the issue of his credibility<sup>8</sup>, that reputation may be demonstrated by calling another witness, who may be asked whether he knows of the impugned witness's general reputation and whether from that knowledge he would believe the impugned witness's testimony<sup>9</sup>.

1 As to this rule see PARA 1444 ante.

2 Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 4. It is for the court or judge to determine whether the previous statement does indeed relate to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding: R v Hart (1957) 42 Cr App Rep 47, CCA; R v Bashir and Manzur [1969] 3 All ER 692, 52 Cr App Rep 1, CA. Once evidence of the previous statement is admitted under the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 4, it may now be considered admissible as evidence of any matter stated in it of which oral evidence by the witness would have been admissible: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 119(1)(b). As to the proof of previous inconsistent statements made by witnesses who have been ruled hostile, see the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 3; R v Booth (1981) 74 Cr App Rep 123, CA; and PARA 1436 ante.

3 Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 5. See R v Anderson (1929) 21 Cr App Rep 178, CCA. Once evidence of the previous statement is admitted under the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 5, it may now be considered admissible as evidence of any matter stated in it of which oral evidence by the witness would have been admissible: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 119(1)(b).

4 It is lawfully questioned in accordance with the restrictions imposed by ibid s 100 (witnesses other than defendants) or s 101 (defendants) and in accordance with CrimPR Pt 35: see PARA 1504 et seq post.

5 Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 6 (amended by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 ss 119(2), (3), 120, Sch 7 Pt IV; the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 331, Sch 36 Pt 5 para 79(a)).

6 R v Mendy (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 4 at 5, CA, per Lord Lane CJ. See also R v Yewin (1811) 2 Camp 638n; Thomas v David (1836) 7 C & P 350; R v Shaw (1888) 16 Cox CC 503; R v Marsh (1985) 83 Cr App Rep 165, CA; R v Edwards [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA.

7 Toohey v Metropolitan Police Comr [1965] AC 595 at 609, [1965] 1 All ER 506 at 511, HL, per Lord Pearce; R v Mackenney, R v Pinfold [2003] EWCA Crim 3643, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 32, [2003] All ER (D) 255 (Dec). As to the admissibility of expert evidence concerning the dangers of childhood amnesia in cases where adult witnesses testify concerning childhood events, see R v H; R v G [2005] EWCA Crim 1828, sub nom R v X [2005] All ER (D) 06 (Jul).

8 Such evidence must necessarily be evidence of bad character, and its admissibility is accordingly governed (in the case of a defendant) by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101 and associated provisions (see PARA 1505 et seq post) and in the case of witness who is not a defendant by s 100 (see PARA 1504 post).

9 Toohey v Metropolitan Police Comr [1965] AC 595, [1965] 1 All ER 506, HL; R v Bogie [1992] Crim LR 301, CA; R v Richardson [1969] 1 QB 299 at 304, sub nom R v Longman and Richardson [1968] 2 All ER 761 at 764, CA, per Edmund Davies LJ. The common law rule applied in these cases is preserved by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 99(2), 118(1), but only so far as they allow the court to treat such evidence as proving or disproving the matter concerned.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1446. Protection of complainants in proceedings for sexual offences.

1446. Protection of complainants in proceedings for sexual offences.

Where a defendant is charged with a sexual offence<sup>1</sup>, then, except with the leave of the court, no evidence may be adduced at the trial, and no question may be asked in cross-examination, by or on behalf of any defendant at the trial<sup>2</sup>, about any sexual behaviour<sup>3</sup> of the complainant<sup>4</sup>. The court may give leave in relation to any such evidence or question only on an application made by or on behalf of a defendant<sup>5</sup>, and may not give such leave unless it is satisfied:

- 2179 (1) that a refusal of leave might have the result of rendering unsafe a conclusion of the jury or (as the case may be) the court on any relevant issue in the case<sup>6</sup>; and
- 2180 (2) that in addition one of two of the following statutory requirements<sup>7</sup> is satisfied<sup>8</sup>.

The first requirement is satisfied if the evidence or question (which must concern specific instances of sexual behaviour, and not merely general evidence of character or reputation<sup>9</sup>) relates to a relevant issue in the case<sup>10</sup> and either:

- 2181 (a) that issue is not an issue of consent<sup>11</sup>; or
- 2182 (b) it is an issue of consent and the sexual behaviour of the complainant<sup>12</sup> to which the evidence or question relates is alleged to have taken place at or about the same time as the event which is the subject matter of the charge against the defendant<sup>13</sup>; or
- 2183 (c) it is an issue of consent and the sexual behaviour of the complainant to which the evidence or question relates is alleged to have been, in any respect, so similar to: (i) any sexual behaviour of the complainant which (according to evidence adduced or to be adduced by or on behalf of the defendant) took place as part of the event which is the subject matter of the charge against the defendant<sup>14</sup>; or (ii) any other sexual behaviour of the complainant which (according to such evidence) took place at or about the same time as that event<sup>15</sup>, that the similarity cannot reasonably be explained as a coincidence<sup>16</sup>.

The second (alternative) statutory requirement is satisfied if the evidence or question:

- 2184 (A) relates to any evidence adduced by the prosecution about any sexual behaviour of the complainant<sup>17</sup>; and
- 2185 (B) in the opinion of the court, would go no further than is necessary to enable the evidence adduced by the prosecution to be rebutted or explained by or on behalf of the defendant<sup>18</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'sexual offence' see PARA 1418 note 12 ante. The Secretary of State may by order make such provision as he considers appropriate for adding or removing, for the purposes of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41, any offence to or from the offences which are sexual offences for the purposes of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 by virtue of s 62 (see PARA 1418 note 12 ante); s 42(2).

2 The prohibition thus extends not only to cross-examination of the complainant by the defence, but to questions asked in cross-examination of other witnesses (who may be witnesses for the prosecution or for a co-defendant) and to evidence given in chief by or on behalf of the defendant. It does not apply, however, to the prosecution: R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826, [2006] 2 All ER 553.

3 For this purpose, 'sexual behaviour' means any sexual behaviour or other sexual experience, whether or not involving any defendant or other person, but excluding anything alleged to have taken place as part of the event which is the subject matter of the charge against the accused: Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 42(1)(c). As to what is sexual behaviour, this is largely a matter of impression and common sense, but there may be borderline cases and it is not possible to provide a precise definition: R v Mukadi [2003] EWCA Crim 3765 at [14], [2004] Crim LR 373, [2003] All ER (D) 327 (Nov); cf the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 78; and PARA 162 ante.

Evidence that the complainant is or has been a prostitute is evidence of sexual behaviour and is prima facie inadmissible (R v White [2004] EWCA Crim 946, [2004] All ER (D) 103 (Mar)), as is evidence that the defendant and complainant have had a consensual sexual relationship in the past (although there may be exceptional circumstances in which cross-examination or evidence concerning such matters will become admissible). Evidence of demonstrably false accusations made by the complainant on other occasions is not 'evidence of sexual behaviour'; but where the defence seeks to cross-examine a complainant as to statements made (or not made) by the complainant concerning other sexual incidents (eg previous complaints as to offences allegedly committed by other persons) it may be difficult to determine whether this concerns the complainant's veracity, general credibility or sexual behaviour, and therefore a ruling should be obtained from the court before any such cross-examination is attempted, and there must be a proper evidential basis for the defence claims before any such cross-examination is permitted: R v T; R v H [2001] EWCA Crim 1877, [2002] 1 All ER 683, sub nom R v BT, R v MH [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 254.

A further complication is that the complainant may insist that the earlier complaints (even if ineffective in securing convictions) were true, whereas the defence may argue that the complainant consented to or instigated the incidents giving rise to those complaints, and this would inevitably involve questioning as to previous sexual behaviour. See also R v Singh (Gulab) [2003] EWCA Crim 485, sub nom R v S [2003] All ER (D) 408 (Feb); R v H (Stephen) [2003] EWCA Crim 2367, [2003] All ER (D) 332 (Jul); R v E [2004] EWCA Crim 1313, [2005] Crim LR 227; R v Garaxo [2005] EWCA Crim 1170, [2005] Crim LR 883, [2005] All ER (D) 363 (Apr); cf R v Lloyd [2005] EWCA Crim 1111, [2005] All ER (D) 317 (Apr).

4 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(1). For the meaning of 'complainant' see R v M [2006] All ER (D) 164 (May), CA; and PARA 1418 note 11 ante. Nothing in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41 authorises any evidence to be adduced or any question to be asked which cannot be adduced or asked apart from s 41: s 41(8). Where s 41 applies in relation to a trial by virtue of the fact that one or more of a number of persons charged in the proceedings is or are charged with a sexual offence: (1) it ceases to apply in relation to the trial if the prosecutor decides not to proceed with the case against that person or those persons in respect of that charge; but (2) it does not cease to do so in the event of that person or those persons pleading guilty to, or being convicted of, that charge: s 41(7).

5 Applications for leave must be made and determined in accordance with ibid s 43 and CrimPR 36.1: see PARA 1447 post.

6 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(2)(b). See R v Mokrecovas [2001] EWCA Crim 1644, [2002] 1 Cr App Rep 226; R v Bahador [2005] EWCA Crim 396, sub nom R v Bahadoor [2005] All ER (D) 220 (Feb).

7 Ie those under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(3) or s 41(5): see the text and notes infra.

8 Ibid s 41(2)(a). Note that on a literal interpretation of s 41(2) a court may be constrained to forbid cross-examination (or the adduction of evidence) concerning such behaviour, even when strongly of the opinion that such a ruling may render the jury's verdict unsafe; but see R v A (No 2) [2001] UKHL 25, [2002] 1 AC 45, [2001] 3 All ER 1, HL; R v R [2003] EWCA Crim 2754, [2003] All ER (D) 346 (Oct), in each of which the Human Rights Act 1998 s 3 was held to require a more flexible interpretation of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(2), thereby enabling such a ruling to be avoided.

9 See ibid s 41(6).

10 A 'relevant issue in the case' means any issue falling to be proved by the prosecution or defence in the trial of the defendant: ibid s 42(1)(a). No evidence or question may be regarded as relating to a relevant issue in the case if it appears to the court to be reasonable to assume that the purpose (or main purpose) for which it would be adduced or asked is to establish or elicit material for impugning the credibility of the complainant as a witness: s 41(4). This provision prevents the defence from invoking the myth or heresy that a complainant's sexual history may cast doubt on his or her general credibility; but it must be carefully handled so as to secure the availability of evidence of sexual behaviour which is properly admissible as bearing on the issue of consent:

R v A [2001] UKHL 25 at [138], [2002] 1 AC 45 at [138], [2001] 3 All ER 1 at [138] per Lord Hutton. See also R v Martin [2004] EWCA Crim 916, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 354 (sub nom R v M [2004] All ER (D) 487 (Mar)); R v F [2005] EWCA Crim 493, [2005] 1 WLR 2848, [2005] All ER (D) 58 (Mar); R v Darnell [2002] EWCA Crim 176, [2003] All ER (D) 24 (Feb), but cf R v Singh (Gulab) [2003] EWCA Crim 485, sub nom R v S [2003] All ER (D) 408 (Feb).

11 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(3)(a). An 'issue of consent' means any issue whether the complainant in fact consented to the conduct constituting the offence with which the defendant is charged (and accordingly does not include any issue as to the belief of the defendant that the complainant so consented): s 42(1)(b). In many of the offences under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 to which the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 now applies, consent or the lack of consent can never be an issue. Even in respect of crimes such as rape there will be no issue of consent where the defendant denies that any sexual contact occurred, nor where he now admits that the complainant did not consent but alleges that at the time he mistakenly believed she did: see R v A [2001] UKHL 25 at [79], [2002] 1 AC 45 at [79], [2001] 3 All ER 1 at [79] per Lord Hope of Craighead. Where the relevant issue is not one of consent, leave can more easily be given because the additional conditions or requirements imposed by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(1)(b) or (c) are not then applicable: see heads (b)-(c) in the text.

12 See notes 3, 4, 10 supra.

13 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(3)(b). The court may thus give leave for a complainant to be cross-examined about his or her sexual behaviour shortly before or shortly after the time of the alleged offence (eg within a 24 hour period before or after the alleged offence) or for the defence to call evidence of such behaviour: see R v A [2001] UKHL 25 at [40], [2002] 1 AC 45 at [40], [2001] 3 All ER 1 at [40] per Lord Steyn; R v Mukadi [2003] EWCA Crim 3765, [2004] Crim LR 373, [2003] All ER (D) 327 (Nov); R v T [2004] EWCA Crim 1220, [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 551, sub nom R v Tahed [2004] All ER (D) 346 (Feb).

Note that no leave is required before the complainant is cross-examined as to his or her behaviour at the time of (or during) the alleged offence, but where leave is required a court may grant such leave only where it considers this to be necessary under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(2)(b) in order to avoid the risk of an unsafe verdict: see R v Bahador [2005] EWCA Crim 396, sub nom R v Bahadoor [2005] All ER (D) 220 (Feb); and the text and note 6 supra.

14 Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41(3)(c)(i). 'Sexual behaviour' bears the same meaning as elsewhere in s 41 (see note 3 supra) save that it does not, in this context, exclude anything alleged to have taken place as part of the event which is the subject matter of the charge against the defendant: s 42(1)(c).

15 Ibid s 41(3)(c)(ii).

16 Ibid s 41(3)(c). Such behaviour (or alleged behaviour) may have involved the defendant or other persons and may have taken place either before or after the events giving rise to the alleged offence: R v Tahed [2004] EWCA Crim 1220, [2004] All ER (D) 346 (Feb), sub nom R v T [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 551.

There is no need for any 'striking similarity'. It is only a similarity that is required, not an identity. The similarity must be such as cannot reasonably be explained as coincidence. That does not necessitate that the similarity has to be in some rare or bizarre conduct. So long as the particular factor is of a significance which goes beyond the realm of what could reasonably be explained as a coincidence, it should suffice: R v A [2001] UKHL 25 at [135], [2002] 1 AC 45 at [135], [2001] 3 All ER 1 at [135] per Lord Clyde.

1446 Protection of complainants in proceedings for sexual offences

NOTE 4--The absence of a provision expressly stating that the 1999 Act s 41 continues to apply following the Criminal Justice Act 2003 does not prevent the court from having jurisdiction, in respect of trials that take place on or after the coming into force of the 2003 Act for sexual offences committed before that date, to preclude the cross-examination of a complainant about her sexual history: R v C [2007] EWCA Crim 2581,

1447. Procedure for applications for leave to adduce evidence as to complainant's sexual behaviour.

In proceedings for a sexual offence<sup>1</sup> an application for leave to adduce evidence as to any sexual behaviour of the complainant<sup>2</sup>, or to ask questions in cross-examination of any witness concerning such behaviour of the complainant, must be heard in private and in the absence of the complainant<sup>3</sup>.

Where such an application has been determined, the court must state in open court (but in the absence of the jury, if there is one): (1) its reasons for giving, or refusing, leave<sup>4</sup>; and (2) if it gives leave, the extent to which evidence may be adduced or questions asked in pursuance of the leave, and, if it is a magistrates' court, must cause those matters to be entered in the register of its proceedings<sup>5</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(9) CROSS-EXAMINATION AND RE-EXAMINATION/1448. Re-examination.

1448. Re-examination.

Following cross-examination, a witness may be re-examined by the party calling him. Re-examination must be confined to matters raised in cross-examination, although additional evidence may be adduced in so far as it bears on matters arising in cross-examination<sup>1</sup>. Re-examination may be carried out with a view to restoring the witness's original testimony, or with a view to re-establishing his credit.

Occasionally, evidence may be admissible in re-examination which was not admissible during examination in chief<sup>2</sup>. Where, for example, an allegation has been made that the witness has fabricated his evidence, it may be permissible for him to be re-examined in respect of a previous consistent statement, if this tends to rebut the allegation of fabrication<sup>3</sup>. This may happen if it can be shown that the witness made a statement consistent with his present testimony at a time before the alleged decision to fabricate was made.

Aside from cases in which the nature of the cross-examination allows the admission of evidence which otherwise would not have been admissible in examination in chief, the principles of re-examination are similar to those of examination in chief. Counsel therefore may not ask leading questions<sup>4</sup> or seek to elicit evidence which is otherwise inadmissible, nor may he treat his witness as hostile except with the leave of the judge<sup>5</sup>.

Where the prosecution calls a witness for the purpose of offering him to the defence for cross-examination, the failure of the prosecution to examine the witness in chief does not prevent his re-examination, but this must be confined to matters raised by his cross-examination<sup>6</sup>.

Where, during examination in chief, the prosecution has been granted leave to treat a witness as hostile, he may nevertheless be re-examined, but such re-examination should apparently be confined to 'completely and genuinely new' matters arising during cross-examination. Such matters should be identified before questions are put to the witness<sup>7</sup>.

A witness may be allowed to refresh his memory during re-examination. The principles are the same as those governing refreshing memory by a witness during his examination in chief<sup>8</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(10) CORROBORATION, LIES AND CARE WARNINGS/1449. General principles.

(10) CORROBORATION, LIES AND CARE WARNINGS

1449. General principles.

Corroboration, or corroborative evidence, is evidence which tends to confirm the truth or accuracy of other evidence by supporting it in some material particular<sup>1</sup>. Such evidence must itself be admissible and credible, and it must come from a source independent of any testimony which is to be supported by it<sup>2</sup>.

Corroborative evidence is always desirable where the truth or accuracy of the evidence it supports has been called into question, but it is only very rarely required by law. A conviction may at common law be based on the evidence of a single competent witness, or of a single document or exhibit, provided that this single piece of evidence is credible and by itself sufficient to convince the court or jury of the defendant's guilt<sup>3</sup>. Where the defendant bears a persuasive or evidential burden of proof, this burden can similarly be discharged, as a general rule, by one piece of evidence or by the testimony of a single witness<sup>4</sup>.

There are now very few statutory exceptions to this general rule<sup>5</sup>. Others have now been abolished<sup>6</sup>, as have certain common law rules of practice that formerly required judges to give juries complex and technical 'corroboration warnings' before allowing them to rely upon certain kinds of evidence that were considered inherently prone to the dangers of fabrication or fantasy<sup>7</sup>. It is now a matter for the judge's discretion what, if any, warning he considers appropriate in respect of evidence from a witness whose evidence may appear to be suspect or unreliable<sup>8</sup>.

1 R v Baskerville [1916] 2 KB 658, 12 Cr App Rep 81, CCA; R v Jenkins (1845) 1 Cox CC 177; DPP v Hester [1973] AC 296 at 325, 57 Cr App Rep 212 at 240, HL, per Lord Diplock. To be corroborative in the strict legal sense, prosecution evidence must implicate the defendant; evidence tending merely to show that a prosecution witness is truthful is not in itself corroborative of the case against the defendant: R v Baskerville supra; R v Donat (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 173, CA. On a charge of rape, evidence proving that sexual intercourse had taken place was not considered corroborative because it did not confirm either that rape had been committed or that the defendant had committed it: see James v R (1970) 55 Cr App Rep 299 at 303, PC, per Viscount Dilhorne.

2 DPP v Kilbourne [1973] AC 729, 57 Cr App Rep 381, HL; R v Whitehead [1929] 1 KB 99, 21 Cr App Rep 23, CCA. Evidence that is not strictly corroborative (either because it lacks independence or because it does not implicate the defendant) may still be useful, eg for the purpose of supporting the credibility of a witness or the accuracy of a witness's visual identification: R v Turnbull and others [1977] QB 224, 63 Cr App Rep 132, CA. See also PARA 1458 post.

4 The only exception is that a defence of insanity may be put to the jury only if supported by the written or oral evidence of at least two expert medical witnesses, at least one of whom is approved by the Secretary of State as having special experience in the diagnosis or treatment of mental disorder: see the Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 s 1(1).

5 Apart from the special rule concerning medical evidence of insanity (as to which see note 4 supra), these exceptions are considered in PARA 1450 post.

6 'Procuring' offences under the Sexual Offences Act 1956, together with offences under s 4 (administering drugs in order to facilitate unlawful sexual intercourse) all required corroboration, until this requirement was abrogated by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 33. The offences themselves were later repealed by the Sexual Offences Act 2003 ss 139, 140, Sch 6 para 11, Sch 7 (see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 71). The unsworn testimony of a 'child of tender years' similarly required corroboration before any person could be convicted on such evidence (Children and Young Persons Act 1933 s 38; and see DPP v Hester [1973] AC 296, 57 Cr App Rep 212, HL) but this requirement was repealed by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 34. The Treason Act 1795, which contained further corroboration requirements, was repealed by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 ss 36(3)(b), 120(2), Sch 10.

7 Any requirement whereby at a trial on indictment it was obligatory for the court to give the jury a warning about convicting the defendant on the uncorroborated evidence of a person merely because that person was (1) an alleged accomplice; or (2) where the offence charged was a sexual offence, the person in respect of whom it was alleged to have been committed, was abrogated by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 32. The common law practice of requiring a corroboration warning to be given in respect of any prosecution evidence given by a child (even when that evidence was given on oath) was abrogated by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 34. Children aged under 14 years must now give evidence unsworn: see PARAS 1403-1404 ante.

EVIDENCE/(10) CORROBORATION, LIES AND CARE WARNINGS/1450. Cases in which strict corroboration is still required.

1450. Cases in which strict corroboration is still required.

The only surviving cases in which strict corroboration of prosecution evidence remains a formal legal requirement are as follows. A person may not be convicted of any offence under the Perjury Act 1911<sup>1</sup> or of any other offence declared to be punishable as perjury or subornation of perjury<sup>2</sup> solely upon the evidence of one witness as to the falsity of any statement alleged to be false<sup>3</sup>. A similar rule applies to prosecutions for attempting to commit such offences<sup>4</sup>.

Corroboration of a sort is required in one further case. A motorist charged with a speeding offence may not be convicted solely on the evidence of one witness to the effect that, in the opinion of that witness, the motorist was exceeding a specified limit<sup>5</sup>. The witness may, however, support such opinion with his own reading of a speedometer or approved speed measuring device<sup>6</sup>. The requirement does not apply to opinion evidence based on an examination of accident damage or skid marks at the scene of an accident<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to perjury and related offences see PARA 712 et seq ante.

2 The corroboration rule also applies to offences under the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 89(1), because the Perjury Act 1911 has effect as if the Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 89 were contained in the Perjury Act 1911: Criminal Justice Act 1967 s 89(2).

3 See the Perjury Act 1911 s 13; and PARA 723 ante. This does not expressly refer to 'corroboration', but corroboration is what it requires: R v Hamid (1979) 69 Cr App Rep 324, CA. It is required, however, only as to the falsity of a statement. No corroboration is required as to the wilfulness of the defendant's conduct or any other element of an offence under the Perjury Act 1911: R v O'Connor [1980] Crim LR 43, CA.

4 See the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 s 2(1), (2)(g); and PARA 79 ante.

5 See the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 s 89(2); and ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARA 856. But this does not require that the evidence of a witness in a speeding case must always be corroborated, nor does it preclude a conviction where the evidence of a single witness includes, as part of his observations and conclusions, an expression of opinion: Crossland v DPP [1988] 3 All ER 712, [1988] RTR 417, DC, per Hutchison J.

EVIDENCE/(10) CORROBORATION, LIES AND CARE WARNINGS/1451. What may amount to corroboration.

1451. What may amount to corroboration.

Much of the law concerning what evidence may or may not suffice as corroboration is derived from cases concerning evidence given on behalf of the prosecution by children, accomplices of the defendant or complainants in sex cases. Strict corroboration warnings (identifying any possible sources of corroboration) were once mandatory in respect of such evidence<sup>1</sup>, but such requirements have now been abrogated<sup>2</sup>, and in consequence the importance of the issue is much reduced.

Evidence of a kind that would previously have been considered capable of providing corroboration will, however, remain capable of providing independent support for any evidence that might be considered suspect or unreliable in the absence of such support. Where, for example, the evidence of one witness might be doubted, the independent evidence of two or more might be considered worthy of belief<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, a defendant may in some cases unwittingly help to support or provide corroboration of the case against him, as for example where it is established that he has lied<sup>4</sup>, attempted to fabricate an alibi<sup>5</sup>, made incriminating admissions<sup>6</sup>, failed to deny an accusation made against him<sup>7</sup> or refused without good cause to provide a body sample for analysis<sup>8</sup>. Evidence of other misconduct which is admissible against the defendant may also be capable of affording corroboration<sup>9</sup>. Corroboration may be afforded by a combination of pieces of evidence which, taken together, tend to show that the defendant committed the crime, even though each item of evidence taken on its own would be insufficient<sup>10</sup>.

Where two persons are tried together, corroboration of the evidence against one does not necessarily amount to corroboration in respect of the other<sup>11</sup>.

3 See R v Sims [1946] KB 531, [1946] 1 All ER 697, CCA. Evidence which requires corroboration may be corroborated by evidence which itself requires corroboration, so that two suspect witnesses may each corroborate the other: DPP v Hester [1973] AC 296, 57 Cr App Rep 212, HL. Where there appears to be a risk of possible collusion between witnesses who might otherwise be seen to corroborate or support each other's stories, the jury must be directed not to accept the evidence unless they are satisfied that it is reliable and true and not tainted by collusion or other defects. If, in the course of the trial, the judge forms the view that no reasonable jury could be so satisfied, he should direct the jury that the evidence is not to be relied on, either as corroboration or for any other prosecution purpose; otherwise it is a matter for the jury: R v H [1995] 2 AC 596, sub nom R v H(A) [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 437, HL.

1452. Direction as to corroboration.

In those (now rare) cases where corroboration is still required by statute<sup>1</sup>, the trial judge must bring the need for corroboration to the attention of the jury, but it is not essential that he should refer to the relevant statute<sup>2</sup>. No particular form of words need be used in warning the jury so long as the direction is explicit and intelligible<sup>3</sup> and the legal requirement is explained<sup>4</sup>. The summing up should not contain a general disquisition on corroboration in legal language, but should be tailored to the particular circumstances of the case<sup>5</sup>.

Where there is evidence capable of amounting to corroboration, the judge must indicate that evidence to the jury<sup>6</sup>. Evidence which is incapable of affording corroboration, but which might be thought by the jury to have that effect, should also be identified<sup>7</sup>. It is the function of the trial judge to rule whether or not evidence is in law capable of amounting to corroboration, and, if it is, it is for the jury to decide whether the evidence in fact affords corroboration<sup>8</sup>.

1453. Judicial warnings in respect of suspect evidence.

It is no longer obligatory for a judge to direct the jury that it is dangerous to convict a defendant on the uncorroborated evidence of a complainant in a sexual case or of an accomplice<sup>1</sup>; but in some cases (not necessarily cases involving sexual offences or accomplice evidence) a judge may still consider that some kind of warning is necessary<sup>2</sup>. The Court of Appeal has provided the following guidelines as to how such cases should be approached<sup>3</sup>.

- 2186 (1) It is a matter for the judge's discretion what, if any, warning he considers appropriate in respect of such a witness or indeed in respect of any other witness in whatever type of case. Whether he chooses to give a warning and on what terms will depend on the circumstances of the case, the issues raised and the content and quality of the witness's evidence.
- 2187 (2) In some cases, it may be appropriate for the judge to warn the jury to exercise caution before acting on the unsupported evidence of a witness. This will not be so simply because the witness is a complainant of a sexual offence, nor will it necessarily be so because the witness is alleged to be an accomplice. There will need to be an evidential basis for suggesting that the evidence of the witness may be unreliable<sup>4</sup>. An evidential basis does not include a mere suggestion by cross-examining counsel.
- 2188 (3) If any question arises as to whether the judge should give a special warning in respect of the witness, it is desirable that the question be resolved by discussion with counsel in the absence of the jury before final speeches.
- 2189 (4) Where the judge does decide to give some warning in respect of the witness, it will be appropriate to do so as part of the judge's review of the evidence and his comments as to how the jury should evaluate it, rather than as a set-piece legal direction.
- 2190 (5) Where some warning is required, it will be for the judge to decide the strength and terms of the warning. It does not have to be invested with the whole florid regime of the old corroboration rules<sup>5</sup>.
- 2191 (6) Attempts to re-impose the straitjacket of the old corroboration rules are strongly to be deprecated.
- 2192 (7) The Court of Appeal will be disinclined to interfere with the trial judge's exercise of his discretion, save in a case where that exercise is unreasonable in the Wednesbury<sup>6</sup> sense.

'Cell mate confessions', in which it is alleged that the defendant confessed to or boasted of his crime to a fellow prisoner when in custody, will often require some kind of warning, because of the ease with which such evidence can be fabricated and because of possible issues as to the motivation and integrity of any witnesses to the confession<sup>7</sup>. There is, however, no absolute rule to the effect that any specific warning is necessarily required in such cases. Such a rule would be inconsistent with the guidelines mentioned above<sup>8</sup>.

4 R v Makanjuola, R v Easton [1995] 3 All ER 730 at 732, [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 469 at 472, CA, per Lord Taylor CJ: 'The judge will often consider that no special warning is required at all. Where, however, the witness has been shown to be unreliable, the judge may consider it necessary to urge caution. In a more extreme case, if the witness is shown to have lied, to have made previous false complaints, or to bear the defendant some grudge, a stronger warning may be thought to be appropriate and the judge may suggest it would be wise to look for some supporting material before acting on the impugned witness's evidence.' EVIDENCE/(10) CORROBORATION, LIES AND CARE WARNINGS/1454. Defendant's lies or other self-incriminating behaviour.

1454. Defendant's lies or other self-incriminating behaviour.

A defendant may knowingly or unknowingly corroborate or support the case against him through his own admissions<sup>1</sup>, lies<sup>2</sup>, or other self-incriminating behaviour<sup>3</sup>. His failure promptly to disclose matters later relied upon in his defence<sup>4</sup>, to answer police questions concerning apparently incriminating facts<sup>5</sup> and/or to testify at his trial<sup>6</sup> may also enable a court or jury to draw such inferences as may seem appropriate; and this may include the inference that the defendant has (or had when first questioned) no answer to the prosecution case or none that could withstand cross-examination<sup>7</sup>.

Lies or apparent lies told by a defendant raise particular difficulties<sup>8</sup>. Where it appears that the defendant has lied, whether before the trial or in the course of his evidence, or both (for example by concocting or attempting to concoct a false alibi) and there appears to be a danger that a jury will jump at once to the conclusion that he must therefore be guilty, the jury must be warned that such lies may support or corroborate other evidence against him if, but only if, certain criteria are satisfied<sup>9</sup>, namely:

- 2193 (1) The lie must be deliberate.
- 2194 (2) It must refer to a material issue.
- 2195 (3) The motive for the lie must be a realisation of guilt and a fear of the truth. The jury should in appropriate cases be reminded that people sometimes lie, for example, in an attempt to bolster a just cause, or out of shame or out of a wish to conceal disgraceful behaviour from their family<sup>10</sup>.
- 2196 (4) It must clearly be shown to be a lie by independent evidence, other than that which it is taken to support<sup>11</sup>.

It does not follow that such a direction is needed wherever there is a conflict between the evidence of the defendant and that of the prosecution's witnesses. In some cases the jury merely has to decide whether to believe the defendant or his accusers, and in such a case a complex direction as to inferences from lies would merely confuse matters<sup>12</sup>.

9 R v Lucas [1981] QB 720, 73 Cr App Rep 159, CA. Such a direction is commonly referred to as a 'Lucas direction': see the criteria set out in heads (1)-(4) in the text. See also R v Burge, R v Pegg [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 163, CA; R v Armstrong [2005] EWCA Crim 1299, [2005] All ER (D) 139 (May).

10 See also R v Goodway [1993] 4 All ER 894, 98 Cr App Rep 11, CA; R v Taylor [1998] Crim LR 822, CA. In cases involving alibis, juries may need to be warned that false alibis are sometimes given in order to boost genuine defences (R v Lesley [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 39, CA), but such a warning is not invariably required (R v Harron [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 457, CA).

11 The jury may simply prefer the evidence of a prosecution witness to that of the defendant, and may accordingly conclude that the defendant has lied, but it would be absurd in that kind of case to treat the conclusion that he has lied as supportive of their conclusion that the prosecution witness is truthful, because that would involve manifestly circular logic: see R v Chapman [1973] QB 774, 57 Cr App Rep 511, CA.

A lie in relation to one charge may corroborate another only if it amounts to an attempt by the defendant to lie his way out of both charges: R v West (1984) 79 Cr App Rep 45, CA.

12 A Lucas direction is generally required only where: (1) the defence relies on an alibi; (2) the judge considers it desirable or necessary to suggest that the jury should look for support or corroboration of one piece of evidence from other evidence in the case, and amongst that other evidence draws attention to lies told, or allegedly told, by the defendant; (3) the prosecution seeks to show that something said, either in or out of court, in relation to a separate and distinct issue was a lie, and to rely on that lie as evidence of guilt in relation to the charge which is sought to be proved; or (4) although the prosecution has not adopted that approach, the judge reasonably envisages that there is a real danger that the jury may do so: R v Burge, R v Pegg [1996] 1 Cr App Rep 163, CA. EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1455. Proof of identity of defendant.

(11) IDENTIFICATION

1455. Proof of identity of defendant.

The identity of the defendant as the person who committed an alleged offence may be established in various ways, notably by visual or aural (voice) identification<sup>1</sup>, by fingerprints (including palm prints)<sup>2</sup>, by skin or footwear impressions<sup>3</sup>, by DNA profiles obtained from body samples<sup>4</sup>, by bite marks and dental impressions<sup>5</sup>, by handwriting<sup>6</sup>, by photographic or video evidence<sup>7</sup>, by evidence of his propensity to commit such an offence<sup>8</sup> and by evidence of any incriminating articles, injuries or marks found on him or his clothing or in his possession<sup>9</sup>.

Where the defendant has surrendered to bail for an offence, it may be inferred that he was the person arrested, charged and bailed in respect of it<sup>10</sup>. Difficulties may, however, arise where the evidence purporting to identify the defendant is a name and address given by a person who claimed to be the defendant, but who, according to the defendant, was not him at all<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to visual identification see PARAS 1456-1458 post; as to identification by voice see PARA 1459 post.

2 See PARA 1460 post.

3 For the meaning of 'skin impression' see PARA 1027 ante. As to the taking of such impressions see Code D: Code of Practice for the Identification of Persons by Police Officers para 6. As to the taking of footwear impressions, see PARA 1022 ante. As to Code D see PARA 1010 ante. As to the Codes of Practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 see further PARA 856 ante.

4 As to the use of DNA evidence at trial see PARA 1461 post. As to the procedure for taking body samples etc see Code D para 6; and PARA 1027 et seq ante. Intimate samples include blood, semen or tissue fluid, urine, pubic hair, dental impressions and swabs taken from a person's genitals or from orifices other than the mouth: see the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 65(1) (definition as substituted and amended); and PARA 1027 ante. Non-intimate samples include saliva, skin impressions, mouth swabs and swabs not taken from body orifices: see s 65(1) (definition substituted and amended); and PARA 1027 ante. Hair samples may be plucked with roots for DNA testing: see s 63A(2) (as added); and PARA 1029 ante. Save as provided by s 63B (as added), an intimate sample may be taken from a person in police detention (or from a person who is not in police detention but from whom, in the course of the investigation of an offence, two or more non-intimate samples suitable for the same means of analysis have been taken which have proved insufficient) only if a police officer of at least the rank of inspector authorises it to be taken and only if the appropriate consent is given: see s 62(1), (1A) (as added); and PARA 1028 ante.

Where the appropriate consent to the taking of an intimate sample has been refused without good cause, in any proceedings against that person for an offence (1) the court, in determining whether there is a case to answer; (2) a judge, in deciding whether to grant an application made by the defendant for dismissal under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 Sch 3; and (3) a court or jury, in determining whether that person is guilty of the offence charged, may draw such inferences from the refusal as appear proper: see the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 62(10) (as amended); and PARA 1028 ante. A non-intimate sample may in some cases be taken without consent: see s 63 (as amended); and PARA 1029 ante.

The court has a power at common law to exclude evidence of an incriminating sample where to admit it would be adverse to the fairness of the proceedings: R v Apicella (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 295, [1986] Crim LR 238, CA. As to the principles governing the power of a court to exclude admissible prosecution evidence see PARA 1365 ante.

5 As to the taking of dental impressions (which are intimate samples under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 65(1) (as amended)) see s 62(9) (as substituted); and PARA 1028 ante.

6 As to the admissibility of expert and non-expert evidence of handwriting or signatures, see PARAS 1484, 1496 post. The recurrence of different writings of the same misspelling may tend to prove the identity of the writer: Brookes v Tichborne (1850) 5 Exch 929; R v Voisin [1918] 1 KB 531, 13 Cr App Rep 89, CCA; R v Nottle [2004] EWCA Crim 599, [2004] All ER (D) 442 (Mar). Identification may also be aided by images taken by security cameras (R v Dodson, R v Williams [1984] 1 WLR 971, 79 Cr App Rep 220, CA) and such evidence may be enhanced by evidence from expert witnesses using techniques such as facial mapping (R v Stockwell (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 260, CA; R v Hookway [1999] Crim LR 750, CA; A-G's Ref (No 2 of 2002) [2002] EWCA Crim 2373, [2003] 1 Cr App Rep 321, CA; R v Gray [2003] EWCA Crim 1001; R v Gardner [2004] EWCA Crim 1639, [2004] All ER (D) 327 (Jun); R v Mitchell [2005] EWCA Crim 731, [2005] All ER (D) 182 (May)). As to the admissibility of expert evidence concerning the interpretation of video images see also R v Clare [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 333, CA.

A witness who has seen a video made at the time of an offence may identify the defendant even though the video has been erased: Taylor v Chief Constable of Cheshire [1987] 1 All ER 225, 84 Cr App Rep 191, DC. EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1456. Visual identification by witnesses: general principles.

1456. Visual identification by witnesses: general principles.

Where there is an issue concerning the visual identification of a suspect by one or more witnesses (or where there is a witness who may be able to make such an identification) the police must ordinarily conduct a pre-trial identification procedure<sup>1</sup>. Where the prosecution case at trial relies wholly or substantially on visual identification evidence, judges must follow the guidelines issued by the Court of Appeal when directing juries as to that evidence or when determining whether there is a case fit to go to the jury<sup>2</sup>.

No such identification issue arises (and therefore no such procedures or guidelines are applicable) where it is clear that the witness can provide only a general description of an offender or possible offender, or a description of clothing worn by an offender or of a vehicle apparently connected with the offence<sup>3</sup>. Nor does any identification issue arise, even where the witness claims to have seen the defendant commit the offence, if there is no suggestion that the witness could be mistaken, rather than deliberately untruthful<sup>4</sup>.

Where there is any possibility that a witness may have mistakenly identified a close acquaintance or relative in poor visibility or in a fleeting or distant glimpse, no useful purpose may be served by conducting a pre-trial identification procedure<sup>5</sup>, but it will still be necessary for the jury to be warned as to the dangers of mistaken recognition in accordance with the guidelines issued by the Court of Appeal<sup>6</sup>.

A 'dock identification', in which the defendant is identified in court by a witness who has not identified him in any pre-trial procedure, is not inadmissible in law or necessarily incompatible with the defendant's right to a fair trial<sup>7</sup>, but it is generally considered to be an unsatisfactory form of identification and a witness should not ordinarily be invited by the prosecution to make such an identification at a trial on indictment<sup>8</sup>.

At trial, a previous statement made by a witness is admissible as evidence of any matter stated of which oral evidence by him would be admissible, if the statement identifies or describes a person, object or place and while giving evidence the witness indicates that to the best of his belief he made the statement and that to the best of his belief it states the truth<sup>9</sup>. Hearsay evidence of pre-trial identification may also be admissible in some other cases, notably where the witness in question is dead or unavailable to testify on that issue<sup>10</sup>.

1 Code D: Code of Practice for the Identification of Persons by Police Officers para 3.12. See further PARA 1457 post. EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1457. Pre-trial identification procedures.

1457. Pre-trial identification procedures.

Pre-trial identification procedures should ordinarily be conducted in accordance with the current Code of Practice<sup>1</sup>. Where a pre-trial identification procedure is required, and a known suspect is willing and available to take part<sup>2</sup>, the police should ordinarily offer to arrange a video identification, in which witnesses are shown moving (video) images of the suspect and of at least eight others persons who as far as possible resemble him<sup>3</sup>, but a formal identity parade may be offered instead if it is considered to be practicable and more suitable<sup>4</sup>. A group identification procedure, in which the suspect is viewed by the witness in an informal group of persons, may be used where it is considered practicable to arrange and more suitable than either of the first two procedures<sup>5</sup>.

A confrontation between the suspect and the witness does not require the suspect's co-operation and should be used only where all other options are impracticable<sup>6</sup>, but force cannot be used to make a suspect reveal his face<sup>7</sup>. Video identification (if necessary using still or covertly recorded images) or group identification may still be practicable in some cases despite a lack of co-operation, and if so should be used instead of a confrontation<sup>8</sup>.

Witnesses must not be shown photographs or composite images for identification purposes if there is a suspect already available to be asked to take part in an identification procedure<sup>9</sup>. Where no such suspect is available, photographs etc may be shown to witnesses in accordance with procedures prescribed in the Code of Practice<sup>10</sup>, or published via local or national media<sup>11</sup>.

1 See Code D: Code of Practice for the Identification of Persons by Police Officers; and PARA 1010 ante. As to the Codes of Practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 see further PARA 856 ante. In all civil and criminal proceedings the Code is admissible in evidence; and, if any provision of the code appears to the court or tribunal conducting the proceedings to be relevant to any question arising in the proceedings, it is to be taken into account in determining that question: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 67(11) (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 332, Sch 37 Pt 1).

Failure to observe the provisions of Code D may lead to the exclusion of identification evidence: R v Gaynor [1988] Crim LR 242; R v Gall [1989] Crim LR 745, CA. However, the fact that there has been such a breach does not of itself render the evidence inadmissible; the trial judge must exercise his discretion in deciding whether any unfairness to the defendant justifies the exclusion of the evidence: R v Grannell (1989) 90 Cr App Rep 149, CA; R v Khan [1997] Crim LR 584, CA. See also R v Malashev [1997] Crim LR 587, CA; R v Huntley [2006] All ER (D) 95 (Jun), CA. A judge should give reasons if he decides to admit identification evidence obtained following breaches of Code D (R v Allen [1995] Crim LR 643, CA) and if the defendant has been deprived of the safeguard of properly testing a witness's ability to make an identification, the jury should be warned of that fact and invited to take it into account, giving it such weight as it thinks fit (R v H [2003] EWCA Crim 174, [2003] All ER (D) 31 (Feb)).

As to the conduct of identification procedures see Code D: Annexes A-F. Where a witness fails to make an identification at that time but subsequently does so, the later identification remains admissible in law, although it may carry less weight: R v Creamer (1984) 80 Cr App Rep 248, CA; R v Willoughby [1999] 2 Cr App Rep 82, CA. An identifying witness must not be prompted or encouraged in any way: R v Bundy (1910) 5 Cr App 270, CCA; R v Chapman (1911) 7 Cr App Rep 53, CCA; R v Willoughby supra. Where a witness is unable to make a positive identification (or purports to identify a volunteer or foil at an identity parade or group identification) that witness may still be able to testify as to other matters at trial (R v George [2002] EWCA Crim 1923, [2003] Crim LR 282).

2 As to cases where there is a known suspect who is not (or has ceased to be) available see Code D para 3.21. Where there is no known suspect see Code D para 3.2, by which potential witnesses to identify may be taken to a particular place or neighbourhood to see whether they can make a 'street identification'. If a street identification can be made in this way, the police should then conduct an appropriate procedure for the identification of a known and available suspect: see R v Forbes [2001] 1 AC 473, [2001] 1 All ER 686, HL.

EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1458. Weight or sufficiency of visual identification evidence at trial.

1458. Weight or sufficiency of visual identification evidence at trial.

There is a special risk of mistake inherent in evidence of visual identification. Therefore, whenever the case against a defendant depends wholly or substantially on the correctness of one or more visual identifications which are alleged to be mistaken, the judge must warn the jury of the special need for caution before convicting in reliance on the correctness of the identification. In addition he should instruct the jury as to the reasons behind the warning (including the fact that it is based on the lessons of past experience) and refer to the possibility that a mistaken witness may be a convincing one and that a number of identifying witnesses may all be equally mistaken<sup>1</sup>.

Recognition of an acquaintance may be more reliable than identification of a stranger, but a jury must nevertheless be warned that mistakes may still occur<sup>2</sup>.

Where the quality of identification evidence is good, the jury may safely be left to assess it. Where it is poor, the judge should withdraw the case from the jury and direct an acquittal unless there is other evidence which goes to support the correctness of the identification<sup>3</sup>.

A failure to follow the above guidelines is likely to result in the quashing of a conviction on appeal<sup>4</sup>.

1 R v Turnbull [1977] QB 224, 63 Cr App Rep 132, CA. See also Reid v R [1990] 1 AC 363, [1993] 4 All ER 95n, PC. The judge must also direct the jury to examine closely the circumstances in which the identification by each witness came to be made, and attention should be drawn to any material discrepancy between the description given to the police by the identifying witness and the actual appearance of the defendant. The prosecution should supply the defence with particulars of any description containing such a material discrepancy, and in all cases, if the defendant asks for them, he should be given particulars of any description the police were first given: R v Turnbull supra. As to the direction to be given to the jury see also the specimen direction (based on the Turnbull guidelines) published by the Judicial Studies Board which is the briefest direction permissible in such cases (R v Nash [2004] EWCA Crim 2696, [2005] Crim LR 232, CA; Langford v The State [2005] UKPC 20, [2005] 4 LRC 433).

The direction should be given even where the opportunity for observation was good and the witness is convinced that he has correctly identified the defendant (R v Tyson [1985] Crim LR 48, CA; Beckford v R (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 409, [1993] Crim LR 944, PC) and even where the principal basis of the defence case is that the witness is telling deliberate lies, although such a direction may be inappropriate and confusing in exceptional cases where the only possible issue is the witness's willingness to tell the truth (R v Courtneil [1990] Crim LR 115, CA; R v Bentley (1991) 99 Cr App Rep 342, CA; Shand v R [1996] 1 All ER 511, [1996] 2 Cr App Rep 204, PC).

The guidance given in R v Turnbull supra should also be followed by magistrates' courts when dealing with identification evidence: McShane v Northumbria Chief Constable (1979) 72 Cr App Rep 208, DC.

An attempt by the defendant to change his appearance before the trial may be the subject of adverse inferences: R v Byrne, R v Trump [1987] Crim LR 689, CA.

2 R v Turnbull [1977] QB 224, 63 Cr App Rep 132, CA. The guidelines laid down in that case are intended primarily to deal with the problems inherent in the 'fleeting glance' identification and not for example with the problem which arises when the question is which of a number of persons known to have been present at the scene of an offence did a particular act: R v Oakwell [1978] 1 All ER 1223 at 1227, 66 Cr App Rep 174 at 178, CA; R v Curry, R v Keeble [1983] Crim LR 737, CA; R v Hewett [1978] RTR 174, CA; R v Nelson, R v McLeod (1983) Times, 18 November, CA. The rules in R v Turnbull supra are to be applied flexibly bearing in mind the circumstances of the case: R v Keane (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 247 at 248, CA. As to their application to the identification of the defendant's alleged accomplice or companion see R v Bath (1990) 154 JP 849, CA; but cf R v White [2000] All ER (D) 602, CA, where the correctness of that identification was not in doubt.

3 R v Turnbull [1977] QB 224, 63 Cr App Rep 132, CA; Daley v R [1994] AC 117, [1993] 4 All ER 86, PC; R v MacMath [1997] Crim LR 586. Identification evidence may be poor even though it is given by a number of witnesses (R v Weeder (1980) 71 Cr App Rep 228, CA; R v Breslin (1984) 80 Cr App Rep 226, CA) or by a police officer (Reid v R [1990] 1 AC 363, [1993] 4 All ER 95n, PC). This does not preclude the possibility that one identification may support another: R v Shelton and Carter [1981] Crim LR 776, CA; R v Barnes [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 491, CA. Evidence in support of an identification need not amount to corroboration in the technical legal sense: R v Turnbull supra; and see R v Long (1973) 57 Cr App Rep 871, CA. As to corroboration generally see PARA 1449 et seq ante.

A false alibi may support an identification if the sole reason for it is to deceive the jury: R v Turnbull supra; R v Keane (1977) 65 Cr App Rep 247, CA. See also R v Penman (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 44, CA; cf R v Lucas [1981] QB 720, 73 Cr App Rep 159, CA; and PARA 1450 ante. The trial judge must identify for the jury any evidence capable of affording support: R v Turnbull supra; R v Allan, R v Willis (1990) Times, 2 January, CA. When R v Turnbull supra was decided, the defendant's failure to testify could not be considered as providing any support for identification evidence against him, but such failure may now enable inferences to be drawn: see PARA 1555 post.

When issues are raised as to the quality or probative value of identification evidence, a trial judge does not ordinarily need to hold a trial within a trial in order to decide whether such evidence should be admitted: R v Walshe (1980) 74 Cr App Rep 85, CA; R v Beveridge (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 255, CA; R v Flemming (1987) 86 Cr App Rep 32, CA.

See also R v Pope (1986) 85 Cr App Rep 201, CA; Reid v R [1990] 1 AC 363, [1993] 4 All ER 95n, PC. EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1459. Voice identification.

1459. Voice identification.

The inherent risks of mistake in auditory (voice) identification or recognition are broadly similar to those in visual identification or recognition, and such evidence must be approached with even greater caution<sup>1</sup>. The judge must accordingly warn the jury of the need for such caution before convicting in reliance on the accuracy of such evidence, especially if this comes from a witness who has no training in making auditory identifications<sup>2</sup>.

Where voice recordings are available, expert evidence may be admissible as to the identity of the speaker<sup>3</sup>. The members of the jury must then be allowed to hear the recordings for themselves, but should be warned of the dangers of relying on their own untrained ears<sup>4</sup>.

As with visual identification, evidence of voice identification or recognition may be admissible alongside other evidence, even if it would not of itself be sufficient to prove guilt<sup>5</sup>.

It is not necessary to hold a voice identification procedure to render admissible evidence of identification by voice: R v Gummerson supra; R v Neal [2003] EWCA Crim 3465, [2003] All ER (D) 337 (Nov).

Code D: Code of Practice for the Identification of Persons by Police Officers concentrates on visual identification procedures and contains no detailed provisions concerning voice identification procedures. However, this does not preclude the police making use of aural identification procedures such as a voice identification parade where they judge this appropriate: Code D para 1.2. As to Code D see PARA 1010 ante. As to the Codes of Practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 see further PARA 856 ante.

EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1460. Identification by fingerprints.

1460. Identification by fingerprints.

Identification by fingerprints<sup>1</sup> by a person expert in identification by such means may in a proper case be sufficient even though there is no other means of identification<sup>2</sup>. The '16 point standard', by which, as a matter of expert practice, a positive fingerprint match was once thought to require a minimum of 16 matching ridge characteristics, never had any formal legal status<sup>3</sup> and is no longer applied by fingerprint experts in England and Wales<sup>4</sup>. Fingerprint evidence may tend to prove the guilt of the defendant, even if there are only a few similar ridge characteristics, but it may, in such a case, have little weight. It may be excluded in the exercise of judicial discretion, if its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value<sup>5</sup>. Courts or juries must take into account the number of similar ridge characteristics identified, the presence of any dissimilar characteristics, the size of the crime print (a given number of matches in a fragment of a print may be more compelling than a similar number in a complete print) and the quality and clarity of that print (including any evidence of injury to the person who left the print, and any smearing or contamination of the print<sup>6</sup>).

The prosecution must provide admissible evidence that the fingerprints in question belong to the defendant; his failure to deny that fingerprints are his cannot suffice<sup>7</sup>.

Evidence relating to the fingerprints of a defendant is not rendered inadmissible by procedural irregularities when they were taken, although the court has discretion to exclude prosecution evidence where significant unfair prejudice would otherwise result<sup>8</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(11) IDENTIFICATION/1461. Identification by DNA evidence.

1461. Identification by DNA evidence.

Where the prosecution seeks to rely on DNA evidence to identify the defendant, it is essential that its provenance is established by admissible evidence<sup>1</sup>. It is also essential that the statistical significance of any match between DNA profiles is properly explained to the jury<sup>2</sup>. A jury should not be invited to use complex statistical formulae, such as Bayes's Theorem when evaluating such evidence, because in the context of a criminal trial the use of such evidence would be impractical and a recipe for confusion<sup>3</sup>.

(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE

1462. Meaning of documentary evidence.

The term 'document' bears different meanings in different contexts. At common law, it has been held that any written thing capable of being evidence is properly described as a document<sup>1</sup>, and this clearly includes printed text, diagrams, maps and plans<sup>2</sup>. Photographs are also regarded as documents at common law<sup>3</sup>.

Varying definitions have been adopted in legislation<sup>4</sup>. A document may be relied on as real evidence (where its existence, identity or appearance, rather than its content, is in issue<sup>5</sup>), or as documentary evidence. Documentary evidence denotes reliance on a document as proof of its terms or contents<sup>6</sup>. The question of the authenticity of a document is to be decided by the jury<sup>7</sup>.

1 R v Daye [1908] 2 KB 333 at 340, DC, per Darling J.

2 A tombstone bearing an inscription is in this sense a document (see Mortimer v M'Callan (1840) 6 M & W 58), as is a coffin-plate bearing an inscription (see R v Edge (1842) Wills, Circumstantial Evidence (6th Edn) 309).

3 See also Lyell v Kennedy (No 3) (1884) 27 ChD 1, 50 LT 730, CA; Senior v Holdsworth, ex p Independent Television News Ltd [1976] QB 23, [1975] 2 All ER 1009, CA; Victor Chandler International Ltd v Customs and Excise Comrs [2000] 1 All ER 160, [1999] 1 WLR 2160, ChD.

4 For the purposes of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, 'document' means anything in which information of any description is recorded: s 118 (amended by the Civil Evidence Act 1995 s 15(1), Sch 1 para 9(3)). For the purposes of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 Pt 11 (ss 98-141) (as amended) (evidence), the definition is the same (see s 134(1)), save that for the purposes of Pt 11 Ch 3 (ss 137-141) (which includes the provision relating to refreshing memory (see s 139; and PARA 1438 ante)) it excludes any recording of sounds or moving images (see s 140).

5 See eg R v Elworthy (1867) LR 1 CCR 103, 32 JP 54, CCR; Boyle v Wiseman (1855) 11 Exch 360. Documents produced by purely mechanical means may constitute real evidence even where reliance is placed on their content: The Statue of Liberty, Sapporo Maru (Owners) v Statue of Liberty (Owners) [1968] 2 All ER 195, [1968] 1 WLR 739 (film of radar echoes); R v Wood (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 23, CA (computer used as calculator); Castle v Cross [1985] 1 All ER 87, [1984] 1 WLR 1372, DC (printout of evidential breath-testing device). 7 R v Wayte (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 110 at 118, CA. The admissibility of a document is, following the general rule, a question for the judge: see PARA 1360 ante. A document which the law requires to be stamped, but which is unstamped, is admissible in criminal proceedings: Stamp Act 1891 s 14(4) (amended by the Finance Act 1999 s 109(3), Sch 12 para 3(1), (5)).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE/1463. The primary evidence rule.

1463. The primary evidence rule.

Under the 'primary evidence rule' at common law<sup>1</sup>, it was once thought necessary for the contents of any private document to be proved by production of the original document<sup>2</sup>. A copy of an original document, or oral evidence as to the contents of that document, was considered admissible only in specified circumstances, namely: (1) where another party to the proceedings failed to comply with a notice to produce the original which was in his possession (or where the need to produce it was so clear that no such notice was required)<sup>3</sup>; (2) where production of the original was shown to be impossible<sup>4</sup>; (3) where the original appeared to have been lost or destroyed<sup>5</sup>; and (4) where a third party in possession of the original lawfully declined to produce it<sup>6</sup>.

This rule (and the best evidence rule of which it was thought to be a part) no longer appears to enjoy judicial support. In criminal cases it has been said that, '... the only remaining instance of it is that, if an original document is available in one's hands, one must produce it'<sup>7</sup> and the civil courts subsequently went further still in denying the existence of the rule as a rule of law<sup>8</sup>.

There are also various circumstances in which the use of copies of documents as evidence is expressly authorised by legislation<sup>9</sup>. If the primary evidence rule still survives in any form at all, its application must be largely confined to cases in which oral evidence is offered to prove the contents of a missing or unavailable document<sup>10</sup>. In such cases, however, the better view appears to be that the 'admissibility' of such evidence of the contents of documents is now entirely dependent upon whether or not any weight can be attached to that evidence<sup>11</sup>.

1 As to the related 'best evidence rule' see PARA 1367 ante.

2 As to the admissibility of examined or certified copies of public documents at common law see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 884 et seq.

1464. Copies of documents admissible by legislation.

Where a statement in a document<sup>1</sup> is admissible as evidence in criminal proceedings<sup>2</sup>, the statement may be proved by producing either: (1) the document<sup>3</sup>; or (2) (whether or not the document exists) a copy<sup>4</sup> of the document or of the material part of it, authenticated in whatever way the court may approve<sup>5</sup>. Alternatively, in criminal proceedings<sup>6</sup> the contents of a document may, whether or not the document is still in existence, be proved by the production of an enlargement of a microfilm copy of that document or of the material part of it, authenticated in such manner as the court may approve<sup>7</sup>.

A copy of any entry in a banker's book is in all legal proceedings to be received as prima facie evidence of such entry, and of the matters, transactions, and accounts therein recorded<sup>8</sup>. The content of a public document may be proved by means of a certified or examined copy<sup>9</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'document' see PARA 1462 note 4 ante.

2 'Criminal proceedings' means criminal proceedings in relation to which the strict rules of evidence apply: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 134(1). As to whether a document contains a statement and if so whether that statement is hearsay and if so whether that statement may nevertheless be admissible see PARA 1519 et seq post.

3 There may be more than one original document in existence: see eg Forbes v Samuel [1913] 3 KB 706.

4 'Copy', in relation to a document, means anything on to which information recorded in the document has been copied, by whatever means and whether directly or indirectly: Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 134(1).

5 Ibid s 133. A court will need to be satisfied that a copy is a true and accurate copy, which may involve proving the accuracy of any intermediate copies of which it is itself a copy: see R v Collins (1960) 44 Cr App Rep 170, CCA; R v Wayte (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 110, CA (the fact that it is easy to construct a false document by photocopying does not render a photocopy inadmissible; the fact that it is a photocopy goes to weight only).

6 These include for this purpose: (1) proceedings in the United Kingdom or elsewhere before a court-martial constituted under the Army Act 1955, the Air Force Act 1955 or the Naval Discipline Act 1957; (2) proceedings in the United Kingdom or elsewhere before the Courts-Martial Appeal Court: (a) on an appeal from a court-martial so constituted; or (b) on a reference under the Courts-Martial (Appeals) Act 1968 s 34; and (3) proceedings before a standing civilian court: see the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 82(1) (amended by the Armed Forces Act 1996 ss 5, 35(2), Sch 1 para 107, Sch 7 Pt I; and prospectively amended by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 67(3), Sch 6). As to courts-martial see ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 448 et seq.

7 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 71. 'Copy', in relation to a document, means anything onto which information recorded in the document has been copied, by whatever means and whether directly or indirectly; and 'statement' means any representation of fact, however made: s 72(1) (definitions substituted by the Civil Evidence Act 1995 s 15(1), Sch 1 para 9(2)). As to the admissibility of copies of entries in bankers' books see the Bankers' Books Evidence Act 1879 s 5 (as amended); CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 939; FINANCIAL SERVICES AND INSTITUTIONS vol 49 (2008) PARA 907 et seq.

1465. Production of original documents in court.

As a matter of practice (but no longer as a rule of law) the prosecution will ordinarily seek to produce where possible at the trial the original version of any allegedly incriminating document<sup>1</sup>. If the document is believed to be in the defendant's possession, it may be obtained by means of a search warrant in those cases in which a search warrant may be issued<sup>2</sup>. A third party who is in possession of such a document may be served a witness summons requiring him to produce it<sup>3</sup>, but the defendant may not be served with such an order, since it would require him to produce evidence against himself<sup>4</sup>.

Special powers may be invoked in the investigation of serious and complex fraud<sup>5</sup>. In the course of an investigation into a case which appears to involve any such fraud, the Director of the Serious Fraud Office may by notice in writing require the person under investigation or any other person to produce at such place as may be specified in the notice and either forthwith or at such time as may be so specified any specified documents which appear to the Director to relate to any matter relevant to the investigation or any documents of a specified description which appear to him so to relate; and if any such documents are produced, the Director may take copies or extracts from them and require the person producing them to provide an explanation of any of them<sup>6</sup>. If any such documents are not produced, the Director may require the person who was required to produce them to state, to the best of his knowledge and belief, where they are<sup>7</sup>. Any person who without reasonable excuse fails to comply with such a requirement is guilty of an offence<sup>8</sup>.

The defendant was not obliged to comply with this notice; but if that notice had been duly served, and proof given of the service, the contents of the document could then be proved by secondary evidence (R v Haworth (1830) 4 C & P 254; R v Fitzsimons (1870) IR 4 CL 1, CCR; R v Elworthy (1867) LR 1 CCR 103, 32 JP 54, CCR).

7 Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 2(3)(b).

8 Ibid s 2(13). A person guilty of such an offence is liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale or to both: s 2(13). As to the standard scale see SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 142. The Criminal Justice Act 1987 restricts the use in evidence of statements made by the defendant in response to requirements imposed under s 2 (as amended) (see s 2(8)), but this does not appear to apply to the use of documents produced under compulsion.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE/1466. Real evidence.

1466. Real evidence.

Material objects or things (other than the contents of documents) which are produced as exhibits for inspection by a court or jury are classed as real evidence<sup>1</sup>. The court or jury may need to hear oral testimony explaining the background and alleged significance of any such exhibit, and may be assisted by expert evidence in drawing inferences or conclusions from the condition of that exhibit<sup>2</sup>.

Where a jury wishes to take an exhibit, such as a weapon, into the jury room, this is something which the judge has a discretion to permit<sup>3</sup>. Jurors must not however conduct unsupervised experiments<sup>4</sup>, or be allowed to inspect a thing which has not been produced in evidence<sup>5</sup>.

Failure to produce an object which might otherwise have been admissible as real evidence does not preclude the admission of oral evidence concerning the existence or condition of that object, although such evidence may carry far less weight<sup>6</sup>.

1 This includes animals, such as dogs, which may be inspected to see if they are ferocious (Line v Taylor (1862) 3 F & F 731) or whether they appear to have been ill-treated, etc. Note however that statements (such as statements of origin) printed on objects may give rise to issues of hearsay if it is sought to rely on them as true: Comptroller of Customs v Western Electric Co Ltd [1966] AC 367, [1965] 3 All ER 599, PC.

2 Expert evidence may often be essential if the court or jury is to draw any kind of informed conclusions from their examination of the exhibit. It would be dangerous, for example, for a court or jury to draw its own unaided conclusions concerning the identity of fingerprints or the age and origin of bloodstains: Anderson v R [1972] AC 100, [1971] 3 All ER 768, PC.

3 R v Wright [1993] Crim LR 607, CA; R v Devichand [1991] Crim LR 446, CA.

5 R v Lawrence [1968] 1 All ER 579, 52 Cr App Rep 163, CCA.

6 R v Francis (1874) LR 2 CCR 128, 43 LJMC 97, CCR; Hocking v Ahlquist Bros [1944] KB 120, [1943] 2 All ER 722, DC. See also R v Uxbridge Justices, ex p Sofaer (1987) 85 Cr App Rep 367, DC. If the object in question is in the possession of the prosecutor or of a third person, its production may generally be compelled by issue of a witness order under the Criminal Procedure (Attendance of Witnesses) Act 1965 s 2 (as substituted and amended) or under the Magistrates' Court Act 1980 s 97 (as substituted and amended) (see PARA 1409 ante). The defendant cannot, however, be served with such an order, lest he be forced to incriminate himself: Trust Houses Ltd v Postlethwaite (1944) 109 JP 12.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE/1467. Views, demonstrations and reconstructions.

1467. Views, demonstrations and reconstructions.

Where an object is immovable, or cannot practicably be brought into the courtroom (for example because of its size, dangerousness etc) the court or jury may inspect it in situ or in some convenient location to which it can be moved. There is no difference in principle between examination of real evidence inside the courtroom and examination of such evidence in situ or outside. A vehicle, for example, may be inspected in the road or car park outside the court building<sup>1</sup>.

A view cannot ordinarily be conducted in the absence of the judge<sup>2</sup> or after the judge's summing-up<sup>3</sup> and should not be held in the absence of the defendant unless it is through his own choice<sup>4</sup>, or unless the circumstances in no way prejudice his trial<sup>5</sup>. A view cannot be made by one juror or magistrate reporting back to his fellow jurors or magistrates, nor should it be left to the uncontrolled initiative of individual jurors<sup>6</sup>.

Demonstrations or reconstructions of alleged incidents, whether staged within or without the courtroom, may be of value in so far as they may show what is or is not possible, or how something might have been done<sup>7</sup>. Where, however, a reconstruction purports to show what did actually happen, it should be staged only by or at the direction of competent witnesses who have first-hand knowledge of the matter demonstrated, and who confirm the reconstruction with their testimony. A self-serving reconstruction may even then be of little use to the court<sup>8</sup>.

1468. Proof of public documents and registers.

If a document is of a public nature, it is admissible in evidence on its mere production from proper custody without further proof<sup>1</sup>. Copies of such documents, if officially certified, are by various statutory provisions made admissible in evidence in place of the originals<sup>2</sup>, but in practice most such provisions no longer permit anything that has not in any case become permissible under later provisions of more general application<sup>3</sup>.

1 See CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 884 et seq.

2 Whenever any book or other document is of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence on its mere production from the proper custody, and no [other] statute exists which renders its contents provable by means of a copy, any copy thereof or extract therefrom is admissible in evidence in any court of justice, provided it is proved to be an examined copy or extract, or purports to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer to whose custody the original is entrusted: see the Evidence Act 1851 s 14; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 884 et seq.

3 See PARA 1463 ante.

4 See the Evidence Act 1845 s 3; and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 889. Public and General Acts are judicially noticed and require no proof: see PARA 1382 ante.

Any document purporting to be the consent<sup>1</sup> of a law officer of the Crown<sup>2</sup>, the Director of Public Prosecutions<sup>3</sup> or a Crown prosecutor<sup>4</sup> for or to the institution of any criminal proceedings<sup>5</sup> in any particular form, and to be signed by a law officer of the Crown, the Director of Public Prosecutions or a Crown prosecutor is admissible as prima facie evidence without further proof<sup>6</sup>.

1 As to consents to prosecutions see PARA 1071 ante.

2 'Law officer' is not defined in the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. In the Prosecution of Offences Act 1979, 'a law officer of the Crown' meant the Attorney General or the Solicitor General: see ibid s 10 (repealed).

An extract from a register of births, which is proved to be an examined copy or extract, or which purports to be signed and certified as a true copy or extract by the officer entrusted with custody of the original, is sufficient evidence of the age of (for example) the complainant<sup>1</sup> if identified as the person named in the extract<sup>2</sup>. However, the complainant's age may also be proved by any other admissible evidence<sup>3</sup>.

1 The age of the complainant is material in certain sexual offences: see generally para 162 et seq ante.

2 See the Evidence Act 1851 s 14; and R v Weaver (1873) LR 2 CCR 85; R v Bellis (1911) 6 Cr App Rep 283, CCA. See also R v Rogers (1914) 111 LT 1115, 10 Cr App Rep 276, CCA (evidence of identity held insufficient); Lockwood v Walker 1910 SC (J) 3 (insufficient evidence of age).

3 Eg even by the evidence of persons who have seen her and speak as to their belief with regard to her age: R v Cox [1898] 1 QB 179, CCR. The date of birth of an adopted child may be proved by means of a certified copy of the entry in the adopted children register: see the Adoption and Children Act 2002 s 77; and CHILDREN AND YOUNG PERSONS vol 5(3) (2008 Reissue) PARAS 383, 384.

EVIDENCE/(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE/1471. Audio and video recordings.

1471. Audio and video recordings.

An audio recording is admissible in evidence provided that the accuracy of the recording can be proved, the recorded voices can be properly identified, and the evidence is relevant and otherwise admissible<sup>1</sup>. However, that evidence should always be regarded with caution and assessed in the light of all the circumstances<sup>2</sup>.

A video recording of an incident which is in issue is admissible<sup>3</sup>. There is no difference in terms of admissibility between a direct view of an incident and a view of it on a visual display unit of a camera or on a recording of what the camera has filmed. A witness who sees an incident on a display or a recording may give evidence of what he saw in the same way as a witness who had a direct view<sup>4</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(12) DOCUMENTARY AND REAL EVIDENCE/1472. Representations other than by a person.

1472. Representations other than by a person.

Where a representation of any fact is made otherwise than by a person, but depends for its accuracy on information supplied (directly or indirectly) by a person, the representation is not admissible in criminal proceedings as evidence of the fact unless it is proved that the information was accurate<sup>1</sup>.

This rule does not affect the operation of the presumption that a mechanical device has been properly set or calibrated<sup>2</sup>.

1473. Form of evidence and glossaries.

For the purpose of helping members of juries to understand complicated issues of fact or technical terms Criminal Procedure Rules may make provision:

- 2197 (1) as to the furnishing of evidence in any form, notwithstanding the existence of admissible material from which the evidence to be given in that form would be derived; and
- 2198 (2) as to the furnishing of glossaries for such purposes as may be specified in any case where the court gives leave for, or requires, evidence or a glossary to be so furnished<sup>1</sup>.

(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY

(i) Privilege

1474. Privilege generally.

A witness in legal proceedings<sup>1</sup> may refuse to answer a question and a witness or person served with a witness summons may refuse to produce a document or other article demanded of him<sup>2</sup> if he can establish a claim to privilege in respect of the matter concerned<sup>3</sup>. Some historic privileges have been abolished<sup>4</sup>, but two important privileges remain applicable to criminal proceedings. These are:

- 2199 (1) the privilege against self-incrimination<sup>5</sup>; and
- 2200 (2) legal professional privilege<sup>6</sup>.

A limited privilege is also accorded to journalists, writers, publishers and broadcasters, in so far as no court may require a person to disclose, nor is any person guilty of contempt of court for refusing to disclose, the source of information contained in a publication for which he is responsible, unless it be established to the satisfaction of the court that disclosure is necessary in the interests of justice or national security or for the prevention of disorder or crime<sup>7</sup>.

No privilege attaches to communications made with medical advisers<sup>8</sup>, priests<sup>9</sup>, agents<sup>10</sup>, bankers<sup>11</sup>, or accountants<sup>12</sup>, nor does it attach to matters disclosed (even in the strictest confidence) between friends<sup>13</sup>.

1 The same general principles apply to civil and criminal proceedings, but the application and scope of claims to privilege differ significantly on several points of detail as between civil and criminal proceedings. This title (see PARAS 1475-1479 post) is concerned primarily with claims to privilege arising in criminal proceedings, although in respect of the privilege against self-incrimination, some consideration is also required as to the circumstances in which the privilege may be asserted in civil proceedings. As to privilege in civil proceedings generally see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 970 et seq.

3 A person entitled to privilege has the onus of claiming and establishing it: Boyle v Wiseman (1855) 10 Exch 647. The court must be satisfied that such a claim is based on reasonable grounds: R v Boyes (1861) 1 B & S 311; Khan v Khan [1982] 2 All ER 60, 126 Sol Jo 187, CA.

If a legal adviser is called upon to testify in respect of privileged communications between his client and himself, he should ensure that his client is given a proper and informed opportunity to claim privilege, which belongs to the client. See further PARA 1477 post.

4 Eg under the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 s 1(d) (repealed by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(9)) communications between a husband and wife were formerly privileged. Under the Matrimonial Causes Act 1965 s 43(1) (also repealed by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 80(9)) spouses could not be compelled to give evidence as to whether marital intercourse had taken place between them at any time. The old common law privilege whereby, in legal proceedings, a person other than a party to the proceedings cannot be compelled to produce any deed or other document relating to his title to any land, has been abolished only in so far as civil proceedings are concerned (see the Civil Evidence Act 1968 s 16(1)) but in practice it has minimal practical application to criminal proceedings.

5 See PARA 1476 post.

6 See PARA 1479 post. Patent agents and their clients may assert a privilege similar to legal professional privilege in criminal proceedings as well as civil: see the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 s 280 (as amended); and PATENTS AND REGISTERED DESIGNS vol 79 (2008) PARA 618.

EVIDENCE/(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY /(i) Privilege/1475. Admissibility of evidence on privileged matters.

1475. Admissibility of evidence on privileged matters.

Evidence is not inadmissible merely because it may be subject to a claim of privilege. A witness may overlook or consciously waive a claim to privilege to which he is entitled, and if he does so neither he nor any other person may subsequently object<sup>1</sup>. Even where a witness is wrongly denied a properly supported claim to privilege, the only wrong done is to the witness himself<sup>2</sup>. Save where the defendant is himself the wronged witness, the admission of privileged evidence in such circumstances has no bearing on the safety of a conviction<sup>3</sup>.

The matters covered by the privilege may alternatively be proved by other evidence, should such evidence be available<sup>4</sup>; and where privileged documents or copies thereof have been acquired by another party, they may be admissible in the hands of that party<sup>5</sup>. In some cases, however, the improper obtaining of privileged material by the police or prosecution may amount to an abuse of process and may require the prosecution to be stayed<sup>6</sup>.

4 Calcraft v Guest [1898] 1 QB 759, CA; Mills v Oddy (1834) 6 C & P 728. Where privilege against self-incrimination is claimed, the police may thereby be alerted and may seek other evidence of the witness's offending: O Ltd v Z [2005] EWHC 238 (Ch), [2005] All ER (D) 387 (Apr).

1476. Privilege against self-incrimination.

In legal proceedings<sup>1</sup> a witness may ordinarily refuse to answer any question, and a person may ordinarily refuse to produce any document or thing<sup>2</sup>, which might tend to incriminate him<sup>3</sup> in the United Kingdom<sup>4</sup> by exposing him to proceedings for a criminal offence<sup>5</sup>, or to proceedings for the recovery of a penalty<sup>6</sup>. In criminal (but not in civil) proceedings a person may similarly decline to answer any question or produce any document or thing if to do so would tend to expose him to a forfeiture<sup>7</sup>.

Where the privilege is claimed, the court or judge must be satisfied, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called to give, that there is a reasonable ground to apprehend real and appreciable danger to the witness with reference to the ordinary operation of the law in the ordinary course of things, and not a danger of an imaginary or insubstantial character<sup>8</sup>.

1 As to certain differences between the rules governing criminal and civil proceedings see the Civil Evidence Act 1968 s 14 (as amended), s 16 (see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARAS 970, 974); and notes 3, 5 infra. In most respects, however, s 14 (as amended) is considered declaratory of the common law: Rio Tinto Zinc Corpn v Westinghouse Electric Corpn [1978] AC 547, [1978] 1 All ER 434, HL.

2 Triplex Safety Glass Co v Lancegay Safety Glass (1934) Ltd [1939] 2 KB 395, [1939] 2 All ER 613, CA; Rank Film Distributors Ltd v Video Information Centre [1982] AC 380, [1981] 2 All ER 76, HL; AT & T Istel Ltd v Tully [1993] AC 45, [1992] 3 All ER 523, HL; and see O Ltd v Z [2005] EWHC 238 (Ch) at [49], [2005] All ER (D) 387 (Apr) at [49] per Lindsay J ('there is no material distinction between a person being obliged to answer questions under the compulsion of the court and his being obliged by a search order to produce documents, including computer disks, CD-ROMs and tapes, or, at any rate, none that makes it easier to deny the privilege to that person in the latter case'); but see contra C plc v P (Secretary of State for the Home Office and another intervening) [2006] EWHC 1226 (Ch), [2006] All ER (D) 386 (May).

3 In civil proceedings, privilege extends to matters that might incriminate a spouse or civil partner (see the Civil Evidence Act 1968 s 14 (as amended); and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 974) but in criminal proceedings the privilege protects only the person claiming it. There is no privilege in respect of questions tending to incriminate another: R v Minihane (1921) 16 Cr App Rep 38, CCA. As to the right of a corporation to claim this privilege see Triplex Safety Glass Co v Lancegay Safety Glass (1934) Ltd [1939] 2 KB 395, [1939] 2 All ER 613, CA; Rio Tinto Zinc Corpn v Westinghouse Electric Corpn [1978] AC 547, [1978] 1 All ER 434, HL.

4 The privilege does not extend to self-incrimination under foreign law: King of the Two Sicilies v Willcox (1851) 1 Sim NS 301; Re Atherton [1912] 2 KB 251, 81 LjKB 791.

6 This includes administrative penalties under European Union law that are enforceable within the United Kingdom: Rio Tinto Zinc Corpn v Westinghouse Electric Corpn [1978] AC 547, [1978] 1 All ER 434, HL.

7 This privilege was abolished (but in respect of civil proceedings only) by the Civil Evidence Act 1968 s 16(1).

See also R v Boyes (1861) 1 B & S 311 (witness pardoned for offence; possibility of impeachment too remote to afford privilege). See also Khan v Khan [1982] 2 All ER 60, [1982] 1 WLR 513, CA (civil) in which the evidence against the witness was already so great that rejection of a claim to privilege could make no material difference in his case.

EVIDENCE/(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY /(i) Privilege/1477. Exceptions to the privilege against self-incrimination.

1477. Exceptions to the privilege against self-incrimination.

The privilege against self-incrimination is protected by the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms<sup>1</sup>, but it is not absolute<sup>2</sup>. Thus, a defendant who testifies may (subject to statutory restrictions concerning evidence of bad character<sup>3</sup>) be asked any question in cross-examination (and required to answer it) notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to any offence with which he is charged in the proceedings<sup>4</sup>.

There are certain other circumstances in which the privilege is qualified or abrogated by statute. The most significant of these, as far as the criminal law is concerned, are provisions which require a person to produce evidence that may then be used in criminal proceedings against him. Thus, a motorist may be required on pain of prosecution to provide a sample of breath, blood or urine that may become the principal item of evidence against him on a drink-driving charge<sup>5</sup>; and the registered owner of a motor vehicle may be required to provide details of who was driving that vehicle at a given time and place, notwithstanding that in answering this question he may have to incriminate himself by admitting he was the driver<sup>6</sup>. Similarly, a taxpayer may be required to furnish the Revenue and Customs authorities with accurate information concerning his affairs, even if this means revealing a previously undisclosed liability on which he might face prosecution<sup>7</sup>. Provisions of this kind are not incompatible with the right to a fair trial under the Convention, as long as they represent a necessary and proportionate response to the problem they seek to address<sup>8</sup>.

In other cases, abrogation of the privilege against self-incrimination is balanced, at least in part, by express or implied restrictions on the permissible uses of any evidence thereby obtained. Such evidence may, for example, be admissible in the civil proceedings for the purpose of which it was secured, but not in any subsequent prosecution of the person from whom it was obtained<sup>9</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY /(i) Privilege/1478. Assistance by offender: undertakings as to use of evidence.

1478. Assistance by offender: undertakings as to use of evidence.

Specified prosecutors<sup>1</sup> may provide various undertakings to offenders or suspected offenders with a view to eliciting their assistance in the investigation or prosecution of offences<sup>2</sup>. If such a prosecutor thinks that for the purposes of the investigation or prosecution of any offence it is appropriate to offer any person an undertaking that information of any description<sup>3</sup> will not be used against that person in any criminal proceedings<sup>4</sup>, or in any proceedings under Part 5 of the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002<sup>5</sup>, he may give that person a written notice (or 'restricted use undertaking') to that effect<sup>6</sup>.

If a person is given a restricted use undertaking, the information described in the undertaking must not be used against that person in any such proceedings in England and Wales or in Northern Ireland, except in the circumstances specified in the undertaking<sup>7</sup>, but a restricted use undertaking ceases to have effect in relation to the person to whom it is given if that person fails to comply with any conditions specified in the undertaking<sup>8</sup>.

1 Each of the following is a specified prosecutor for this purpose: the Director of Public Prosecutions; the Director of Revenue and Customs Prosecutions; the Director of the Serious Fraud Office; the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland; or a prosecutor designated for this purpose by one of the above (Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005 ss 71(4), 72(7)); but the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland or a person designated by him may not give a restricted use undertaking in relation to proceedings in England and Wales and the Director of Public Prosecutions or a person designated by him may not give a restricted use undertaking in relation to proceedings in Northern Ireland: s 72(5), (6).

2 This may include the provision of immunity from prosecution, on condition that the person in question complies with any condition specified (see ibid s 71) or in the case of a convicted offender who is still serving his sentence, referral of that sentence back to the court by which the sentence was passed (see s 74). See further SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARA 625.

3 This will ordinarily be information provided by the person in question in response to the undertaking, but the undertaking may for example extend to any further information discovered as a direct or indirect result of the information provided.

4 'Criminal proceedings' are not defined in the Serious Organised Crime and Police Act 2005, but see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 134(1) (see PARA 1464 note 2 ante); and R v H [2005] EWCA Crim 2083, [2006] 1 Cr App Rep 50, [2005] All ER (D) 311 (Jul). EVIDENCE/(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY /(i) Privilege/1479. Legal professional privilege.

1479. Legal professional privilege.

Confidential communications made for the purpose of obtaining legal advice from solicitors, barristers or other legal advisers<sup>1</sup> are privileged from disclosure<sup>2</sup>, with the exception of communications made with the intention of furthering a criminal purpose<sup>3</sup>. In a criminal trial the privilege is now considered to be absolute, in that once the privilege is established even documents which might help to establish the innocence of a defendant remain exempt from disclosure<sup>4</sup>. The privilege is that of the client, not the lawyer, and it may be waived only by the client<sup>5</sup>.

Material that is not otherwise privileged does not become so merely by being enclosed with communications which do attract privilege<sup>6</sup>, nor does the concept of a 'communication' extend to mere records of visits to a legal adviser's office<sup>7</sup>.

Communications between a client (or his legal adviser) and a third party, such as a doctor, analyst or surveyor, are not ordinarily privileged, but will become so if made with reference to actual or contemplated litigation<sup>8</sup>, provided that the dominant purpose behind the communication is to assist in the preparation of a possible case<sup>9</sup>.

Legal professional privilege is thus much more than an ordinary rule of evidence, limited in its application to the facts of a particular case. It is a fundamental condition on which the administration of justice as a whole rests<sup>10</sup>. Where the police interfere with this privilege by conducting covert surveillance (or 'bugging') of a suspect's privileged communications with his solicitor, this so seriously undermines the rule of law as to justify a court or judge in staying a prosecution on grounds of abuse of process, even if it appears that no damaging or prejudicial material was obtained as the fruit of this surveillance<sup>11</sup>.

1 The expression 'legal adviser' extends to clerks and other employees of a law firm (see Wheeler v Le Marchant (1881) 17 ChD 675 at 682 per Jessel MR) including interpreters employed in consultations and negotiations (Du Barré v Livette (1791) Peake 108; R (on the application of Bozkurt) v South Thames Magistrates' Court [2001] EWHC 400 (Admin), [2002] RTR 246). The basis of the privilege is just as apt to cover foreign legal advisers as English lawyers, provided only that the relationship of lawyer and client subsists between them: Re Duncan, Garfield v Fay [1968] P 306, [1968] 2 All ER 395; International Business Machines Corp v Phoenix International (Computers) Ltd [1995] 1 All ER 413. Privilege is not necessarily waived where the defendant explains his failure to disclose in interview facts now relied upon in his defence by stating that he was advised by his solicitor not to answer police questions (R v Robinson [2003] EWCA Crim 2219, [2003] All ER (D) 479 (Jul)) but this in itself is unlikely to prevent inferences being drawn against him under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 s 34 (as amended) (see PARA 1552 post). ## (ii) Exclusion of Evidence on Grounds of Public Interest

1480. Material that may be subject to public interest immunity.

In criminal proceedings, certain evidence may need to be excluded from disclosure at trial (and also from pre-trial disclosure to the defence) on the grounds that it is not in the public interest that it should be so disclosed. The basic principles were developed primarily in civil cases<sup>1</sup> under the heading 'Crown privilege'<sup>2</sup> but the concept of public interest immunity (as it is now known) differs fundamentally from privilege because the safeguarding of the public interest involves a duty rather than a right, and this duty cannot in theory be waived by a party or witness so as to permit disclosure of sensitive material that the public interest requires to be excluded<sup>3</sup>. Where any disputed question of public interest immunity arises, it is ordinarily for the court to decide whether exclusion is required after weighing all competing considerations in the balance<sup>4</sup>. In criminal cases, one of the most important considerations is that, if the material in question tends to raise any doubt as to the guilt of a defendant, it may be impossible to proceed with the trial unless that evidence is disclosed<sup>5</sup>.

Although in theory public interest immunity cannot be waived, questions of public interest immunity generally arise during pre-trial disclosure by the prosecution, and it may sometimes be proper for the prosecution to disclose potentially sensitive material to the defence without making any claim to public interest immunity or referring the matter to the court<sup>6</sup>. Moreover, in cases where persons (such as police informers) who might be affected by possible disclosure have been consulted and offer no objection to it, it is unlikely that a court would regard the public interest as requiring exclusion<sup>7</sup>.

Material that may (depending on the circumstances) be subject to a claim to public interest immunity includes (but is not confined to) material falling within the following categories<sup>8</sup>: (1) material relating to national security<sup>9</sup>; (2) material received from the intelligence and security agencies<sup>10</sup>; (3) material relating to intelligence from foreign sources which reveals sensitive intelligence gathering methods<sup>11</sup>; (4) material given in confidence<sup>12</sup>; (5) material which relates to the use of a telephone system and which is supplied to an investigator for intelligence purposes only<sup>13</sup>; (6) material relating to the identity or activities of informants, or under-cover police officers, or other persons supplying information to the police who may be in danger if their identities are revealed<sup>14</sup>; (7) material revealing the location of any premises or other place used for police surveillance, or the identity of any person allowing a police officer to use them for surveillance<sup>15</sup>; (8) material revealing, either directly or indirectly, techniques and methods relied upon by a police officer in the course of a criminal investigation, such as covert surveillance techniques, or other methods of detecting crime<sup>16</sup>; (9) material whose disclosure might facilitate the commission of other offences or hinder the prevention and detection of crime; (10) internal police communications such as management minutes<sup>17</sup>; (11) material upon the strength of which search warrants were obtained<sup>18</sup>; (12) material containing details of persons taking part in identification parades; (13) material supplied to an investigator during a criminal investigation which has been generated by an official of a body concerned with the regulation or supervision of bodies corporate or of persons engaged in financial activities, or which has been generated by a person retained by such a body; and (14) material supplied to an investigator during a criminal investigation which relates to a child or young person and which has been generated by a local authority social services department, an Area Child Protection Committee or other party contacted by an investigator during the investigation<sup>19</sup>.

Considerations of public interest also lie behind the rule whereby evidence may not ordinarily be received from jurors or others concerning what took place during a jury's deliberations<sup>20</sup>.

1 As to public interest immunity in civil cases see CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARAS 574-579. In criminal cases, there was little case law on public interest immunity until strict rules were developed to govern pre-trial disclosure by the prosecution: see R v H; R v C [2004] UKHL 03 at [19] et seq, [2004] 2 AC 134 at [19] et seq, [2004] 1 All ER 1269 at [19] et seq per Lord Bingham.

3 R v Chief Constable of the West Midlands Police, ex p Wiley [1995] 1 AC 274, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 342, HL. Public interest immunity also differs from privilege in that secondary evidence may not be admitted where the original evidence is excluded in the public interest: Chatterton v Secretary of State for India in Council [1895] 2 QB 189 at 193-195, CA; and see also Rogers v Secretary of State for the Home Department [1973] AC 388, [1972] 2 All ER 1057, HL; Evans v Chief Constable of Surrey Constabulary [1988] QB 588, [1989] 2 All ER 594, DC.

6 R v Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex p Bennett (No 2) [1994] 1 All ER 289, 99 Cr App Rep 123, DC. Before making disclosure the Crown Prosecution Service should first obtain the Treasury Solicitor's express written approval for such a course. He should consult any other relevant government department and satisfy himself that the balance falls clearly in favour of disclosure. He should be the readier to approve disclosure of documents likely to assist the defence case than those which the Crown Prosecution Service wishes to disclose with a view to furthering the interests of the prosecution; and he should consider not merely the importance of the documents but also the importance of the prosecution itself: it may in some cases be preferable to abandon the case rather than permit disclosure: see R v Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex p Bennett (No 2) supra at 297 and 130 per Simon Brown LJ. As to pre-trial disclosure generally see PARA 1383 et seq ante. See also R v Adams [1997] Crim LR 292; R v H; R v C [2004] UKHL 03 at [35], [2004] 2 AC 134 at [35], [2004] 1 All ER 1269 at [35] per Lord Bingham ('only in truly borderline cases should the prosecution seek a judicial ruling on the disclosability of material in its hands'). As to the procedure for resolving issues of public interest immunity in pre-trial proceedings see PARA 1481 post.

Once disclosure of the evidence in question has been made to the defence there will often be no point in seeking to assert public interest immunity at the trial, but cases may arise in which it would be undesirable to repeat in open court disclosures that have so far been made only in pre-trial communications, and in such cases it is not too late to claim public interest immunity: R v Governor of Brixton Prison, ex p Osman [1992] 1 All ER 108, [1991] 1 WLR 281, DC.

7 Savage v Chief Constable of Hampshire [1997] 2 All ER 631, [1997] 1 WLR 1061, CA (police informer who wished to sacrifice his anonymity not precluded from so doing by automatic application of the principle of public interest). But once a court has determined that evidence attracts public interest immunity it has no residual discretion to admit that evidence: Powell v Chief Constable of North Wales Constabulary [1999] All ER (D) 1451, CA.

8 As listed in the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 (s 23(1)) Code of Practice para 6.12. But the categories of public interest are not closed, and must alter from time to time whether by restriction or extension as social conditions and social legislation develop: D v National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children [1978] AC 171 at 230 per Lord Hailsham LC.

9 See also Duncan v Cammell Laird & Co Ltd [1942] AC 624, [1942] 1 All ER 587, HL. In such cases (and also in cases falling within heads (2) and (3) in the text) a public interest immunity certificate signed by the appropriate minister will ordinarily be conclusive as to the need for exclusion, and the court will not require further evidence of it: Balfour v Foreign and Commonwealth Office [1994] 2 All ER 588, [1994] 1 WLR 681. But note that in response to criticisms of previous policy made by Sir Richard Scott V-C (Report of the Inquiry into the Export of Defence Equipment and Dual-use Goods to Iraq and Related Prosecutions HC Paper 115/1995-96) the Government has undertaken to cease making blanket 'class claims' to immunity for all documents or materials of this kind, and will instead consider each relevant document on its own merits.

10 In practice a claim to public interest immunity on this basis may also involve issues of national security: see Balfour v Foreign and Commonwealth Office [1994] 2 All ER 588, [1994] 1 WLR 681; and note 9 supra.

11 See notes 9, 10 supra.

12 In civil cases it has been held that information provided in confidence may attract public interest immunity: see eg Alfred Crompton Amusement Machines v Comrs of Customs and Excise (No 2) [1974] AC 405, [1973] 2 All ER 1169, HL; D v National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children [1978] AC 171, [1977] 1 All ER 589, HL; but such immunity will not always be granted, even where it is argued that it is important to the proper operation of the public service, and where immunity is claimed the court may insist on inspecting the material in question before making a ruling: Conway v Rimmer [1968] AC 910, [1968] 1 All ER 874, HL. In R v Umoh (1986) 84 Cr App Rep 138 at 143, CA, it was recognised that public interest immunity might extend in a criminal case to confidential discussions between a prisoner and a prison officer in connection with a legal aid application. As to immunity attaching to confidential medical records see Morrow, Geach and Thomas v DPP [1994] Crim LR 58, DC.

EVIDENCE/(13) PRIVILEGE AND PUBLIC INTEREST IMMUNITY /(ii) Exclusion of Evidence on Grounds of Public Interest/1481. Procedure for determining issues of public interest immunity.

1481. Procedure for determining issues of public interest immunity.

Although rules of common law ultimately determine whether the disclosure of material is in the public interest<sup>1</sup>, applications to withhold disclosure on grounds of public interest immunity are now largely governed by statute<sup>2</sup> and by associated rules of criminal procedure<sup>3</sup>.

Where a prosecutor applies for disclosure to be withheld<sup>4</sup>, notice of this application must be served on the court officer and must specify the nature of the material to which the application relates<sup>5</sup>. A copy of this notice must ordinarily be served on the defendant<sup>6</sup>; but where the prosecutor has reason to believe that to reveal to the defendant the nature of the material to which the application relates would have the effect of disclosing that which the prosecutor contends should not in the public interest be disclosed, he must instead notify the defendant that an application to withhold disclosure has been made<sup>7</sup>, unless he considers that even this would have the effect of disclosing that which should not in the public interest be disclosed, in which case notice of the application must (where it is made in the Crown Court) be served on the trial judge or, if the application is made before the start of the trial, on the judge, if any, who has been designated to conduct the trial instead of on the court officer<sup>8</sup>.

Where notice of the application has been served on the defendant, he must then be notified of date, time and place of the hearing, at which he will be entitled to make representations to the court<sup>9</sup>; but in other cases the hearing will be ex parte and (save where an interested party is permitted to make representations<sup>10</sup>) only the prosecutor may make representations to the court<sup>11</sup>. In cases where the defendant is not notified of the application, he will not ordinarily be notified of the outcome of the hearing<sup>12</sup>.

A defendant may (where he is aware of a ruling that disclosure be withheld on grounds of public interest immunity) subsequently apply to the court for a review of whether that ruling remains appropriate<sup>13</sup>, and in cases tried on indictment the Crown Court has an ongoing duty to keep that question under review<sup>14</sup>.

The adoption of an ex parte procedure, although sometimes necessary, involves obvious difficulties for the defendant and his legal advisers, and in order to preserve the defendant's right to a fair trial, such difficulties must be sufficiently counterbalanced by the procedures followed by the judicial authorities<sup>15</sup>. In exceptional cases, it may be appropriate for the court to appoint a special counsel or special advocate to represent the interests of the defendant at an ex parte hearing<sup>16</sup>.

1 See the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 21(2).

2 See ibid ss 3(6), 7A(8), 8(5) (s 7A(8) added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 37), which provide that material must not be disclosed to the extent that the court, on an application by the prosecutor, concludes it is not in the public interest to disclose it and orders accordingly.

3 See CrimPR Pt 25. The rules in this part reproduce the Crown Court (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996) (Disclosure) Rules 1997, SI 1997/698, and the Magistrates' Courts (Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996) (Disclosure) Rules 1997, SI 1997/703 (revoked), and effectively sanction guidance previously given by the courts in R v Davis [1993] 2 All ER 643, sub nom R v Johnson (1993) 97 Cr App Rep 110, CA; and R v Keane [1994] 2 All ER 478, 99 Cr App Rep 1: see R v H; R v C [2004] UKHL 3 at [20], [2004] 2 AC 134 at [20], [2004] 1 All ER 1269 at [20] per Lord Bingham.

(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE

1482. Evidence of opinion or belief generally inadmissible.

As a general rule, witnesses in criminal proceedings may testify only as to facts perceived or experienced by them, and must not seek to influence the court or jury by expressing opinions or judgments concerning those facts or by drawing inferences as to the causes or significance of those facts<sup>1</sup>. The rationale behind this rule is that such opinions, if not founded upon evidence, are worthless<sup>2</sup>; and, in so far as they may be founded upon legally admissible evidence, they may tend to usurp the function of the court or jury, whose task it is to draw inferences from the evidence and apportion blame or responsibility where appropriate<sup>3</sup>. It follows that evidence as to the opinion or belief of a witness or of any other person<sup>4</sup> is generally inadmissible to prove the correctness of the opinion held<sup>5</sup>.

There are various exceptions to this general rule, notably in respect of expert evidence<sup>6</sup>. On some matters, even non-expert witnesses may be permitted to give evidence of opinion<sup>7</sup>.

Opinion evidence has in some cases been said to be irrelevant: Hollington v F Hewthorn & Co Ltd [1943] KB 587 at 595, [1943] 2 All ER 35 at 40, CA, per Lord Goddard CJ; but contrast R v Turner [1975] QB 834, 60 Cr App Rep 80, CA, in which an expert's opinion on a matter not calling for expert testimony was regarded as relevant but inadmissible, the reason for exclusion being that the jury had no need of it.

<sup>4</sup> At common law, this rule extends to the opinion of a court or jury at an earlier trial as expressed in its verdict: Hollington v F Hewthorn & Co Ltd [1943] KB 587, [1943] 2 All ER 35. Save where statute otherwise provides, the verdict of such a court or jury remains inadmissible to prove the guilt or innocence of the person convicted or acquitted, or any other facts on which that decision was based. See further PARAS 1498-1499 post.

<sup>5</sup> The exclusionary rule does not apply where the mere holding of the opinion or belief is itself relevant irrespective of its correctness: eg where on a charge of blackmail the defendant testifies that he believed that the menaces used to reinforce the demand were proper in the circumstances: see the Theft Act 1968 s 21(1) (b); and PARA 308 ante. As to a false expression of opinion amounting to perjury see PARA 712 ante.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1483. Evidence of general reputation and character.

1483. Evidence of general reputation and character.

At common law<sup>1</sup>, evidence of the defendant's general reputation for good character amongst those who know him is admissible, both to establish his credibility as a witness, and as evidence of his lack of criminal propensity<sup>2</sup>.

Evidence is also admissible at common law to prove that a witness's general reputation is such that he ought not to be believed on his oath<sup>3</sup>.

In practice, witnesses called upon to testify as to a defendant's character are often permitted to give their individual opinion, rather than mere general reputation; and a witness called to impeach another's credit may be permitted to express his individual opinion based on his personal knowledge<sup>4</sup>.

1 The common law rules are preserved by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 118(1).

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1484. Expert evidence: general principles.

1484. Expert evidence: general principles.

Expert opinion evidence is generally admissible to assist the court or jury in respect of matters which lie outside the experience or understanding of ordinary jurors or justices<sup>1</sup>. If, however, a court or jury can be expected to understand the evidence in question without such assistance, expert testimony concerning that evidence cannot be received<sup>2</sup>.

By way of example, expert evidence will ordinarily be considered necessary and admissible on matters of science<sup>3</sup>, medicine<sup>4</sup>, professional competence<sup>5</sup>, the authenticity or identification of handwriting<sup>6</sup>, and questions of foreign law<sup>7</sup>. Where the facts on which an opinion is based are to be established by other testimony, the expert's opinion will be tendered on the hypothesis that these facts are accepted<sup>8</sup>.

Expert witnesses may express opinions only on matters falling within their own areas of expert knowledge or competence<sup>9</sup>. It follows that experts in (for example) DNA profiling may be competent to explain the significance of a positive DNA match, but are not generally competent to comment on other evidence in the case and should not ordinarily be permitted to express an opinion as to the ultimate issue of guilt or innocence, because this would involve expressing a view on the other evidence<sup>10</sup>.

Expert witnesses (especially those proposing to testify in respect of new or little known theories) must be prepared to furnish the court with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of their conclusions so as to enable the judge or jury to form their own independent judgment by the application of these criteria to the facts proved in evidence<sup>11</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1485. Psychiatric and psychological evidence.

1485. Psychiatric and psychological evidence.

Expert psychiatric evidence is a statutory requirement in cases where it is argued that the defendant was insane at the time of the alleged offence or currently unfit to plead to the indictment<sup>1</sup>. In practice, such evidence is also necessary and admissible if there is any question whether the defendant's behaviour was caused by automatism<sup>2</sup> or diminished responsibility<sup>3</sup>. Expert evidence has been held admissible on the question of a defendant's ability to make a reliable confession<sup>4</sup>, and to show that a witness suffers from a disease, defect or abnormality of mind which may affect the reliability of his evidence<sup>5</sup>. Such evidence may also be admissible in cases of provocation<sup>6</sup> or duress<sup>7</sup>, if (and to the limited extent that) it relates to a recognised mental condition that may legitimately be taken into account in respect of such defences<sup>8</sup>.

Where it is alleged that the victim of an assault has suffered psychological injury amounting to actual bodily harm or grievous bodily harm, expert evidence will in practice be needed in support of that allegation, and without it the case cannot properly be left to the jury<sup>9</sup>.

In contrast, expert evidence is not admissible to explain the behaviour or likely intent of an adult defendant (or of any other adult) where no question of mental illness or significant mental abnormality is involved<sup>10</sup>, because trials operate on the premise that courts and juries 'do not need psychiatrists to tell them how ordinary folk who are not suffering from any mental illness [or abnormality] are likely to react the stresses and strains of life'<sup>11</sup>; nor will expert psychological evidence be admissible unless the expert in question can furnish the court with the necessary scientific criteria for testing the accuracy of his conclusions, 'so as to enable the judge or jury to form their own independent judgment by the application of these criteria to the facts proved in evidence'<sup>12</sup>.

1 A jury may not return a special verdict under the Trial of Lunatics Act 1883 s 2 (as amended) (acquittal on ground of insanity) (see PARA 31 ante) except on the written or oral evidence of two or more registered medical practitioners at least one of whom is duly approved by the Secretary of State as having special experience in the diagnosis or treatment of mental disorder: Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 ss 1, 6 (read in conjunction with the Mental Health Act 1983 s 54(2), (3) (see MENTAL HEALTH vol 30 (Reissue) 492). Where on the trial of a person the question arises (at the instance of the defence or otherwise) whether the defendant is under a disability, that is to say, under any disability such that apart from the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 it would constitute a bar to his being tried, a court may not make a determination as to fitness to be tried except on the written or oral evidence of two or more registered medical practitioners at least one of whom is duly approved: Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4(1), (5), (6) (s 4 substituted by the Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 s 2; the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 s 4(5), (6) amended by the Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 s 22(1), (2), (3)).

4 R v Stewart (1972) 56 Cr App Rep 272, CA. The courts have shown increased willingness to admit expert evidence bearing upon the reliability of confession evidence: R v Henry [2005] EWCA Crim 1681 at [13], [2006] 1 Cr App Rep 118 at [13], [2005] All ER (D) 352 (Jun) at [13] per Maurice Kay LJ. The restrictive approach adopted in R v Weightman (1990) 92 Cr App Rep 291, CA, excluding expert evidence of personality disorders falling short of mental abnormality, was rejected in R v Ward (Judith) [1993] 2 All ER 577, 96 Cr App Rep 1, CA, where it was held that expert evidence of a psychiatrist or a psychologist may properly be admitted if it is to the effect that a defendant is suffering from a condition not properly described as mental illness, but from a personality disorder so severe as properly to be categorised as mental disorder. The following guidelines were suggested in R v O'Brien [2000] All ER (D) 62, [2000] Crim LR 676, CA, per Roach LJ (where a co-defendant made admissions in the course of his testimony at trial, incriminating the appellants); followed in R v Smith [2003] EWCA Crim 927, [2003] All ER (D) 28 (Apr), CA:

'First the abnormal disorder must not only be of the type which might render a confession or evidence unreliable; there must also be a very significant deviation from the norm shown. . . . Second, there should be a history pre-dating the making of the admissions or the giving of evidence which is not based solely on a history given by the subject, which points to or explains the abnormality or abnormalities.

If such [expert] evidence is admitted, the jury must be directed that they are not obliged to accept such evidence. They should consider it if they think it right to do so, as throwing light on the personality of the defendant and bringing to their attention aspects of that personality of which they might otherwise have been unaware'.

As to childhood amnesia see R v S; R v W [2006] EWCA Crim 1404, [2006] All ER (D) 214 (Jun).

There was no database comparing real and questionable suicides and no substantial body of academic writing approving his methodology.

NOTE 2--Supreme Court Act 1981 now cited as Senior Courts Act 1981: Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 11 para 1 (in force 1 October 2009: SI 2009/1604).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1487. Expert evidence in obscenity cases.

1487. Expert evidence in obscenity cases.

Expert evidence is by statute admissible on the question whether publication of an otherwise obscene article may be justified as being for the public good, on the grounds that it is in the interests of science, art, literature, art or learning or other objects of general concern<sup>1</sup>. Such evidence is not ordinarily admissible to prove that a given publication is or is not obscene, in the sense that it may have a tendency to deprave or corrupt those to whom it is exposed<sup>2</sup>, but it may be so admissible if in the circumstances the court or jury requires expert guidance in relation to matters outside their ordinary experience<sup>3</sup>.

1 Obscene Publications Act 1959 s 4(1), (2) (s 4(1) amended by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 53(6)). In the case of a moving picture film or soundtrack, such evidence may be admissible to show that the film or soundtrack is justified as being for the public good on the ground that it is in the interests of drama, opera, ballet or any other art, or of literature or learning: Obscene Publications Act 1959 s 4(1A) (added by the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 53(6), (7)). See further PARA 747 et seq ante.

3 DPP v A and BC Chewing Gum Ltd [1968] 1 QB 159, [1967] 2 All ER 504, DC (likely effect of violent images on young children to whom they were marketed); R v Skirving [1985] QB 819, 81 Cr App Rep 9, CA (evidence as to the effects of cocaine on users, where defendant published leaflet advocating such use).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1488. Evidence as to handwriting.

1488. Evidence as to handwriting.

Non-expert opinion evidence from persons familiar with the alleged author's writing, style or signature, may constitute an important means of proving a document's authenticity<sup>1</sup>. In the case of non-expert witnesses who claim to be familiar with the alleged author's handwriting, the value of their evidence will depend on the extent of that familiarity. The court may decline to admit such testimony if this familiarity is only slight<sup>2</sup>. Where it is contended that the document in question is a skilful forgery, and comparisons are necessary between specimen writing and those in dispute, expert testimony will in practice be required<sup>3</sup>. A jury should not ordinarily be invited, unaided by the evidence of an expert, to examine a disputed instrument or document and compare it with an admitted genuine one<sup>4</sup>.

1 Doe d Mudd v Suckermore (1836) 5 Ad & El 703; R v Slaney (1832) 5 C & P 213; R v Hensey (1758) 1 Burr 642; R v Hurley (1843) 2 Mood & R 473. The required knowledge may have been acquired by the witness having: (1) seen the person write; (2) received communications purporting to come from him in response to those addressed to him by the witness; or (3) observed documents purporting to be in that person's handwriting in the ordinary course of business: see R v O'Brien (1911) 7 Cr App Rep 29, CCA.

2 R v O'Brien (1911) 7 Cr App Rep 29, CCA; R v Harvey (1869) 11 Cox CC 546. Knowledge acquired by a non-expert witness before or during the trial for the express purpose of qualifying him to prove that person's handwriting at the trial will not suffice to render that evidence admissible: R v Crouch (1850) 4 Cox CC 163; R v Rickard (1918) 88 LJB 720, 13 Cr App Rep 40, CCA.

3 R v Harden [1963] 1 QB 8, 46 Cr App Rep 90, CCA. Opinions of experts in handwriting are admissible to decipher words which have been obliterated, erased or altered (R v Williams (1838) 8 C & P 434); to determine whether the writing is in a genuine or forged hand (R v Cator (1802) 4 Esp 117 at 145; R v Shepherd (1845) 1 Cox CC 237); and, upon comparison, to point out similarities and dissimilarities, leaving the jury to determine the particular issue (see Wakeford v Bishop of Lincoln (1921) 90 LJPC 174).

A sample of handwriting that is to be used for comparison with the writing in dispute must first be proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine: Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 8; R v Ewing [1983] QB 1039, 77 Cr App Rep 47, CA. The Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 8 does not preclude the use by an expert of a photocopy of the disputed writing where, for example, the original cannot be obtained: Lockheed-Arabia Corp v Owen [1993] QB 806, [1993] 3 All ER 641, CA (civil).

As to the desirability of calling an expert who is the subject of a conditional witness order to attend the trial where there is a danger that the jury might reach a decision on its own without proper guidance see R v Hipson [1969] Crim LR 85, CA.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1489. Evidence of polygraph analysis or hypnosis.

1489. Evidence of polygraph analysis or hypnosis.

There is little authority as to the admissibility of polygraph (or lie detector) analysis in English law. Such evidence has been ruled inadmissible in Canada<sup>1</sup> and New Zealand<sup>2</sup>, but the Privy Council has declined to express any final conclusion as to whether or not there may be exceptional cases where the evidence of an expert may be admissible to testify as to the results of a polygraph test<sup>3</sup>.

Where hypnosis has been used on witnesses in the course of an investigation, Home Office guidelines require that the hypnotherapist must first take a resume of the witness's recollection prior to hypnosis; the interview must be video recorded and the tape transcribed; the hypnotherapist must himself make a witness statement; any additional information obtained under hypnosis must be made the subject of a subsequent normal witness statement within 24 hours; and full details must be given to the Crown Prosecution Service<sup>4</sup>. Details of a hypnosis session involving potential witnesses must also be disclosed to the defence, even if the session is considered to be unsatisfactory and produces no admissible evidence of its own<sup>5</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1490. Competence of expert witnesses.

1490. Competence of expert witnesses.

Whether a witness is competent to give expert evidence is for the trial judge to determine<sup>1</sup>. In some cases, the witness need not necessarily have acquired his knowledge professionally; it is enough if he has made a special study of the subject, or has acquired special experience in it<sup>2</sup>.

A witness who has expert knowledge of an area of foreign law may be competent to give expert evidence as to that law irrespective of whether he is qualified to practise law in that country<sup>3</sup>.

A witness may become an expert 'ad hoc' in relation to a specific issue that he has studied so as to gain knowledge beyond that which a jury could be expected to possess<sup>4</sup>.

1 R v Silverlock [1894] 2 QB 766, 58 JP 788, CCR; R v Inch (1989) 91 Cr App Rep 51, C-MAC.

2 R v Silverlock [1894] 2 QB 766, 58 JP 788, CCR. The test is whether the witness is sufficiently skilled to give expert evidence, or has the necessary means of knowledge to make his opinion material. A drug abuser may be sufficiently well acquainted with drugs to give expert evidence as to the nature of a substance: R v Chatwood [1980] 1 All ER 467, 70 Cr App Rep 39, CA. In some areas, however, it is almost inconceivable that a witness without professional qualifications would be permitted to give expert evidence (see eg R v Inch (1989) 91 Cr App Rep 51, C-MAC, where a medical orderly was not entitled to express his opinion as to cause of an injury, despite extensive experience in treating such injuries).

As to the competence of witnesses to give expert evidence see also R v Oakley (1979) 70 Cr App Rep 7, CA; R v Murphy [1980] QB 434, 71 Cr App Rep 33, CA (police accident inspector competent to give expert evidence as to causes of crash); Gaimster v Marlow [1984] QB 218, 78 Cr App Rep 156, DC (police Intoximeter operator may explain significance of test results relying on his expertise); R v Barnes [2005] EWCA Crim 1158, [2005] All ER (D) 117 (May) (expert on woodgrains had no experience or expertise to judge the extent to which striations in a fingerprint lift might reflect the woodgrain on the door).

3 The Civil Evidence Act 1972 s 4(1) states: it is hereby declared that in civil proceedings a person who is suitably qualified to do so on account of his knowledge or experience is competent to give expert evidence as to the law of any country or territory outside the United Kingdom or of any part of the United Kingdom other than England and Wales irrespective of whether he has acted or is entitled to act as a legal practitioner there. This provision is clearly declaratory of the common law (see eg Brailey v Rhodesian Consolidates Ltd [1910] 2 Ch 95; Ajami v Customs Comptroller [1954] 1 WLR 1405, PC). As such it appears to reflect the law applicable in criminal cases.

4 See R v Clare [1995] 2 Cr App Rep 333, [1995] Crim LR 947, CA (police officer who had spent many hours studying and interpreting a video recording showing crowd trouble at a football match, comparing the images with film of the appellants taken as they entered and left the ground, held competent to give expert testimony identifying them as the ringleaders of the disturbance).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1491. Proof of facts upon which expert opinion is based.

1491. Proof of facts upon which expert opinion is based.

Counsel calling an expert witness should in examination in chief ask his witness to state the facts upon which his opinion is based. It is wrong to leave the other side to elicit the facts by cross-examination<sup>1</sup>. An expert witness is entitled to support his opinion by referring to professional practice with which he is familiar<sup>2</sup>, and is entitled both to refresh his memory by reference to textbooks or other treatises and to refer to them to confirm or explain his opinion<sup>3</sup>.

The hearsay rule applies to expert testimony to the extent that any fact which is basic to the expert's opinion must be proved by admissible evidence, and the expert may not ordinarily give hearsay evidence of it<sup>4</sup>. In contrast, an expert witness may draw on the body of expertise relevant to his field in reaching his conclusion, and this may involve giving evidence of published or unpublished research or statistics undertaken or prepared by other persons working in his field<sup>5</sup>.

Where requisite notice is given under the Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>6</sup>, an expert witness may in his written or oral evidence<sup>7</sup> base an opinion or inference on a statement prepared for the purposes of criminal proceedings or for the purposes of a criminal investigation which gave rise to those proceedings<sup>8</sup> by another person (such as a colleague or assistant) who had or may reasonably be supposed to have had personal knowledge of the matters stated<sup>9</sup>; but this procedure does not apply if the court, on an application by a party to the proceedings, orders that it is not in the interests of justice that it should apply<sup>10</sup>.

10 Ibid s 127(4). The matters to be considered by the court in deciding whether to make an order under s 127(4) include: (1) the expense of calling as a witness the person who prepared the statement; (2) whether relevant evidence could be given by that person which could not be given by the expert; (3) whether that person can reasonably be expected to remember the matters stated well enough to give oral evidence of them: s 127(5).

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1492. Expert evidence: admissibility and pre-trial disclosure.

1492. Expert evidence: admissibility and pre-trial disclosure.

An expert report<sup>1</sup> is admissible as evidence in criminal proceedings whether or not the person making it attends to give oral evidence in those proceedings; but, if it is proposed that the person making the report is not to give oral evidence, the report is admissible only with the leave of the court<sup>2</sup>.

The Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>3</sup> make provision for requiring any party to proceedings before the court to disclose to the other party or parties any expert evidence which he proposes to adduce in the proceedings, and prohibiting a party who fails to comply in respect of any evidence with any requirement so imposed from adducing that evidence without the leave of the court<sup>4</sup>.

Where an expert witness is instructed by the prosecution but his findings do not support the prosecution case, the prosecution is obliged to disclose this to the defence<sup>5</sup>. No directly comparable obligation is placed on the defence, but where the defendant instructs a person with a view to his providing any expert opinion for possible use as evidence at the trial, he must give to the court and the prosecutor a notice specifying the person's name and address<sup>6</sup> unless he has already given notification of his intention to call that person as a witness<sup>7</sup>. It may then be possible for the prosecution to call the expert witness in question (for example where his findings would be damaging to the defence case)<sup>8</sup>.

1 For these purposes, 'expert report' means a written report by a person dealing wholly or mainly with matters on which he is, or would if living be, qualified to give expert evidence: Criminal Justice Act 1988 s 30(5).

2 Ibid s 30(1), (2). An expert report, when admitted, is evidence of any fact or opinion of which the person making it could have given oral evidence: s 30(4). For the purpose of determining whether to give leave, the court must have regard to:

99 (1) the contents of the report (s 30(3)(a));

100 (2) the reasons why it is proposed that the person making the report is not to give oral evidence (s 30(3)(b));

101 (3) any risk, having regard in particular to whether it is likely to be possible to controvert statements in the report if the person making it does not attend to give oral evidence in the proceedings, that its admission or exclusion will result in unfairness to the defendant or, if there is more than one, to any of them (s 30(3)(c)); and

102 (4) any other circumstances that appear to the court to be relevant (s 30(3)(d)).

At common law, an expert report was inadmissible as evidence of the deceased expert's opinion: R v McGuire (1985) 81 Cr App Rep 323, CA.

3 See CrimPR Pt 24. The appropriate rules are made by virtue of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 81 (amended by the Courts Act 2003 s 109(1), Sch 8 para 286) (advance notice of expert evidence in Crown Court), and the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 20(3) (amended by the Courts Act 2003 Sch 8 para 378) (advance notice of expert evidence in magistrates' courts).

4 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 81(1) (as amended: see note 3 supra); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 20(3) (as amended: see note 3 supra). Such rules may specify the kinds of expert advice to which they apply and may exempt facts or matters of any description specified in the rules: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 81(2) (as so amended); Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 20(4).

If following:

- 103 (1) a plea of not guilty by any person to an alleged offence in respect of which a magistrates' court proceeds to summary trial (see PARA 1104 et seq ante);
- 104 (2) the committal for trial of any person (see PARA 1105 ante);
- 105 (3) the transfer to the Crown Court of any proceedings for the trial of a person by virtue of a notice of transfer given under the Criminal Justice Act 1987 s 4 (as amended; prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1105 ante);
- 106 (4) the transfer to the Crown Court of any proceedings for the trial of a person by virtue of a notice of transfer served on a magistrates' court under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 53 (as amended; prospectively repealed) (see PARA 1105 ante);
- 107 (5) the sending of any person for trial under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 s 51 (as amended; prospectively substituted) (see PARA 1132 ante);
- 108 (6) the preferring of a bill of indictment charging a person with an offence under the authority of the Administration of Justice (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1933 s 2(2)(b) (as amended) (see PARA 1206 ante); or
- 109 (7) the making of an order for the re-trial of any person (see PARA 1896 post), any party to criminal proceedings proposes to adduce expert evidence (whether of fact or opinion) in the proceedings (otherwise than in relation to sentence) he must as soon as practicable, unless in relation to the evidence in question he has already done so or the evidence is the subject of an application for leave to adduce such evidence in accordance with the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41 (see PARA 1446 ante): (a) furnish the other party or parties with a statement in writing of any finding or opinion which he proposes to adduce by way of such evidence; and (b) where a request in writing is made to him in that behalf by any other party, provide that party also with a copy of (or if it appears to the party proposing to adduce the evidence to be more practicable, a reasonable opportunity to examine) the record of any observation, test, calculation or other procedure on which such finding or opinion is based and any document or other thing or substance in respect of which any such procedure has been carried out: CrimPR 24.1(1). 'Document' means anything in which information of any description is recorded: CrimPR 24.1(3).

A party may by notice in writing waive his right to be furnished with any of the matters mentioned in r 24.1(1) and, in particular, may agree that the statement mentioned in head (a) supra may be furnished to him orally and not in writing: CrimPR 24.1(2).

Such evidence may be withheld where a party has reasonable grounds for believing that disclosure might lead to the intimidation or attempted intimidation of any person on whose evidence he intends to rely in the proceedings, or otherwise to the course of justice being interfered with: CrimPR 24.2(1). Notice in writing that the evidence is being withheld must be given to the other party along with the grounds for doing so: CrimPR 24.2(2).

A party who seeks to adduce expert evidence in any proceedings and who fails to comply with CrimPR 24.1 may not adduce that evidence in those proceedings without the leave of the court: CrimPR 24.3.

5 As to the prosecution's duty to disclose unused evidence that may assist the defence see PARA 1383 et seq ante.

6 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6D(1) (s 6D prospectively added by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 35 as from a day to be appointed; at the date at which this volume states the law no such day had been appointed).

7 Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 6D(2) (as prospectively added: see note 6 supra). Notice may be given under s 6C (as prospectively added: see PARA 1389 ante).

8 No party has any property in an expert witness: Harmony Shipping Co SA v Saudi Europe Line Ltd [1979] 3 All ER 177, CA; R v Davies [2002] EWCA Crim 85, 166 JP 243, [2002] All ER (D) 159 (Jan). In some cases, however, evidence discovered in this way will be protected by legal professional privilege: R v King (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 1 at 3, CA, per Dunn LJ ('the rule is that in the case of expert witnesses legal professional privilege attaches to confidential communications between the solicitor and the expert, but it does not attach to the chattels or documents upon which the expert based his opinion, nor to the independent opinion of the expert himself'). See also R v R [1994] 4 All ER 260, [1995] 1 Cr App Rep 183, CA (privilege attached to a blood specimen provided by R to his doctor at his solicitors' request and subsequently analysed for the purpose of DNA profiling. The defence were entitled to object when the prosecution called evidence from the scientist concerned, for the purpose of proving that the sample incriminated R); and see also R v Davies supra.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1493. Duty of expert witnesses to assist the court.

1493. Duty of expert witnesses to assist the court.

Expert witnesses have an obligation to assist the court. They must remain objective and express only genuinely held opinions which are not biased in favour of either party<sup>1</sup>, and they should ensure wherever possible that developments in scientific thinking and techniques are not kept from the court, even where they remain at the stage of a mere hypothesis<sup>2</sup>. This duty is facilitated by the Criminal Procedure Rules<sup>3</sup> which enable opposing experts to consult together prior to the trial and, if possible, agree points of agreement or disagreement with a summary of reasons<sup>4</sup>.

In R v Harris supra at [271] per Gage LJ the Court of Appeal endorsed the following principles, derived from The Ikerian Reefer [1993] 2 Lloyd's Rep 68 at 81 per Cresswell J:

- 110 (1) Expert evidence presented to the court should be and seen to be the independent product of the expert uninfluenced as to form or content by the exigencies of litigation.
- 111 (2) An expert witness should provide independent assistance to the court by way of objective unbiased opinion in relation to matters within his expertise. An expert witness . . . should never assume the role of advocate.
- 112 (3) An expert witness should state the facts or assumptions on which his opinion is based. He should not omit to consider material facts which detract from his concluded opinions.
- 113 (4) An expert should make it clear when a particular question or issue falls outside his expertise.
- 114 (5) If an expert's opinion is not properly researched because he considers that insufficient data is available then this must be stated with an indication that the opinion is no more than a provisional one.
- 115 (6) If after exchange of reports, an expert witness changes his view on material matters, such change of view should be communicated to the other side without delay and when appropriate to the court.

In R v Bowman [2006] EWCA Crim 417, [2006] All ER (D) 20 (Mar), the court further indorsed those principles, but called for the following additional matters to be included (where relevant) in expert reports:

- 116 (a) Details of the expert's academic and professional qualifications, experience and accreditation relevant to the opinions expressed in the report and the range and extent of the expertise and any limitations upon the expertise.
- 117 (b) A statement setting out the substance of all the instructions received (written or oral), questions upon which an opinion is sought, the materials provided and considered, and the documents, statements, evidence, information or assumptions which are material to the opinions expressed or upon which those opinions are based.

- 118 (c) Information relating to who has carried out measurements, examinations, tests etc and the methodology used, and whether or not such measurements etc were carried out under the expert's supervision.
- 119 (d) Where there is a range of opinion in the matters dealt with in the report, a summary of the range of opinion and the reasons for the opinion given. In this connection any material facts or matters which detract from the expert's opinions and any points which should fairly be made against any opinions expressed should be set out.
- 120 (e) Relevant extracts of literature or any other material which might assist the court.
- 121 (f) A statement to the effect that the expert has complied with his duty to the court to provide independent assistance by way of objective unbiased opinion in relation to matters within his expertise and an acknowledgment that the expert will inform all parties and where appropriate the court in the event that his opinion changes on any material issues.
- 122 (g) Where, on an exchange of experts' reports, matters arise which require a further or supplemental report the above guidelines should, of course, be complied with.

In R v Harris supra at [272] per Gage LJ the court also endorsed the following guidance, derived from Re AB (Child Abuse: Expert Witnesses) [1995] 1 FLR 181 at 192 per Wall J: 'The expert who advances . . . a hypothesis owes a very heavy duty to explain to the court that what he is advancing is a hypothesis, that it is controversial (if it is) and place before the court all material which contradicts the hypothesis. Secondly, he must make all his material available to the other experts in the case. It is the common experience of the courts that the better the experts the more limited their areas of disagreement, and in the forensic context of a contested case relating to children, the objective of the lawyers and the experts should always be to limit the ambit of disagreement on medical issues to the minimum'.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1494. Weight and evaluation of expert evidence.

1494. Weight and evaluation of expert evidence.

The weight to be given to expert evidence is ultimately a matter for the court or jury<sup>1</sup> or (in the case of evidence as to foreign law) a matter for the judge to assess<sup>2</sup>. Clearly a court or jury is not bound to accept the truth of expert evidence where there is other material before them which conflicts with it and outweighs it<sup>3</sup>. In most cases it would be wrong for a jury to be directed even that uncontradicted expert evidence should be accepted<sup>4</sup>. In some cases, however, rejection of cogent, unequivocal and uncontradicted expert evidence would be perverse and the jury should be directed accordingly, especially where such evidence is favourable to the defendant<sup>5</sup>. Whether rejection of expert evidence would in fact be perverse must be assessed in the light of all the circumstances<sup>6</sup>.

Where prosecution and defence experts disagree and offer contradictory opinions, this clearly creates difficulties, particularly in cases where there is no hard factual evidence that might provide a court or jury with a reasoned basis for preferring the opinions of one reputable set of experts to the other. If in such a case the outcome of a trial depends exclusively (or almost exclusively) on a serious disagreement between distinguished and reputable experts, it will often be unwise, and therefore unsafe, for the trial to proceed<sup>7</sup>. It does not follow, however, that expert evidence called for the prosecution is necessarily neutralised whenever it is contradicted by reputable experts called for the defence, or that the defendant must then be acquitted unless there is other evidence, independent of the expert, supporting the prosecution case<sup>8</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1495. Opinion evidence on the ultimate issue.

1495. Opinion evidence on the ultimate issue.

At common law, it was formerly held that opinion evidence could not be given, even where it otherwise fell within the competence of an expert witness, if it dealt with the ultimate issue to be decided by the court or jury<sup>1</sup>. This rule has been abolished in civil cases<sup>2</sup>. In criminal cases, it is now regarded as more a matter of form than one of substance<sup>3</sup> and in some cases it appears to have been largely ignored<sup>4</sup>. In most cases, however, an expert will not be able to offer a valid opinion on the ultimate issue, if only because he will have examined only one part of the evidence in the case, and will have no special competence in respect of other issues relevant to guilt or innocence<sup>5</sup>. Even where expert witnesses have (rightly or wrongly) been allowed to express an opinion as to guilt or innocence, the jury must be directed that the decision is theirs and they are not bound to accept the expert's views<sup>6</sup>.

EVIDENCE/(14) OPINION AND EXPERT EVIDENCE/1496. Opinions of ordinary witnesses.

1496. Opinions of ordinary witnesses.

On matters with respect to which it is practically impossible for a witness to swear positively, the most that can be asked is that a witness should give his honest impression. Hence the opinions of ordinary witnesses are admissible as to a variety of matters including the identity, condition, comparison or resemblance of persons or things<sup>1</sup>. A witness may state his belief that the defendant is the person he saw committing the offence<sup>2</sup>, or that a photograph which is produced is a likeness of a relevant person<sup>3</sup>; and a person's handwriting may be proved by, inter alia, the opinion of witnesses who are acquainted with it<sup>4</sup>.

Where a statement of opinion is proffered as a way of conveying relevant facts perceived by a witness, the opinion is admissible<sup>5</sup>. Thus a witness may give his opinion that a person was drunk, if he gives the facts on which he bases his opinion<sup>6</sup>. Observations as to the conduct of a person with whom he is well acquainted may lead the witness to a conclusion as to his sanity which summarises the results of his observations<sup>7</sup>.

Where the opinion of the witness or his belief is, or becomes, relevant to an issue in the case, as evidencing his state of mind or good faith, he may of course give evidence of it<sup>8</sup>.

See also eg R v Cox [1898] 1 QB 179, CCR (age of child); R v Beckett (1913) 29 TLR 332, 8 Cr App Rep 204, CCA (value of item where specialised knowledge not necessary). 6 An ordinary witness may give evidence of his opinion that a person was drunk, but not, even if he is a driver, that the person was unfit to drive through drink. Expert medical evidence may be necessary on that issue: R v Davies [1962] 3 All ER 97, 46 Cr App Rep 292, C-MAC. Cf R v Neal [1962] Crim LR 698, C-MAC.

A witness may not in general testify to the insanity of another unless he is an expert: R v Loake (1911) 7 Cr App Rep 71 at 72, CCA. As to the need for expert medical evidence in insanity cases see the Criminal Procedure (Insanity and Unfitness to Plead) Act 1991 s 1(1), (2); and PARA 1485 ante.

8 Eg in offences relating to deception, where the prosecution must prove that the representation operated on the mind of the victim: see eg R v Laverty [1970] 3 All ER 432, 54 Cr App Rep 495, CA. The belief of the defendant, even where mistaken, may be relevant eg to bigamy (R v Tolson (1889) 23 QBD 168, CCR), self defence (R v Williams [1987] 3 All ER 411, 78 Cr App Rep 276, CA) and to the element of dishonesty in theft (see the Theft Act 1968 s 2; and PARA 283 ante).

EVIDENCE/(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS/1497. Previous conviction of defendant as element of offence charged.

(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS

1497. Previous conviction of defendant as element of offence charged.

It is an element of certain statutory offences that the defendant has been convicted previously<sup>1</sup>. In such circumstances the fact of the previous conviction will be relevant to the issues before the jury and may accordingly be proved<sup>2</sup>.

1 See eg the Firearms Act 1968 s 21(1), (2) (as amended) (possession of firearms by persons previously convicted of crime) (see PARA 672 ante); and the Road Traffic Act 1988 s 103(1) (as substituted) (obtaining a licence, or driving, while disqualified) (see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(1) (2007 Reissue) PARA 481). Where a certificate of conviction is tendered to prove the disqualification, the particular offence for which the disqualification was imposed should alone appear upon the certificate: Stone v Bastick [1967] 1 QB 74, [1965] 3 All ER 713, DC.

2 See R v Penfold [1902] 1 KB 547, 66 JP 248, CCR. As to the methods by which convictions may be proved see PARA 1500 post. As to other judgments and sentences that may determine the status of a person or thing see PARA 1499 post.

EVIDENCE/(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS/1498. Convictions by United Kingdom or Service courts as evidence of commission of offence.

1498. Convictions by United Kingdom or Service courts as evidence of commission of offence.

In any proceedings<sup>1</sup>, the fact that a person other than the defendant has been convicted of an offence by or before any court in the United Kingdom or by a Service court<sup>2</sup> outside the United Kingdom is admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving, where to do so is relevant to any issue<sup>3</sup> in those proceedings, that that person committed that offence, where evidence of his having done so is admissible is given<sup>4</sup>. In any proceedings in which by virtue of the above provisions a person other than the defendant is proved to have been convicted of an offence by or before any court in the United Kingdom or by a Service court outside the United Kingdom, he is to be taken to have committed that offence unless the contrary is proved<sup>5</sup>.

In any proceedings where evidence is admissible of the fact that the defendant has committed an offence, if the defendant is proved to have been convicted of the offence by or before any court in the United Kingdom or by a Service court outside the United Kingdom, he is to be taken to have committed that offence unless the contrary is proved<sup>6</sup>.

Nothing in the above provisions prejudices the admissibility in evidence of any conviction which would otherwise be admissible, or the operation of any enactment whereby a conviction or a finding of fact in any proceedings is for the purposes of any other proceedings made conclusive evidence of any fact<sup>7</sup>.

Where evidence that a person has been convicted of any offence is so admissible, then, without prejudice to the reception of any other admissible evidence for the purpose of identifying the facts on which the conviction was based, the contents of any document which is admissible as evidence of the conviction and the contents of the information, complaint, indictment, or charge-sheet on which the person in question was convicted are admissible in evidence for that purpose<sup>8</sup>. Where in any proceedings the contents of any document are so admissible in evidence, a copy of that document, or of the material part of it, purporting to be certified or otherwise authenticated by or on behalf of the court or authority having custody of that document is admissible in evidence and is to be taken to be true copy of that document or part unless the contrary is shown<sup>9</sup>.

Nothing in the above provisions prejudices any power of a court to exclude evidence, whether by preventing questions from being put or otherwise, at its discretion<sup>10</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'proceedings' see PARA 1365 note 1 ante.

2 For these purposes, 'Service court' means a court-martial or a standing civilian court: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 82(1). References to conviction before a Service court are references to a finding of guilty which is, or falls to be treated as, the finding of the court; and convicted is to be construed accordingly: s 82(2) (amended by the Armed Forces Act 1996 s 35(1), Sch 6 para 14). As to courts-martial see ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 448 et seq.

As to the admissibility of convictions in foreign courts, or of acquittals, or of the verdicts of civil courts, as evidence of the facts they purport to decide see PARA 1499 post.

3 'Issue' is apt to cover not only an issue which is an essential ingredient in the offence charged, for instance in a handling case the fact that the goods were stolen (as in R v Pigram [1995] Crim LR 808, CA) but also less fundamental issues, for instance evidential issues arising during the course of the proceedings: R v Robertson,

R v Golder [1987] QB 920 at 927, 85 Cr App Rep 304 at 311, CA, per Lord Lane CJ; R v Roberts [1995] Crim LR 638, CA. Evidence of the previous convictions of third parties may be relevant to the nature of the transactions in which the defendant is taking part: R v Warner; R v Jones (1992) 96 Cr App Rep 324, CA (on a charge of conspiracy to supply heroin, convictions of the defendant's alleged customers for possession of heroin could not be described as irrelevant). See also R v Buckingham (1993) 99 Cr App Rep 303, CA (evidence of previous convictions admissible if it prevents undesirable speculation by jury); but the conviction of a mere friend or associate is otherwise unlikely to have sufficient relevance: R v Hasson and Davey [1997] Crim LR 579, CA.

The provision should be sparingly used, particularly in relation to joint offences such as conspiracy and affray (in which a guilty plea by one of two defendants would potentially raise a presumption that they conspired or committed affray together): R v Robertson, R v Golder supra; R v Curry [1988] Crim LR 527, CA; R v Dixon (2000) 164 JP 721, CA; R v Stewart [1999] Crim LR 746, CA; R v Wardell [1997] Crim LR 450, CA (evidence of conviction of co-defendant inadmissible where of no probative value); R v Mahmood [1997] Crim LR 447, CA (trial judge must know basis of co-defendant's guilty plea before he can identify a possible issue to which it may be relevant). Technically admissible evidence might be of such slight value that it ought not to be adduced: R v Robertson, R v Golder supra at 928 and 311 per Lord Lane CJ.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 (as amended) (see PARA 1365 ante) may be used to limit the operation of s 74 (as amended): R v Robertson, R v Golder supra at 928 and 312 per Lord Lane CJ, but this is possible only where it is the prosecution that seeks to rely on s 74 (as amended). See further R v O'Connor [1987] Crim LR 260, CA; R v Lunnon (1988) 88 Cr App Rep 71, CA; R v Grey (1988) 88 Cr App Rep 375, CA; R v Bennett [1988] Crim LR 686, CA; R v Castle [1989] Crim LR 567, CA; R v Kempster [1989] 1 WLR 1125, 90 Cr App Rep 14, CA.

EVIDENCE/(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS/1499. Evidential value of acquittals, civil judgments and rulings of foreign courts.

1499. Evidential value of acquittals, civil judgments and rulings of foreign courts.

The judgment of a civil or criminal court in the United Kingdom or elsewhere may (regardless of its merits) provide conclusive evidence as to the legal status of a person or thing<sup>1</sup>; but at common law a verdict in an earlier case was considered to be a mere expression of opinion and as such was inadmissible in other proceedings for the purpose of proving any alleged facts on which that judgment was based<sup>2</sup>.

It is sometimes suggested that this rule has now been abolished<sup>3</sup>, but subject to a number of important statutory exceptions, it remains good law<sup>4</sup>.

The common law rule has been abrogated by legislation in so far as it concerned convictions by courts in the United Kingdom or by (British) service courts elsewhere. Where relevant such convictions are now admissible and once proved raise a presumption that the person convicted was guilty of the offence in question<sup>5</sup>; but in criminal trials the common law rule remains applicable to other judicial decisions, including convictions imposed by foreign, Commonwealth or Irish courts, acquittals in United Kingdom courts or elsewhere<sup>6</sup> and the judgments of civil courts<sup>7</sup>.

Where at a previous trial the defendant was himself acquitted of some other alleged offence, the prosecution is not bound to accept that he was innocent of that offence and is not thereby precluded from calling evidence to prove that he was in fact guilty of it<sup>8</sup>. The doctrine of issue estoppel has no application to criminal proceedings<sup>9</sup>.

1 Judgments which conclusively determine status include adjudications in bankruptcy (see the Insolvency Act 1986 ss 278-282 (as amended) (see BANKRUPTCY AND INDIVIDUAL INSOLVENCY vol 3(2) (2002 Reissue) PARA 629 et seq); grants of probate (see Allen v Dundas (1789) Term Rep 125; and EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS vol 17(2) (Reissue) PARA 72 et seq); adjudications by professional bodies such as the Law Society or the General Medical Council under which practitioners are 'struck off' (Hill v Clifford [1907] 2 Ch 236, CA); and disqualification orders made under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 (see COMPANY AND PARTNERSHIP INSOLVENCY vol 7(3) PARA 1107 et seq) or the Road Traffic Act 1988 (see ROAD TRAFFIC vol 40(2) (2007 Reissue) PARA 1057 et seq).

It may be permissible to cross-examine a witness concerning previous cases in which he gave evidence for the prosecution but in which courts or juries then acquitted the persons accused, 'by reason of which his evidence is demonstrated to have been disbelieved': R v Edwards [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA. The fact that a court or jury has acquitted some other person in a previous trial does not necessarily demonstrate that any particular prosecution witnesses at that trial were disbelieved. A verdict of not guilty at an earlier trial may mean no more than that the jury entertained some doubt about the prosecution case, not necessarily that they believed any witness was lying: R v Edwards supra.

Although R v Hay (1983) 77 Cr App Rep 70, CA, was not expressly overruled in R v Z supra, much of the reasoning in R v Hay supra is plainly inconsistent with the rationale of the decision of the House of Lords in R v Z supra: see R v Colman supra at [41] per Auld LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

9 DPP v Humphrys [1977] AC 1, 63 Cr App Rep 95, HL. See PARA 1277 ante. Nevertheless, the principle of double jeopardy may be infringed if any steps are taken by the prosecutor which may result in the punishment of the defendant on some other ground for what is in effect the same offence as that for which he has already been acquitted. To this limited extent, Sambasivam v Public Prosecutor, Federation of Malaya [1950] AC 458, 66 (pt 2) TLR 254, PC, appears to remain good law.

1499 Evidential value of acquittals, civil judgments and rulings of foreign courts

TEXT AND NOTES 1-4--Cf R v Kordasinski [2006] EWCA Crim 2984, [2007] 1 Cr App Rep 238; and PARA 1502 NOTE 3.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS/1500. Proof of convictions and acquittals.

1500. Proof of convictions and acquittals.

Where in any proceedings<sup>1</sup> the fact that a person has in the United Kingdom<sup>2</sup> been convicted or acquitted of an offence otherwise than by a Service court<sup>3</sup> is admissible in evidence, it may be proved by producing a certificate of conviction or, as the case may be, of acquittal relating to that offence, and proving that the person named in the certificate as having been convicted or acquitted of the offence is the person whose conviction or acquittal of the offence is to be proved<sup>4</sup>.

For these purposes, a certificate of conviction or of acquittal:

- 2201 (1) must, as regards a conviction or acquittal on indictment, consist of a certificate, signed by the proper officer<sup>5</sup> of the court where the conviction or acquittal took place, giving the substance and effect (omitting the formal parts) of the indictment and of the conviction or acquittal; and
- 2202 (2) must, as regards a conviction or acquittal on a summary trial, consist of a copy of the conviction or of the dismissal of the information, signed by the proper officer of the court where the conviction or acquittal took place or by the proper officer of the court, if any, to which a memorandum of the conviction or acquittal was sent;

and a document purporting to be a duly signed certificate of conviction or acquittal is to be taken to be such a certificate unless the contrary is proved<sup>6</sup>.

The method of proving a conviction or acquittal so authorised is in addition to, and not to the exclusion of, any other authorised manner of proving a conviction or acquittal<sup>7</sup>.

Where a person is convicted of a summary offence by a magistrates' court, other than a youth court, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the court, on oath or in such other manner as may be prescribed, that not less than seven days previously a notice was served on the defendant in the prescribed form and manner specifying any alleged previous conviction of the defendant of a summary offence proposed to be brought to the notice of the court in the event of his conviction of the offence charged; and the defendant is not present in person before the court, the court may take account of any such previous conviction so specified as if the defendant had appeared and admitted it<sup>8</sup>.

Where evidence of a conviction or acquittal in a foreign court is admissible, the conviction or acquittal may be proved by examined copies or authenticated copies of the relevant judgment<sup>9</sup>, although it may still be necessary to prove that the conviction or acquittal relates to (for example) the defendant who is currently before the court<sup>10</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'proceedings' see PARA 1365 note 1 ante.

2 For the meaning of 'United Kingdom' see PARA 45 note 2 ante.

3 For the meaning of 'Service court' see PARA 1498 note 2 ante. As to proof of proceedings of a court-martial see the Army Act 1955 s 200; the Air Force Act 1955 s 200; the Naval Discipline Act 1957 s 129C (as added); and ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 387. These provisions apply to evidence given in any court, whether civil or criminal and whether in the United Kingdom or in any colony: see the Army Act 1955 s 200(3); the Air Force Act 1955 s 200(3); the Naval Discipline Act 1957 s 129C(3) (as added); and ARMED FORCES vol 2(2) (Reissue) PARA 387. They also apply in respect of judgments of Standing Civilian Courts: see the Standing Civilian Courts Order 1997, SI 1997/172, art 91, Sch 4.

4 Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 73(1). Proof according to s 73(1) involves two evidential stages: (1) the production of the certificate of conviction; and (2) proof to the criminal standard that the person to whom that certificate relates is the defendant. There are no particular defined methods of proof in relation to head (2) supra. It might take the form of an admission by or on behalf of the defendant (or of a failure by him to deny it), evidence of finger prints or of a witness who was present in court when the defendant was convicted or evidence of a match between the personal details of the defendant and those recorded on the certificate of conviction. Even where the personal details are not uncommon, a match would be sufficient for a prima facie case and if not contradicted it may be sufficient for the court to convict: Pattison v DPP [2005] EWHC 2938 (Admin), [2006] 2 All ER 317. See also Ellis v Jones [1973] 2 All ER 893, DC; R v Derwentside Justices, ex p Heaviside [1996] RTR 384, DC; R v Derwentside Justices, ex p Swift; R v Sunderland Justices, ex p Bate [1997] RTR 89, DC; DPP v Mooney [1997] RTR 434, CA; Olakunori v DPP [1998] COD 443; Bailey v DPP (1999) 163 JP 518, DC; R v Burns [2006] EWCA Crim 617, [2006] 1 WLR 1273, [2006] All ER (D) 9 (Mar); R v Lewenden [2006] EWCA Crim 648, [2006] All ER (D) 10 (Mar). Fingerprint evidence, if available, will usually be the best form of proof: R v Mauricia [2002] EWCA Crim 676, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 377.

As to the circumstances in which a previous conviction or acquittal of the defendant may be admissible in evidence see PARA 1507 post; SENTENCING AND DISPOSITION OF OFFENDERS vol 92 (2010) PARAS 618-619. As to the circumstances in which the conviction or acquittal of a witness, complainant or third party may be admissible see PARAS 1504, 1510 post.

5 For these purposes, 'proper officer' means: (1) in relation to a magistrates' court in England and Wales, the designated officer for the court; and (2) in relation to any other court, the clerk of the court, his deputy or any other person having custody of the court record: Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 73(3) (substituted by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 90(1), Sch 13 paras 125, 128(1), (3)). 8 Magistrates' Courts Act 1980 s 104 (amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 s 100, Sch 11 para 40(1), (2)(n)). The register of a magistrates' court, or an extract from the register certified by the magistrates' court officer as a true extract, is admissible in any legal proceedings as evidence of the proceedings of the court entered in the register: CrimPR 6.4 (reproducing the Magistrates' Courts Rules 1981, SI 1981/552, r 68 (as amended)).

9 See the Evidence Act 1851 s 7. In the case of a judgment, decree, order, or other judicial proceeding of any foreign or colonial court, or an affidavit, pleading, or other legal document filed or deposited in any such court, the authenticated copy to be admissible in evidence must purport either to be sealed with the seal of the foreign or colonial court to which the original document belongs, or, in the event of such court having no seal, to be signed by the judge, or, if there be more than one judge, by any one of the judges of the said court; and such judge must attach to his signature a statement in writing on the said copy that the court whereof he is a judge has no seal; but if any of the aforesaid authenticated copies purports to be sealed or signed as hereinbefore respectively directed, the same must respectively be admitted in evidence in every case in which the original document could have been received in evidence, without any proof of the seal where a seal is necessary, or of the signature, or of the truth of the statement attached thereto, where such signature and statement are necessary, or of the judicial character of the person appearing to have made such signature and statement: Evidence Act 1851 s 7.

EVIDENCE/(15) PREVIOUS JUDGMENTS/1501. Proof of civil judgments and proceedings.

1501. Proof of civil judgments and proceedings.

Proceedings and judgments in a county court may be proved by production of a copy of any entry or document purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the relevant district judge<sup>1</sup>.

Every document purporting to be sealed or stamped with the seal or stamp of the Supreme Court must be received in evidence in all parts of the United Kingdom without further proof<sup>2</sup>.

The register of a magistrates' court, or an extract from the register certified by the magistrates' court officer as a true extract, is admissible in any legal proceedings as evidence of the proceedings of the court entered in the register<sup>3</sup>.

Civil judgments of courts outside the United Kingdom may be proved in the same manner as foreign convictions and acquittals<sup>4</sup>.

1 County Courts Act 1984 s 12(2) (amended by the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 s 125(3), Sch 18 para 42). Such a copy must at all times without further proof be admitted in any court or place whatsoever as evidence of the entry and of the proceeding referred to by it and of the regularity of that proceeding: County Courts Act 1984 s 12(2) (as so amended).

2 See the Supreme Court Act 1981 s 132; CPR 2.6(3); and CIVIL PROCEDURE vol 11 (2009) PARA 81.

TEXT AND NOTE 2--Supreme Court Act 1981 now cited as Senior Courts Act 1981 and reference to Supreme Court is now to Senior Courts: s 132 (amended by Constitutional Reform Act 2005 Sch 11 paras 1, 26).

TEXT AND NOTE 3--CrimPR Pt 6 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 6.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1502. In general.

(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER

1502. In general.

In criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup>, all common law rules governing the admissibility of evidence of a person's bad character<sup>2</sup> have now been abolished<sup>3</sup>, with the exception of the rule under which in criminal proceedings a person's reputation is admissible for the purposes of proving his good or bad character<sup>4</sup>. In most respects, therefore, the admissibility of evidence of bad character, whether of a defendant, a witness or complainant, or third party (such as an alternative suspect or the deceased victim of the alleged crime) is now governed by legislation<sup>5</sup>.

Evidence of a person's good character is still governed primarily by rules of common law<sup>6</sup>. Cases may also arise in which the previous conduct of a defendant is of probative value and therefore relevant to a matter in issue between him and the prosecution or a co-defendant, yet the conduct in question may not involve evidence of 'bad character' as such. Such evidence may also remain admissible at common law because it is relevant to an issue in the case<sup>7</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 99(1). Some cases decided under common law rules may nevertheless remain of value when interpreting and applying the legislation that has supplanted those rules: R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824, [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299, [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar).

<sup>4</sup> Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 99(2). As to the use of evidence of reputation to prove good or bad character see also s 118(1); and R v Rowton (1865) Le & Ca 520, CCCR. The preserved common law rule permits the use of evidence that might otherwise be impugned both as hearsay and as non-expert opinion as a means of establishing good or bad character; but it is concerned with how such character may be proved, and not with whether such character is relevant or admissible in the first place. The admissibility of a person's bad character, in circumstances where it is to be proved by reputation, falls to be determined under the Criminal Justice Act 2003: see s 101; and PARA 1505 post.

<sup>5</sup> The principal provisions are now set out in ibid Pt 11 Ch 1 (ss 98-113): see PARA 1503 et seq post. These were brought into force on 15 December 2004 (see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Commencement No 6 and Transitional Provisions) Order 2004, SI 2004/3033) and apply in all trials beginning on or after that date, regardless of the date on which the defendant was first charged with the offence (R v Bradley [2005] EWCA Crim 20, [2005] 1 Cr App Rep 397). See also the Theft Act 1968 s 27(3) (see PARA 1514 post); and, in so far as sexual history evidence may involve evidence of bad character, see the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41 (see PARA 1446 ante).

The rules governing the admissibility of 'evidence of bad character' necessarily determine what questions may legitimately be asked in the cross-examination of defendants or other witnesses. This is recognised in CrimPR Pt 35, which specifies the practice and procedure to be followed in the criminal courts in connection with the admission of bad character evidence.

<sup>7</sup> The Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 99(1) (see the text to notes 1-3 supra) does not exclude such material because it abolishes only common law rules as to bad character: R v Weir [2005] EWCA Crim 2866, [2006] 2 All ER 570, [2006] 1 WLR 1885. See also R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244 at [1], [2006] 1 WLR 1524 at [1], [2006] 3 All ER 882 at [1] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

UPDATE

1502 In general

NOTE 3--The rules abolished include the principle that foreign convictions are not admissible as evidence of character: R v Kordasinski [2006] EWCA Crim 2984, [2007] 1 Cr App Rep 238.

NOTE 5--CrimPR Pt 35 now Criminal Procedure Rules 2010, SI 2010/60, Pt 35.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1503. Bad character.

1503. Bad character.

References to evidence of a person's 'bad character' are to evidence of, or of a disposition towards, misconduct on his part, other than evidence which: (1) has to do with the alleged facts of the offence with which the defendant is charged; or (2) is evidence of misconduct in connection with the investigation or prosecution of that offence<sup>1</sup>. 'Misconduct' means the commission of an offence<sup>2</sup> or other reprehensible behaviour<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 98, 112(1). The various controls and notice requirements imposed by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 on the admissibility of evidence of 'bad character' do not affect the admissibility of any evidence that can be said to concern the commission of the offence itself. They do not therefore apply to evidence suggesting, for example, that the defendant was provoked by the misconduct of the complainant or that he previously stole a car used in the commission of the offence, or that the offence was committed by a co-defendant or third party. Nor do they apply to evidence concerning alleged misconduct (by the defendant or by the police, or indeed by anyone else) in the investigation of the offence. See R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244 at [1(i)], [2006] 1 WLR 1524 at [1(i)], [2006] 3 All ER 882 at [1(i)] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court. See also R v Machado [2006] EWCA Crim 837, [2006] All ER (D) 28 (Mar) (evidence of complainant's intoxication). Where, however, such evidence is deemed to amount to an attack by a defendant on another person's character, this may enable evidence to be given as to the bad character of that defendant: see the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(g); and PARA 1510 post.

<sup>2</sup> 'Offence' includes a service offence: ibid s 112(1). However, an offence need not necessarily have been marked by a charge, caution or conviction. There was no special rule at common law requiring the exclusion of evidence relating to alleged offences of which the defendant had previously been acquitted, provided that the evidence in question was otherwise admissible (R v Z [2000] 2 AC 483, [2000] 3 All ER 385, [2000] 2 Cr App Rep 281, HL; R v Barney [2005] All ER (D) 299 (May), CA) and this clearly remains the position under the Criminal Justice Act 2003: R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244 at [77], [2006] 1 WLR 1524 at [77], [2006] 3 All ER 882 at [77] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court. Similarly an unproven allegation of criminal conduct may properly be put to a witness in cross-examination, with a view to demonstrating an improper motive on the part of that witness: R v Jeneson [2005] EWCA Crim 2298, [2005] All ER (D) 370 (Jul).

If, upon a witness being lawfully questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any offence he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer, it is lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction: Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 6 (amended by the Access to Justice Act 1999 s 90(1), Sch 13 para 3(1), (2); and the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 331, 332, Sch 36 Pt 5 para 79, Sch 37 Pt 5). As to the methods of proving such a conviction see PARA 1500 ante.

An absolute discharge following a finding of unfitness to plead does not constitute a criminal conviction, but nor does it necessarily indicate that the person found unfit to plead was blameless as far as the alleged offence was concerned: eg an act of violence that gave rise to the proceedings in question may still be considered reprehensible behaviour: R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826, [2006] 2 All ER 553; and see note 3 infra.

<sup>3</sup> Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 112(1). 'Reprehensible behaviour' is not itself defined in the Criminal Justice Act 2003, but the term is clearly intended to include conduct that is considered scandalous, disgraceful, dishonest or improper, without being criminal. This may include evidence of sexual misconduct (eg adultery or infidelity to an unmarried partner) but where the person in question is a complainant in respect of an alleged sexual offence, the restrictions imposed on the admissibility of such evidence by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 s 41 (see PARA 1446 ante) are significantly tighter than those imposed under the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

Bad character is defined in terms of disposition as well as actual misconduct and it may therefore include evidence of racist beliefs or of perverted sexual interests, even if there is no evidence to suggest that the person in question has ever acted upon those beliefs or interests. In borderline cases it may be in the interests of the person concerned that his conduct or disposition is classed as 'reprehensible behaviour', because the admissibility of such evidence is then controlled (and may then be prevented) by the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

As to findings of unfitness to plead in respect of acts that might otherwise have resulted in criminal convictions see R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826, [2006] 2 All ER 553.

1503 Bad character

TEXT AND NOTE 1--There must be a nexus in time between the offence with which the defendant is charged and the evidence of misconduct which the prosecution seeks to adduce: R v Tirnaveanu [2007] EWCA Crim 1239, [2007] 4 All ER 301.

NOTE 1--Evidence of a person's 'bad character' might include circumstantial evidence consisting of the common features of several offences with which the defendant is charged: R v Wallace [2007] EWCA Crim 1760, (2007) 171 JP 543. See also R v McNeill [2007] All ER (D) 79 (Nov), CA (evidence supported alleged facts of offence charged but was not evidence of defendant's bad character).

NOTE 2--'Service offence' has the same meaning as in the Armed Forces Act 2006 (see ARMED FORCES): Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 112(1) (definition substituted by the Armed Forces Act 2006 Sch 16 para 215).

NOTE 3--Shouting between partners over the care of a young child is not to be commended but, in the context of a charge of murdering a close friend, it does not cross the threshold contemplated by the words of the 2003 Act: R v Osbourne [2007] EWCA Crim 481, (2007) Times, 24 April.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20. EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1504. Bad character of persons other than defendants.

1504. Bad character of persons other than defendants.

In criminal proceedings<sup>1</sup> evidence of the bad character<sup>2</sup> of a person other than the defendant<sup>3</sup> is admissible if and only if: (1) it is important explanatory evidence<sup>4</sup>; (2) it has substantial probative value in relation to a matter which is a matter in issue in the proceedings, and is of substantial importance in the context of the case as a whole<sup>5</sup>; or (3) all parties to the proceedings agree to the evidence being admissible<sup>6</sup>. The test in respect of the introduction of evidence concerning the bad character of a person other than a defendant is accordingly stricter than the test applicable to evidence concerning the bad character of the defendant himself<sup>7</sup>, but it does clearly extend to matters relating only to the credibility of a witness<sup>8</sup>. Except where it is admitted by agreement, evidence of the bad character of a person other than the defendant must not be given without leave of the court<sup>9</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'criminal proceedings' see PARA 1502 note 1 ante.

2 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

3 Such persons will usually be witnesses for the prosecution or defence, but the same rules of admissibility apply whether they are witnesses or not. There is nothing in the Criminal Justice Act 2003 to suggest that such a person need still be alive; indeed specific reference was made in the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 s 1(3)(ii) (repealed) to imputations made against the deceased victim of the alleged crime.

4 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 100(1)(a). For this purpose evidence is important explanatory evidence if: (1) without it, the court or jury would find it impossible or difficult properly to understand other evidence in the case; and (2) its value for understanding the case as a whole is substantial: s 100(2). Where, for example, it is alleged that the victim of the crime was attacked in connection with a feud between two criminal gangs, the prosecution case might not make sense if the court or jury were left unaware of the victim's own criminal acts or associations. The concept of important explanatory evidence is essentially the same where it involves evidence of a defendant's bad character. See PARA 1506 post.

5 Ibid s 100(1)(b). In assessing the probative value of evidence for this purpose the court must have regard to the following factors (and to any others it considers relevant): (1) the nature and number of the events, or other things, to which the evidence relates; (2) when those events or things are alleged to have happened or existed; (3) where (a) the evidence is evidence of a person's misconduct, and (b) it is suggested that the evidence has probative value by reason of similarity between that misconduct and other alleged misconduct, the nature and extent of the similarities and the dissimilarities between each of the alleged instances of misconduct; and (4) where (a) the evidence is evidence of a person's misconduct, (b) it is suggested that that person is also responsible for the misconduct charged, and (c) the identity of the person responsible for the misconduct charged is disputed, the extent to which the evidence shows or tends to show that the same person was responsible each time: s 100(3).

One of the objectives of this provision was to enhance the limited protection given to witnesses at common law (see R v Sweet-Escott (1971) 55 Cr App Rep 316, CA) and protect them from gratuitous character assassination. Evidence of bad character which has no real significance to an issue or which is only marginally relevant is not admissible under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 100(1)(b), nor is evidence that goes only to a trivial or minor issue in the case.

6 Ibid s 100(1)(c). The consent of a complainant, witness or other person whose character is to be impugned need not be obtained in such a case, since he will not be a party to the proceedings.

the case as a whole (eg because it is suggested that his evidence or some relevant part of his evidence is untrue) a conviction or other significant evidence of bad character is likely to be seen as having substantial probative value in respect of his credibility. See R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826, [2006] 2 All ER 553; R v Edwards (John) [1991] 2 All ER 266, 93 Cr App Rep 48, CA; but cf R v S [2006] All ER (D) 273 (Apr), CA. Even a spent conviction may be relevant where credibility is of real importance: R v Paraskeva (1982) 76 Cr App Rep 162, CA.

As to evidence of a witness's 'general reputation for veracity' (which may involve hearsay evidence of bad character) see R v Richardson [1969] 1 QB 299 at 304, sub nom R v Longman and Richardson [1968] 2 All ER 761 at 764, CA, per Edmund Davies LJ. See also the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 99(2), 118(1); and PARAS 1502 ante, 1523 post. Evidence of reputation may be given in order to prove the bad character of a witness who is not a defendant only when the fact of that bad character is admissible under s 100: see further PARA 1524 post.

9 Ibid s 100(4). A party who wants to introduce evidence of a non-defendant's bad character or who wants to cross-examine a witness with a view to eliciting that evidence under s 100 must apply in the form set out in the practice direction (see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D, CA; Amendment to the Consolidated Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D, CA) and the application must be received by the court officer and all other parties to the proceedings: (1) not more than 14 days after the prosecutor has: (a) complied or purported to comply with the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 3 (as amended) (initial disclosure by the prosecutor), or (b) disclosed the previous convictions of that non-defendant; or (2) as soon as reasonably practicable, where the application concerns a non-defendant who is to be invited to give (or has given) evidence for a defendant: CrimPR 35.2.

A party who receives a copy of an application under CrimPR 35.2 may oppose that application by giving notice in writing to the court officer and all other parties to the proceedings not more than 14 days after receiving that application: CrimPR 35.3.

A party calling a witness who gives unfavourable evidence is not allowed to impeach the witness's credit by general evidence of bad character, even if that witness is ruled to be hostile: see the Criminal Procedure Act 1865 s 3; and PARA 1436 ante.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1505. Bad character of defendants.

1505. Bad character of defendants.

- 2203 (1) all parties to the proceedings agree to the evidence being admissible<sup>4</sup>;
- 2204 (2) the evidence is adduced by the defendant himself or is given in answer to a question asked by him in cross-examination and intended to elicit it<sup>5</sup>;
- 2205 (3) it is important explanatory evidence<sup>6</sup>;
- 2206 (4) it is relevant to an important matter in issue between the defendant and the prosecution<sup>7</sup>;
- 2207 (5) it has substantial probative value in relation to an important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant<sup>8</sup>;
- 2208 (6) it is evidence to correct a false impression given by the defendant<sup>9</sup>; or
- 2209 (7) the defendant has made an attack on another person's character<sup>10</sup>.

The court must not admit evidence under head (4) or head (7) above if, on an application by the defendant to exclude it, it appears to the court that the admission of the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that the court ought not to admit it<sup>11</sup>.

Rules of court may, and, where the party in question is the prosecution, must, contain provision requiring a party who: (a) proposes to adduce evidence of a defendant's bad character; or (b) proposes to cross-examine a witness with a view to eliciting such evidence, to serve on the defendant such notice, and such particulars of or relating to the evidence, as may be prescribed<sup>12</sup>.

1 For the meaning of 'criminal proceedings' see PARA 1502 note 1 ante.

2 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

3 See the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1). See also ss 102-106; and PARA 1506 et seq post.

4 Ibid s 101(1)(a).

5 Ibid s 101(1)(b). There may be circumstances in which it would be in the defendant's own interests to adduce or elicit evidence of his own bad character, either because his character would otherwise be revealed more damagingly in cross-examination or because it is consistent with his chosen line of defence.

6 Ibid s 101(1)(c). See further s 102; and PARA 1506 post.

7 Ibid s 101(1)(d). See further s 103; and PARA 1507 post. 'Important matter' means a matter of substantial importance in the context of the case as a whole: s 112(1).

8 Ibid s 101(1)(e). See further s 104; and PARA 1508 post. Where evidence has substantial probative value in relation to an important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant (because it demonstrates either the defendant's propensity to commit such offences or his propensity to be untruthful) it may be adduced by a co-defendant notwithstanding that it is also highly prejudicial to the defendant. Section 101(3) (see the text to note 11 infra) does not apply to evidence under s 101(1)(e). See also R v Lawson [2006] All ER (D) 116 (Aug), CA.

9 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(f). See further s 105; and PARA 1509 post.

10 Ibid s 101(1)(g). See further s 106; and PARA 1510 post. Where s 101(1) permits proof of the bad character of a defendant (eg for the purpose of impugning his credibility) this proof may be provided (inter alia) by evidence of general reputation under a common law principle preserved by s 118(1) (see PARA 1483 ante). See further PARA 1524 post.

11 Ibid s 101(3). Under the new regime it is apparent that Parliament intended that evidence of bad character would be put before juries more frequently than had hitherto been the case: R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244 at [1(iii)], [2006] 1 WLR 1524 at [1(iii)], [2006] 3 All ER 882 at [1(iii)] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court; and see also R v Stone (Michael) [2005] EWCA Crim 105 at [91], [2005] Crim LR 569 at [91] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court. Evidence that satisfies the relevant criteria is admissible in the absence of such an application, and its use does not require leave from the court; but the court should where necessary encourage the making of such an application: R v Weir [2005] EWCA Crim 2866 at [38], [2006] 2 All ER 570 at [38], [2005] All ER (D) 163 (Nov) at [38] per Kennedy LJ, giving the judgment of the court. On an application to exclude evidence under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(3), the court must perform a balancing exercise (see R v Weir supra) and must have regard, in particular, to the length of time between the matters to which that evidence relates and the matters which form the subject of the offence charged (Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(4)). See also R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824, [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299, [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar).

Although the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(3) applies only to evidence that might otherwise be adduced under s 101(1)(d) or (g) (see heads (4), (7) in the text), the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78(1) (by which a court may refuse to allow any evidence on which the prosecution proposes to rely to be given if it appears to the court that, having regard to all the circumstances, including the circumstances in which the evidence was obtained, the admission of the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that the court ought not to admit it: see PARA 1365 ante) provides an additional protection to defendants: R v Highton [2005] EWCA Crim 1985 at [13], [2005] 1 WLR 3472 at [13], [2006] Crim LR 52 at [13] per Lord Woolf CJ, giving the judgment of the court. Application of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78 (as amended) should ensure that there is no infringement of the defendant's rights under the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Rome, 4 November 1950; TS 71 (1953); Cmd 8969): R v Highton supra at [14] per Lord Woolf CJ, giving the judgment of the court. The Convention is commonly referred to as the European Convention on Human Rights and is enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998 Sch 1: see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS vol 8(2) (Reissue) PARA 122 et seq.

12 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 111(1), (2). The rules may provide that the court or the defendant may, in such circumstances as may be prescribed by rules of court, dispense with a requirement imposed by virtue of s 111(2): s 111(3), (7). In considering the exercise of its powers with respect to costs, the court may take into account any failure by a party to comply with a requirement imposed by such rules: s 111(4). The rules may: (1) limit the application of any provision of the rules to prescribed circumstances; (2) subject any provision of the rules to prescribed exceptions; (3) make different provision for different cases or circumstances: s 111(5). Nothing in s 111 prejudices the generality of any enactment conferring power to make rules of court; and no particular provision of s 111 prejudices any general provision of it: s 111(6).

A prosecutor who wants to introduce evidence of a defendant's bad character or who wants to cross-examine a witness with a view to eliciting that evidence under s 101 must give notice within the prescribed time limits in the form set out in the practice direction (see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D Pt 35, CA; Amendment to the Consolidated Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D Pt 35, CA; Amendment to the Consolidated Criminal Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2006] 3 All ER 484, Annex D Pt 35, CA) to the court officer and all other parties to the proceedings: see CrimPR 35.4. As to the applicable time limits see CrimPR 35.8; and R (on the application of Robinson) v Sutton Coldfield Magistrates' Court [2006] EWHC 307 (Admin), 170 JP 336, [2006] All ER (D) 28 (Feb); R v M [2006] All ER (D) 164 (May).

A co-defendant who wants to introduce evidence of a defendant's bad character or who wants to cross-examine a witness with a view to eliciting that evidence under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101 must give notice in the form set out in the practice direction (see Practice Direction (Criminal Proceedings: Consolidation) [2002] 3 All ER 904, [2002] 2 Cr App Rep 533, Annex D Pt 35, CA; Amendment to the Consolidated Practice Direction (Forms for use in criminal proceedings) [2005] 2 All ER 916, [2005] 1 WLR 1479, Annex D Pt 35, CA) to the court officer and all other parties to the proceedings not more than 14 days after the prosecutor has complied or purported to comply with the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 s 3: CrimPR 35.5.

A defendant's application to exclude bad character evidence must be in the form set out in the Practice Direction and received by the court officer and all other parties to the proceedings not more than 14 days after receiving a notice given under CrimPR 35.4 or CrimPR 35.5: CrimPR 35.6.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1506. Important explanatory evidence.

1506. Important explanatory evidence.

Evidence of a defendant's bad character<sup>1</sup> is important explanatory evidence<sup>2</sup> if: (1) without it, the court or jury would find it impossible or difficult properly to understand other evidence in the case; and (2) its value for understanding the case as a whole is substantial<sup>3</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

2 Ie it is admissible evidence under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(c): see PARA 1505 head (3) ante.

3 Ibid s 102. This appears to preserve or restate established common law doctrine concerning background evidence. See R v Pettman (2 May 1985, unreported), CA, per Purchas LJ: 'Where it is necessary to place before the jury evidence of part of a continual background of history relevant to the offence charged in the indictment and without the totality of which the account placed before the jury would be incomplete or incomprehensible, then the fact that the whole account involves including evidence establishing commission of an offence with which the defendant is not charged is not of itself a ground for excluding the evidence'.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1507. Important matter in issue between the defendant and the prosecution.

1507. Important matter in issue between the defendant and the prosecution.

Only the prosecution may adduce evidence of a defendant's bad character<sup>1</sup> on the basis of its relevance to an important matter in issue between the defendant and the prosecution<sup>2</sup>. Matters in issue between the defendant and the prosecution include: (1) the question whether the defendant has a propensity to commit offences of the kind with which he is charged<sup>3</sup>, except where his having such a propensity makes it no more likely that he is guilty of the offence<sup>4</sup>; and (2) the question whether the defendant has a propensity to be untruthful<sup>5</sup>, except where it is not suggested that the defendant's case is untruthful in any respect<sup>6</sup>.

Where head (1) above applies, a defendant's propensity to commit offences of the kind with which he is charged may (without prejudice to any other way of doing so) be established by evidence that he has been convicted of an offence of the same description as the one with which he is charged, or an offence of the same category as the one with which he is charged<sup>7</sup>; but this does not apply in the case of a particular defendant if the court is satisfied, by reason of the length of time since the conviction or for any other reason, that it would be unjust for it to apply in his case<sup>8</sup>.

For these purposes, two offences are of the same description as each other if the statement of the offence in a written charge or indictment would, in each case, be in the same terms; and two offences are of the same category as each other if they belong to the same category of offences prescribed for these purposes by an order made by the Secretary of State<sup>9</sup>. A category so prescribed must consist of offences of the same type<sup>10</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

2 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(6). Such evidence may be admissible prosecution evidence under s 101(1) (d) (see PARA 1505 head (4) ante). Prosecution applications to adduce such evidence should not be made routinely, simply because a defendant has previous convictions, but should be based on the particular circumstances of each case: R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [4], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [4], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [4] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court. See also R v L [2006] All ER (D) 238 (Jan), CA; R v Blake [2006] EWCA Crim 871, [2006] All ER (D) 361 (Feb); R v Smith [2006] All ER (D) 280 (Feb), CA; R v Atkinson [2006] All ER (D) 290 (May), CA.

3 'There is no minimum number of events necessary to demonstrate such a propensity. The fewer the number of convictions [where convictions are relied upon] the weaker is likely to be the evidence of propensity. A single previous conviction for an offence of the same description or category will often not show propensity. But it may do so where, for example, it shows a tendency to unusual behaviour or where its circumstances demonstrate probative force in relation to the offence charged. . . . Circumstances demonstrating probative force are not confined to those sharing striking similarity. So, a single conviction for shoplifting will not, without more, be admissible to show propensity to steal. But if the modus operandi has significant features shared by the offence charged it may show propensity': R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [9], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [9], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [9] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court; cf DPP v P [1991] 2 AC 447, 93 Cr App Rep 267, HL.

'In any case in which evidence of bad character is admitted to show propensity, whether to commit offences or to be untruthful the judge in summing-up should warn the jury clearly against placing undue reliance on previous convictions. Evidence of bad character cannot be used simply to bolster a weak case, or to prejudice the minds of a jury against a defendant. In particular, the jury should be directed that they should not conclude that the defendant is guilty or untruthful merely because he has these convictions. That, although the convictions may show a propensity, this does not mean that he has committed this offence or been untruthful in this case; that whether they in fact show a propensity is for them to decide; that they must take into account what the defendant has said about his previous convictions; and that, although they are entitled, if they find propensity as shown, to take this into account when determining guilt, propensity is only one relevant factor and they must assess its significance in the light of all the other evidence in the case': R v Hanson supra at [18] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court; R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 1813, [2006] 1 Cr App Rep 31, [2005] All ER (D) 358 (Jun); R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244, [2006] 1 WLR 1524, [2005] All ER (D) 319 (Dec). See also R v Brima [2006] EWCA Crim 408, [2006] All ER (D) 108 (Feb).

Evidence of bad character or propensity (in the form of what was previously known as 'similar fact evidence') may nevertheless transform what would otherwise be an inadequate prosecution case into an overwhelming one: see eg R v Smith (George Joseph) (1915) 11 Cr App Rep 229, CCA (in which it was shown that the unusual but otherwise unexplained death of the defendant's wife through drowning in her bath was identical to the deaths of two other women he had purported to marry, and that in each case the defendant profited financially from the death).

4 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(1)(a). An example of a case in which the defendant's criminal propensity would make it no more likely that he is guilty of the offence is one in which his conduct is not in dispute, but it is disputed whether that conduct was factually or legally the cause of a death with which he is charged.

5 'Propensity to untruthfulness . . . is not the same as propensity to dishonesty. It is to be assumed, bearing in mind the frequency with which the words honest and dishonest appear in the criminal law, that Parliament deliberately chose the word 'untruthful' to convey a different meaning, reflecting a defendant's account of his behaviour, or lies told when committing an offence. Previous convictions, whether for offences of dishonesty or otherwise, are therefore only likely to be capable of showing a propensity to be untruthful where . . . truthfulness is an issue and, in the earlier case, either there was a plea of not guilty and the defendant gave an account, on arrest, in interview, or in evidence, which the jury must have disbelieved, or the way in which the offence was committed shows a propensity for untruthfulness, for example, by the making of false representations: R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [13], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [13], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [13] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

6 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(1)(b). It follows that evidence of bad character will not be admissible under s 103(1)(b) where, for example, the defendant and prosecution are agreed on the facts of the alleged offence and the only question is whether on such facts all the elements of the offence have been made out.

7 Ibid s 103(2). 'In a conviction case the Crown must decide, at the time of giving notice of the application to admit such evidence, whether it proposes to rely simply upon the fact of conviction or also upon the circumstances of it. The former may be enough when the circumstances of the conviction are sufficiently apparent from its description, to justify a finding that it can establish propensity, either to commit an offence of the kind charged or to be untruthful and that the requirements of ss 103(3) and 101(3) can, subject to any particular matter raised on behalf of the defendant, be satisfied: eg, a succession of convictions for dwelling-house burglary, where the same is now charged, may well call for no further evidence than proof of the fact of the convictions. But where, as will often be the case, the Crown needs and proposes to rely on the circumstances of the previous convictions, those circumstances and the manner in which they are to be proved must be set out in the application': R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [17], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [17], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [17] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court. See also R v Humphris [2005] EWCA Crim 2030, [2005] All ER (D) 105 (Sep).

In practice, evidence of the defendant's propensity to commit offences of the kind charged will frequently not involve previous convictions at all: see eg R v N [2006] All ER (D) 314 (Mar), CA. In R v Straffen [1952] 2 QB 911, 36 Cr App Rep 132, CCA, the defendant had previously been found unfit to plead to an indictment alleging very similar offences; in R v Smith (George Joseph) (1915) 11 Cr App Rep 229, CCA and Makin v A-G for New South Wales [1894] AC 57, PC, evidence was adduced of other apparently identical offences of which the defendant had never been tried; in R v Z (prior acquittal) [2000] 2 AC 483, [2000] 3 All ER 385, HL (overruling G (an infant) v Coltart [1967] 1 QB 432, [1967] 1 All ER 271, DC) evidence was held to be admissible showing that in several previous cases apparently similar to the instant case the defendant had been acquitted of rape after running the same defence of consent on each occasion. In R v Weir [2005] EWCA Crim 2866, [2006] 2 All ER 570, [2006] 1 WLR 1855, it was held that propensity might be established by evidence of offences previously taken into consideration. Convictions or other evidence as to the commission of subsequent offences may also be relevant to show propensity at the time of the offence with which the defendant is charged: R v Adenusi [2006] EWCA Crim 1059, [2006] All ER (D) 231 (Apr).

8 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(3). 'In a conviction case, the decisions required of the trial judge under s 101(3) (see PARA 1505 ante) and s 103(3), though not identical, are closely related. The wording of s 101(3) ('must not admit') is stronger than the comparable provision in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 s 78(1) ('may refuse to allow') (see PARA 1365 ante). When considering what is just under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(3), and the fairness of the proceedings under s 101(3), the judge may, among other factors, take into consideration the degree of similarity between the previous conviction and the offence charged, albeit they are both within the same description or prescribed category. For example, theft and assault occasioning actual bodily harm may each embrace a wide spectrum of conduct. This does not however mean that what used to be referred as striking similarity must be shown before convictions become admissible. The judge may also take into consideration the respective gravity of the past and present offences. He or she must always consider the strength of the prosecution case. If there is no or very little other evidence against a defendant, it is unlikely to be just to admit his previous convictions, whatever they are': R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [10], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [10], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [10] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court. See also R v Highton [2005] EWCA Crim 1985, [2005] 1 WLR 3472, [2006] 1 Cr App Rep 125; R v Tully [2006] All ER (D) 249 (Mar), CA.

Arguably, the approach that should be adopted according to the guidance given in R v Hanson supra differs only slightly from that which was adopted at common law, under which the admissibility of similar fact evidence depended on whether its probative force was sufficiently great to make it just to admit that evidence, notwithstanding that it would be prejudicial to the defendant to show that he was guilty of committing another crime (the test adopted in DPP v P [1991] 2 AC 447, 93 Cr App Rep 267, HL; and see also O'Brien v Chief Constable of South Wales Police [2005] UKHL 26 at [76], [2005] 2 AC 534 at [76], [2005] All ER (D) 416 (Apr) at [76] per Lord Carswell). It is nevertheless clear that evidence may be admissible under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 ss 101, 103 that would not have been admissible at common law.

If there is a substantial gap between the dates of commission of and conviction for the earlier offences, the date of commission will generally be of more significance than the date of conviction when assessing admissibility. Old convictions, with no special feature shared with the offence charged, are likely seriously to affect the fairness of proceedings adversely, unless, despite their age, it can properly be said that they show a continuing propensity: R v Hanson supra at [11] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

9 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(4). The Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Categories of Offences) Order 2004, SI 2004/3346, prescribes for this purpose two categories of offences. The first is a theft category comprising: (1) an offence under the Theft Act 1968 s 1 (theft) (see PARA 282 ante); (2) an offence under s 8 (robbery) (see PARA 293 ante); (3) an offence under s 9(1)(a) (burglary) (see PARA 294 ante) if it was committed with intent to commit an offence of stealing anything in the building or part of a building in question; (4) an offence under s 9(1)(b) (burglary) (see PARA 294 ante) if the offender stole or attempted to steal anything in the building or that part of it; (5) an offence under s 10 (aggravated burglary) (see PARA 295 ante) if the offender committed a burglary of the kind described in head (3) or head (4) supra; (6) an offence under s 12 (as amended) (taking motor vehicle or other conveyance without authority) (see PARA 298 ante); (7) an offence under s 12A (as added and amended) (aggravated vehicle-taking) (see PARA 299 ante); (8) an offence under s 22 (handling stolen goods) (see PARA 302 ante); (9) an offence under s 25 (as amended) (going equipped for stealing) (see PARA 296 ante); (10) an offence under the Theft Act 1978 s 3 (as amended) (making off without payment) (see PARA 315 ante); (11) aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or inciting the commission of an offence mentioned in heads (1)-(10) supra or attempting to commit any such offence: Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Categories of Offences) Order 2004, SI 2004/3346, art 2, Schedule Pt 1.

The second is a sexual offences category comprising the following offences: (1) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 s 1 (repealed) (rape) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (2) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 1956 s 5 (repealed) (intercourse with a girl under 13); (3) an offence under s 6 (repealed) (intercourse with a girl under 16); (4) an offence under s 7 (repealed) (intercourse with a defective) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (5) an offence under s 10 (repealed) (incest by a man) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (6) an offence under s 11 (repealed) (incest by a woman) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (7) an offence under s 12 (repealed) (buggery) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (8) an offence under s 13 (repealed) (indecently between men) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (9) an offence under s 14 (repealed) (indecent assault on a woman) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (10) an offence under s 15 (repealed) (indecent assault on a man) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (11) an offence under the Mental Health Act 1959 s 128 (repealed) (sexual intercourse with patients) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (12) an offence under the Indecency with Children Act 1960 s 1 (repealed) (indecent conduct towards young child); (13) an offence under the Criminal Law Act 1977 s 54 (repealed) (inciting a girl under 16 to have incestuous sexual intercourse); (14) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Amendment) Act 2000 s 3 (repealed) (abuse of a position of trust) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (15) an offence under the Sexual Offences Act 2003 s 1 (rape) (see PARA 165 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (16) an offence under s 2 (assault by penetration) (see PARA 167 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (17) an offence under s 3 (sexual assault) (see PARA 169 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (18) an offence under s 4 (causing a person to engage in sexual activity without consent) (see PARA 171 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (19) an offence under s 5 (rape of a child under 13) (see PARA 166 ante); (20) an offence under s 6 (assault of a child under 13 by penetration) (see PARA 168 ante); (21) an offence under s 7 (sexual assault of a child under 13) (see PARA 170 ante); (22) an offence under s 8 (causing or inciting a child under 13 to engage in sexual activity) (see PARA 172 ante); (23) an offence under s 9 (sexual activity with a child) (see PARA 173 ante); (24) an offence under s 10 (causing or inciting a child to engage in sexual activity) (see PARA 174 ante); (25) an offence under s 14 if doing it will involve the commission of an offence under s 9 and s 10 (arranging or facilitating the commission of a child sex offence) (see PARA 178 ante); (26) an offence under s 16 (abuse of position of trust: sexual activity with a child) (see PARA 180 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (27) an offence under s 17 (abuse of position of trust: causing or inciting a child to engage in sexual activity) (see PARA 181 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (28) an offence under s 25 (sexual activity with a child family member) (see PARA 191 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (29) an offence under s 26 (inciting a child family member to engage in sexual activity) (see PARA 191 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (30) an offence under s 30 (sexual activity with a person with a mental disorder impeding choice) (see PARA 197 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (31) an offence under s 31 (causing or inciting a person with a mental disorder impeding choice to engage in sexual activity) (see PARA 198 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (32) an offence under s 34 (inducement, threat, or deception to procure activity with a person with a mental disorder) (see PARA 202 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (33) an offence under s 35 (causing a person with a mental disorder to engage in or agree to engage in sexual activity by inducement, threat or deception) (see PARA 203 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (34) an offence under s 38 (care workers: sexual activity with a person with a mental disorder) (see PARA 207 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (35) an offence under s 39 (care workers: causing or inciting sexual activity) (see PARA 208 ante) if it was committed in relation to a person under the age of 16; (36) aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or inciting the commission of any offence mentioned in heads (1)-(35) supra; or attempting to commit any such offence: Criminal Justice Act 2003 (Categories of Offences) Order 2004, SI 2004/3346, art 2, Schedule Pt 2.

Each category is deemed to consist of offences of the same type. 'In referring to offences of the same description or category, the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 103(2) is not exhaustive of the types of conviction which might be relied upon to show evidence of propensity to commit offences of the kind charged. Nor, however, is it necessarily sufficient, in order to show such propensity, that a conviction should be of the same description or category as that charged': R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [8], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [8], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [8] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

1507 Important matter in issue between the defendant and the prosecution

NOTE 3--Evidence of unproven allegations, including those made by co-defendants, may in appropriate cases be admissible under the 2003 Act s 101(1)(d): R v Chopra [2006] EWCA Crim 2133, [2006] All ER (D) 44 (Dec). In determining guilt in respect of any count, a jury is entitled to have regard to the evidence in regard to any other count, or any other bad character evidence, if that evidence is admissible and relevant: R v Freeman; R v Crawford [2008] EWCA Crim 1863, [2009] 2 All ER 18. For offences requiring specific intent, it may be inappropriate to admit evidence of convictions for offences lacking such a requirement: R v Bullen [2008] EWCA Crim 4, [2008] 2 Cr App Rep 364. See also R v McKenzie [2008] EWCA Crim 758, (2008) 172 JP 377 (evidence of reckless driving in trial for causing death by dangerous driving); R v O'Dowd [2009] EWCA Crim 905, (2009) 173 JP 640 (introduction of bad character evidence led to investigation of satellite issues).

NOTE 7--See R v B [2008] EWCA Crim 4, [2008] All ER (D) 85 (Jan) (previous convictions for offences of basic intent not relevant to issue of defendant's propensity to commit offence of specific intent); R v Johnson [2009] EWCA Crim 649, [2009] All ER (D) 47 (Apr) (2003 Act s 103(2) does not preclude demonstrating propensity in other ways); and R v Clements [2009] All ER (D) 261 (Nov), CA (previous conviction for sexual activity with child not admissible in trial for sexual assault).

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1508. Important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant.

1508. Important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant.

Evidence of a defendant's bad character<sup>1</sup> which is relevant only to the question whether the defendant has a propensity to be untruthful<sup>2</sup> is admissible under the Criminal Justice Act 2003<sup>3</sup> only if the nature or conduct of his defence is such as to undermine the co-defendant's defence<sup>4</sup>. Only evidence which is to be (or has been) adduced by the co-defendant, or which a witness is to be invited to give (or has given) in cross-examination by the co-defendant, is admissible under this provision<sup>5</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

2 Such evidence may also be admissible on behalf of a co-defendant in order to demonstrate the defendant's propensity to commit an offence such as the one charged, provided it has substantial probative value in that context. This was also recognised at common law. See R v Randall [2003] UKHL 69 at [22], [2004] 1 All ER 467 at [22], [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 375 at [22] per Lord Steyn: 'Postulate a joint trial involving two accused arising from an assault committed in a pub. Assume it to be clear that one of the two men committed the assault. The one man has a long list of previous convictions involving assaults in pubs. It shows him to be prone to fighting when he had consumed alcohol. The other man has an unblemished record. Relying on experience and common sense one may rhetorically ask why the propensity to violence of one man should not be deployed by the other man as part of his defence that he did not commit the assault. Surely such evidence is capable, depending on the jury's assessment of all the evidence, of making it more probable that the man with the violent disposition when he had consumed alcohol committed the assault. To rule that the jury may use the convictions in regard to his credibility but that convictions revealing his propensity to violence must otherwise be ignored is to ask the jury to put to one side their common sense and experience.' See also Lowery v R [1974] AC 85, [1973] 3 All ER 662, PC.

3 Under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(e), which states that evidence of the defendant's bad character may be admitted if it has substantial probative value in relation to an important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant: see PARA 1505 head (5) ante.

4 Ibid s 104(1). This restriction does not purport to have any application in cases such as that postulated in R v Randall [2003] UKHL 69, [2004] 1 All ER 467, [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 375 (see note 2 supra) where the evidence is admissible because of its substantial probative value on the issue of propensity to commit offences such as that charged. Nevertheless, a court or judge is not bound to admit evidence of a defendant's bad character simply because an application to admit is made by a co-defendant. See R v Edwards [2005] EWCA Crim 3244 at [1(v)], [2006] 1 WLR 1524 at [1(v)], [2006] All ER 882 at [1(v)] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court ('the gateway in the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(3) (see note 3 supra) must be gone through. In determining an application under s 101(1)(e), analysis with a fine-tooth comb is unlikely to be helpful; it is the context of the case as a whole that matters. Section 112(1) (see PARA 1505 note 7 ante) makes this clear by its definition of what amounts to an important matter in issue'). See also R v Lawson [2006] All ER (D) 116 (Aug), CA.

Whether a defendant's stance amounts to no more than a denial of participation or gives rise to an important matter in issue between a defendant and a co-defendant will inevitably turn on the facts of the individual case: R v Edwards supra at [1(vi)] per Scott Baker LJ, giving the judgment of the court. See also Murdoch v Taylor [1965] AC 574 at 592, 49 Cr App Rep 119 at 137, HL, per Lord Donovan; R v Varley [1982] 2 All ER 519, 75 Cr App Rep 242, CA. In some cases it will be impossible for a defendant to give evidence denying the offence without contradicting or undermining the defence of a co-defendant: see eg R v Davis [1975] 1 All ER 233, 60 Cr App Rep 157, CA; R v Crawford [1997] 1 WLR 1329, [1998] 1 Cr App Rep 338; R v Varley supra. Evidence which, if believed, would result in the acquittal of a co-defendant is not evidence against him, even if it is inconsistent with the defence put forward by him: R v Bruce [1975] 3 All ER 277, 61 Cr App Rep 123, CA. But where evidence does more to undermine a defence than to undermine the prosecution case, it is evidence against the co-defendant who advances the defence: R v Hatton (1976) 64 Cr App Rep 88, CA.

5 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 104(2). This does not appear to mean that the jury should be directed to ignore such evidence when considering the strength of the prosecution's case against the defendant. Such a direction might needlessly perplex the jury (see R v Randall [2003] UKHL 69 at [35], [2004] 1 All ER 467 at [35], [2004] 1 Cr App Rep 375 at [35] per Lord Steyn. Thus where at common law evidence of propensity was admitted for the sake of a co-defendant's defence, the Crown could become the beneficiary of that: R v B [2004] EWCA Crim 1254 at [56], [2004] 2 Cr App Rep 570 at [56], [2004] All ER (D) 268 (May) at [56] per Rix LJ, giving the judgment of the court. There is nothing to suggest that the Criminal Justice Act 2003 changes this principle.

1508 Important matter in issue between the defendant and a co-defendant

NOTE 4--Lawson, cited, reported at [2006] EWCA Crim 2572, [2007] 1 WLR 1191.

Halsbury's Laws of England/CRIMINAL LAW, EVIDENCE AND PROCEDURE (VOLUME 11(1) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1-620; VOLUME 11(2) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 621-1049; VOLUME 11(3) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1050-1557; VOLUME 11(4) (2006 REISSUE) PARAS 1558-2180)/20.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1509. Evidence to correct a false impression given by the defendant.

1509. Evidence to correct a false impression given by the defendant.

Evidence of a defendant's bad character<sup>1</sup> is admissible for the purpose of correcting a false impression given by the defendant<sup>2</sup> only when adduced by the prosecution<sup>3</sup>. A defendant gives a false impression if he is responsible for the making of an express or implied assertion which is apt to give the court or jury a false or misleading impression about the defendant; and evidence to correct such an impression is evidence which has probative value in correcting it<sup>4</sup>.

A defendant is treated as being responsible for the making of an assertion if: (1) the assertion is made by the defendant in the proceedings (whether or not in evidence given by him); (2) the assertion was made by the defendant: (a) on being questioned under caution, before charge, about the offence with which he is charged; or (b) on being charged with the offence or officially informed that he might be prosecuted for it, and evidence of the assertion is given in the proceedings; (3) the assertion is made by a witness called by the defendant; (4) the assertion is made by any witness in cross-examination in response to a question asked by the defendant that is intended to elicit it, or is likely to do so; or (5) the assertion was made by any person out of court, and the defendant adduces evidence of it in the proceedings<sup>5</sup>.

A defendant who would otherwise be treated as responsible for the making of an assertion is not to be so treated if, or to the extent that, he withdraws it or disassociates himself from it<sup>6</sup>.

Where it appears to the court that a defendant, by means of his conduct (other than the giving of evidence) in the proceedings, is seeking to give the court or jury an impression about himself that is false or misleading, the court may if it appears just to do so treat the defendant as being responsible for the making of an assertion which is apt to give that impression<sup>7</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

2 Ie under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(f): see PARA 1505 head (6) ante. Evidence is admissible under s 101(1)(f) only if it goes no further than is necessary to correct the false impression: s 105(6).

3 Ibid s 105(7).

4 Ibid s 105(1). Whether a true assertion is nevertheless misleading may depend on all the facts. Section 101(1)(f) and s 105 do not appear to adopt the common law principle that 'character is not severable' (see R v Winfield [1939] 4 All ER 164, 27 Cr App Rep 139, CCA) and so it may be possible for a defendant to stress good aspects of his character without purporting to make any claims to good character overall (eg 'I have been in trouble once or twice before, but never for anything of this kind'). Contrast R v Marsh [1994] Crim LR 52, CA, where the defendant's proposed assertion was true but misleading (he was charged with causing grievous bodily harm to an opponent during a rugby match, and wished to assert his clean criminal record; but the judge correctly ruled that this would expose him to cross-examination concerning his poor disciplinary record for violence in previous rugby matches).

5 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 105(2).

6 Ibid s 105(3). Where, for example, the defendant made false or misleading claims as to his character when questioned by the police, it may be advisable for him to dissociate himself from them at the trial, rather than wait for the prosecution to contradict them in detail. If he is prepared to do this, it may not be necessary for the court or jury to learn that he made the assertions at all. The problem is more acute in a case such as R v Redd [1923] 1 KB 104, 17 Cr App Rep 36, CCA, where a defence witness blurts out an unsolicited and misleading assertion concerning the defendant's character. In such a case, the defendant may have little choice but to dissociate himself from the assertion in open court.

There is a significant difference between the defendant who makes a specific and positive decision to correct a false impression for which he is responsible, or to disassociate himself with false impressions conveyed by the assertions of others, and the defendant who in the process of cross-examination is obliged to concede that he has been misleading the jury. A concession extracted in cross-examination that the defendant was not telling the truth in part of his examination in chief will not normally amount to a withdrawal or disassociation from the original assertion for the purposes of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 105(3): R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826 at [21], [2006] 2 All ER 553 at [21] per Sir Igor Judge P, giving the judgment of the court.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1510. Attack by defendant on another person's character.

1510. Attack by defendant on another person's character.

Evidence of a defendant's bad character<sup>1</sup> is admissible as a response to an attack on another person's character<sup>2</sup> only when adduced by the prosecution<sup>3</sup>. A defendant makes an attack on another person's character if: (1) he adduces evidence attacking the other person's character<sup>4</sup>; (2) he (or any legal representative appointed to cross-examine a witness in his interests<sup>5</sup>) asks questions in cross-examination that are intended to elicit such evidence, or are likely to do so<sup>6</sup>; or (3) evidence is given of an imputation about the other person made by the defendant: (a) on being questioned under caution, before charge, about the offence with which he is charged; or (b) on being charged with the offence or officially informed that he might be prosecuted for it<sup>7</sup>.

Evidence admitted on this basis is not necessarily relevant only to the defendant's credibility. It may (depending on the facts and circumstances) also be relevant to the issue of propensity<sup>8</sup>.

The court must not admit evidence of the defendant's bad character in response to his attack on another person's character, if, on an application by the defendant to exclude it, it appears to the court that the admission of the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that the court ought not to admit it<sup>9</sup>.

1 As to the meaning of 'bad character' see PARA 1503 ante.

2 It is admissible evidence under the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(g): see PARA 1505 head (7) ante.

3 Ibid s 106(3). Where a co-defendant's character has been attacked by the defendant, the co-defendant may, however, have recourse in some cases to s 101(1)(e): see PARA 1508 ante.

4 Ibid s 106(1)(a). 'Evidence attacking the other person's character' means evidence to the effect that the other person: (1) has committed an offence (whether a different offence from the one with which the defendant is charged or the same one); or (2) has behaved, or is disposed to behave, in a reprehensible way; and 'imputation about the other person' means an assertion to that effect: s 106(2).

Authorities predating the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 will continue to apply when assessing whether an attack has been made on another person's character, to the extent that they are compatible with s 106: R v Hanson [2005] EWCA Crim 824 at [14], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 299 at [14], [2005] All ER (D) 380 (Mar) at [14] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court. Such authorities are cases decided under the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 s 1(f)(ii) (renumbered as s 1(3)(ii); and repealed). This provision applied only where the nature and character of the defence case involved imputations on the character of prosecution witnesses or on the deceased victim of the alleged crime and could be invoked only through cross-examination of a defendant who had testified in his own defence.

Authorities that may be relevant to the question whether an attack has been made on another person include R v Jenkins (1945) 31 Cr App Rep 1, CCA (allegation of infidelity and other immoral conduct against married woman held to involve imputations on her character); R v Britzman [1983] 1 All ER 369, 76 Cr App Rep 134, CA, (allegation that police officers had invented admissions held to amount to an imputation); R v Hudson [1912] 2 KB 464, 7 Cr App Rep 256, CCA (assertion that prosecution witness was the real offender, also an imputation). Contrast R v McLean [1978] Crim LR 430, CA (allegation of drunkenness not an attack on character).

Where the defence in question amounted to no more than a denial of the charge, albeit one expressed in emphatic language, this was held not to amount to an imputation on any prosecution witness under the Criminal Evidence Act 1898: Selvey v DPP [1970] AC 304 at 339, 52 Cr App Rep 443 at 465, HL, per Viscount Dilhorne; R v Rimarczy [2005] EWCA Crim 1834, [2005] All ER (D) 324 (Jun). Thus it was not an imputation where the defendant merely stated that the evidence of the complainant was a lie: R v Rouse [1904] 1 KB 184, 3 Cr App Rep 64, CCA; R v Grout, R v Jones (1909) 74 JP 30, 3 Cr App Rep 64, CCA; R v Parker (1924) 18 Cr App Rep 14, CCA. See also R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826 at [34], [2006] 2 All ER 553 at [34] per Sir Igor Judge

P, giving the judgment of the court, in which a similar approach appears to have been adopted under the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

Nor under the old law was it considered an imputation in a case of alleged rape merely to assert that the complainant consented to sexual intercourse: R v Sheean (1908) 21 Cox CC 561, CCA; R v Turner [1944] KB 463, 30 Cr App Rep 9, CCA; Selvey v DPP supra. In R v Renda supra the court appears to have adopted a similar approach under the Criminal Justice Act 2003.

However, under the old law it was considered to be an imputation to suggest discreditable reasons for the witness or complainant to give false evidence: R v Manley (1962) 46 Cr App Rep 235, CCA. See also R v Rappolt (1911) 6 Cr App Rep 156, CCA; R v Clark [1955] 2 QB 469, 39 Cr App Rep 120, CCA; R v St Louis and Case (1984) 79 Cr App Rep 53, CA.

The purpose of the defence in making an imputation was held to be irrelevant under the old law. In particular, the fact that it may have been necessary to make a discreditable assertion about a prosecution witness in order to put the defence case did not prevent it being an imputation: R v Bishop [1975] QB 274, [1974] 2 All ER 1206; R v Burke (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 156, [1985] Crim LR 660, CA; R v Powell [1986] 1 All ER 193, 82 Cr App Rep 165, CA; R v Hudson supra; Selvey v DPP supra. In R v Bishop supra an allegation of a homosexual relationship with the victim of an alleged burglary was held to involve imputations on character, even though adduced only to account for the defendant's fingerprints being found within the property; but it is questionable whether an allegation of homosexuality would still be seen as an attack on character.

7 Ibid s 106(1)(c). See R v Renda [2005] EWCA Crim 2826, [2006] 2 All ER 553.

8 R v Highton [2005] EWCA Crim 1985, [2005] 1 WLR 3472, [2006] Crim LR 52. However, this depends on the circumstances: R v M [2006] All ER (D) 472 (Mar), CA; see also R v George [2006] All ER (D) 71 (Jun), CA.

9 Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(3). Where a defendant has given an answer in evidence making an attack on another person's character such that the gateway under s 101(1)(g) (see PARA 1505 head (7) ante) might be open, it cannot have been Parliament's intention that, in order to assess any 'adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings' for the purposes of s 101(3), a trial judge should conduct some investigation as to why the defendant had given the answer he did. The impact on the fairness of the proceedings has to be assessed by reference to matters other than what the defendant's particular intention might have been: see R v Bovell; R v Dowds [2005] EWCA Crim 1091 at [32], [2005] 2 Cr App Rep 27 at [32], [2005] All ER (D) 349 (Apr) at [32] per Rose LJ, giving the judgment of the court.

Under the 'tit-for-tat' provisions of the Criminal Evidence Act 1898 s 1(3)(ii) (now replaced by the Criminal Justice Act 2003 s 101(1)(g) (see PARA 1505 head (7) ante)) the courts were prepared only in limited circumstances to exercise a comparable discretion to safeguard the defendant's shield against cross-examination on his bad character following imputations made against the prosecutor or prosecution witnesses. The following guidelines were laid down by the Court of Appeal in R v Burke (1985) 82 Cr App Rep 156, CA, and later approved in R v Powell [1986] 1 All ER 193, 82 Cr App Rep 165, CA:

123 (1) The trial judge must weigh the prejudicial effect of the questions against the damage done by the attack on the prosecution's witnesses, and must generally exercise his discretion so as to secure a trial that is fair both to the prosecution and the defence.

124 (2) Cases must occur in which it would be unjust to admit evidence of a character gravely prejudicial to the defendant, even though there may be some tenuous grounds for holding it technically admissible. Thus, although the position is established in law, still the putting of the questions as to character of the defendant person may be fraught with results which immeasurably outweigh the result of questions put by the defence and which make a fair trial of the defendant almost impossible.

125 (3) In the ordinary and normal case, the trial judge may feel that if the credit of the prosecutor or his witnesses has been attacked it is only fair that the jury should have before them material on which they can form their judgment whether the defendant person is any more worthy to be believed than those he has attacked. It is obviously unfair that the jury should be left in the dark about a defendant person's character if the conduct of his defence has attacked the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution within the meaning of the section.

126 (4) In order to see if the conviction should be quashed, it is not enough that the court thinks it would have exercised its discretion differently. The court will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion by a judge below unless he has erred in principle or there is no material on which he could properly have arrived at his decision.

EVIDENCE/(16) EVIDENCE OF GOOD OR BAD CHARACTER/1511. Evidence of bad character: credibility and contamination.

1511. Evidence of bad character: credibility and contamination.

It is not ordinarily the task of a trial judge to determine whether evidence should be believed<sup>1</sup>, and where a court or judge is required to rule on the admissibility of evidence of bad character<sup>2</sup> the relevance or probative value of that evidence must ordinarily be assessed on the assumption that it is true<sup>3</sup>. However, a court need not assume that the evidence is true if it appears, on the basis of any material before the court (including any evidence it decides to hear on the matter), that no court or jury could reasonably find it to be true<sup>4</sup>.

Where at a trial before a judge and jury evidence of a defendant's bad character has been admitted under the Criminal Justice Act 2003<sup>5</sup> (other than by the defendant himself or with his agreement) and the court is satisfied at any time after the close of the case for the prosecution that: (1) the evidence is contaminated<sup>6</sup>; and (2) the contamination is such that, considering the importance of the evidence to the case against the defendant, his conviction of the offence would be unsafe, the court must either direct the jury to acquit the defendant of the offence or, if it considers that there ought to be a re-trial, discharge the jury<sup>7</sup>. Evidence of a defendant's bad character is contaminated for this purpose if: (a) as a result of an agreement or understanding between the witness in question and one or more others; or (b) as a result of that witness being aware of anything alleged by one or more others whose evidence may be, or has been, given in the proceedings, the evidence is false or misleading in any respect, or is different from what it would otherwise have been<sup>8</sup>.

The provisions set out above do not prejudice any other power a court may have to direct a jury to acquit a person of an offence or to discharge a jury<sup>9</sup>.
